Pardon me, Cæsar; for my dear dear love
To your proceeding bids me tell you this;
And reason to my love is liable.

Cæs. How foolish do your fears seem now,
Calpurnia! 105

I am ashamed I did yield to them.
Give me my robe, for I will go.

Enter PUBLIUS, BRUTUS, LIGARIUS, METEL-
LUS, CASCA, TREBONIUS, and CINNA.

And look where Publius is come to fetch me.

Pub. Good morrow, Cæsar. 110
Cæs. Welcome, Publius.

What, Brutus, are you stirr'd so early too?
Good morrow, Casca. Caius Ligarius,
Cæsar was ne'er so much your enemy
As that same ague which hath made you lean.
What is 't o'clock?

Br. Cæsar, 't is stricken eight.
Cæs. I thank you for your pains and courtesy.

Enter ANTONY.

See! Antony, that revels long o' nights, 115
Is notwithstanding up. Good morrow, Antony.

Ant. So to most noble Cæsar.
Cæs. Bid them prepare within;

I am to blame to be thus waited for.
Now, Cinna; now, Metellus; what, Trebonius!
I have an hour's talk in store for you; 121
Remember that you call on me to-day.

Be near me, that I may remember you.
Treb. Cæsar, I will; [aside] and so near will I be,

That your best friends shall wish I had been further. 125

Cæs. Good friends, go in, and taste some wine with me;
And we, like friends, will straightway go together.

Br. [Aside.] That every like is not the same, O Cæsar,
The heart of Brutus yearns to think upon!
[Exeunt.]

[SCENE III. A street near the Capitol.]

Enter ARTEMIDORUS [reading a paper].

Art. "Cæsar, beware of Brutus; take heed of Cassius; come not near Casca; have an eye to Cinna; trust not Trebonius; mark well Metellus Cimber: Decius Brutus loves thee not; thou hast wrong'd Caius Ligarius. There is [s but one mind in all these men, and it is bent against Cæsar. If thou beest not immortal, look about you; security gives way to conspiracy.
The mighty gods defend thee! Thy lover,
ARTEMIDORUS." 10

Here will I stand till Cæsar pass along,
And as a suitor will I give him this.
My heart laments that virtue cannot live
Out of the teeth of emulation.
If thou read this, O Cæsar, thou mayst live; [s
If not, the Fates with traitors do contrive.
[Exit.]

[SCENE IV. Another part of the same street, before the house of Brutus.]

Enter PORTIA and LUCIUS.

Por. I prithee, boy, run to the senate-house;
Stay not to answer me, but get thee gone.
Why dost thou stay?

Luc. To know my errand, madam.
Por. I would have had thee there, and here
again,

Ere I can tell thee what thou shouldst do there.
O constancy, be strong upon my side.
Set a huge mountain 'tween my heart and
tongue!

I have a man's mind, but a woman's might.
How hard it is for women to keep counsel!
Art thou here yet?

Luc. Madam, what should I do?
Run to the Capitol, and nothing else? 11
And so return to you, and nothing else?

Por. Yes, bring me word, boy, if thy lord look well,

For he went sickly forth; and take good note
What Cæsar doth, what suitors press to him. 15
Hark, boy! what noise is that?

Luc. I hear none, madam.
Por. Prithee, listen well;

I heard a bustling rumour, like a fray,
And the wind brings it from the Capitol.

Luc. Sooth, madam, I hear nothing. 20

Enter the SOOTHSAYER.

Por. Come hither, fellow; which way hast thou been?

Sooth. At mine own house, good lady.
Por. What is 't o'clock?

Sooth. About the ninth hour, lady.

Por. Is Cæsar yet gone to the Capitol?
Sooth. Madam, not yet; I go to take my stand, 25

To see him pass on to the Capitol.

Por. Thou hast some suit to Cæsar, hast thou not?

Sooth. That I have, lady; if it will please Cæsar

To be so good to Cæsar as to hear me,
 I shall beseech him to befriend himself. 30

Por. Why, know'st thou any harm's intended towards him?

Sooth. None that I know will be, much that I fear may chance.

Good morrow to you. Here the street is narrow;

The throng that follows Cæsar at the heels,
 Of senators, of prætors, common suitors, 35
 Will crowd a feeble man almost to death.
 I'll get me to a place more void, and there
 Speak to great Cæsar as he comes along.

Por. I must go in. Ay me, how weak a thing

The heart of woman is! O Brutus, 40
 The heavens speed thee in thine enterprise!

[To herself.] Sure, the boy heard me. [To Lucius.] Brutus hath a suit

That Cæsar will not grant. O, I grow faint.
 Run, Lucius, and commend me to my lord;

Say I am merry. Come to me again, 45
 And bring me word what he doth say to thee.

[Exeunt severally.]

ACT III

[SCENE I. Rome. Before the Capitol.]

[A crowd of people; among them] ARTEMIDORUS and the SOOTHSAYER. Flourish. Enter CÆSAR, BRUTUS, CASSIUS, CASCA, DECIVS, METELLUS, TREBONIUS, CINNA, ANTONY, LEPIDUS, PUBLIUS [and POPILIUS].

Cæs. [To the Soothsayer.] The ides of March are come.

Sooth. Ay, Cæsar; but not gone.

Art. Hail, Cæsar! read this schedule.

Dec. Trebonius doth desire you to o'er-read,
 At your best leisure, this his humble suit. 5

Art. O Cæsar, read mine first; for mine's a suit

That touches Cæsar nearer. Read it, great Cæsar.

Cæs. What touches us ourself shall be last serv'd.

Art. Delay not, Cæsar; read it instantly.

Cæs. What, is the fellow mad?

Pub. Sirrah, give place.

Cæs. What, urge you your petitions in the street? 11

Come to the Capitol.

[Cæsar goes up to the Senate-House, the rest following.]

Pop. I wish your enterprise to-day may thrive.

Cæs. What enterprise, Popilius?

Pop. Fare you well. [Advances to Cæsar.]

Bru. What said Popilius Lena? 15

Cæs. He wish'd to-day our enterprise might thrive.

I fear our purpose is discovered.

Bru. Look, how he makes to Cæsar; mark him.

Cæs. Casca, be sudden, for we fear prevention.

Brutus, what shall be done? If this be known, Cassius or Cæsar never shall turn back, 21

For I will slay myself.

Bru. Cassius, be constant; Popilius Lena speaks not of our purposes.

For, look, he smiles, and Cæsar doth not change.

Cæs. Trebonius knows his time; for, look you, Brutus, 25

He draws Mark Antony out of the way. [Exeunt Antony and Trebonius.]

Dec. Where is Metellus Cimber? Let him go And presently prefer his suit to Cæsar.

Bru. He is address'd; press near and second him.

Cin. Casca, you are the first that rears your hand. 30

Cæs. Are we all ready? What is now amiss That Cæsar and his senate must redress?

Met. Most high, most mighty, and most puissant Cæsar,

Metellus Cimber throws before thy seat An humble heart, — [Kneeling.]

Cæs. I must prevent thee, Cimber. These couchings and these lowly curtesies 35

Might fire the blood of ordinary men, And turn pre-ordnance and first decree

Into the law of children. Be not fond To think that Cæsar bears such rebel blood 40

That will be thaw'd from the true quality With that which melteth fools; I mean, sweet words,

Low-crooked curtsies and base spaniel-fawning. Thy brother by decree is banished;

If thou dost bend and pray and fawn for him, I spurn thee like a cur out of my way. 45

Know, Cæsar doth not wrong, nor without cause

Will he be satisfied.

Met. Is there no voice more worthy than my own,

To sound more sweetly in great Cæsar's ear 50 For the repealing of my banish'd brother?

Bru. I kiss thy hand, but not in flattery, Cæsar;

Desiring thee that Publius Cimber may Have an immediate freedom of repeal.

Cæs. What, Brutus!

Cæs. Pardon, Cæsar; Cæsar, pardon! As low as to thy foot doth Cassius fall, 55

To beg enfranchisement for Publius Cimber.

Cæs. I could be well mov'd, if I were as you; If I could pray to move, prayers would move me;

But I am constant as the northern star, 60 Of whose true-fix'd and resting quality

There is no fellow in the firmament. The skies are painted with unnumb'red sparks,

They are all fire and every one doth shine ; 64
But there's but one in all doth hold his place.
So in the world ; 't is furnish'd well with men,
And men are flesh and blood, and apprehensive ;

Yet in the number I do know but one
That unassailable holds on his rank,
Unshak'd of motion ; and that I am he, 70
Let me a little show it, even in this :
That I was constant Cimber should be ban-ish'd,
And constant do remain to keep him so.

Cin. O Cæsar, —

Cæs. Hence ! wilt thou lift up Olympus ?

Dec. Great Cæsar, —

Cæs. Doth not Brutus bootless kneel ?

Casca. Speak, hands, for me ! 76

[They stab Cæsar.]

Cæs. Et tu Brute ! Then fall, Cæsar !

[Dies.]

Cin. Liberty ! Freedom ! Tyranny is dead !
Run hence, proclaim, cry it about the streets.

Cas. Some to the common pulpits, and cry
out, 80

" Liberty, freedom, and enfranchisement ! "

Bru. People and senators, be not affrighted ;
Fly not ; stand still ; ambition's debt is paid.

Casca. Go to the pulpit, Brutus.

Dec. And Cassius too.

Bru. Where's Publius ? 86

Cin. Here, quite confounded with this mutiny.

Met. Stand fast together, lest some friend of Cæsar's

Should chance —

Bru. Talk not of standing. Publius, good cheer ;

There is no harm intended to your person, 90
Nor to no Roman else. So tell them, Publius.

Cas. And leave us, Publius ; lest that the people,

Rushing on us, should do your age some mischief.

Bru. Do so : and let no man abide this deed,
But we the doers.

Re-enter TREBONIUS.

Cas. Where is Antony ? 96

Treb. Fled to his house amaz'd.

Men, wives, and children stare, cry out, and run,

As it were doomsday.

Bru. Fates, we will know your pleasures.
That we shall die, we know ; 't is but the time
And drawing days out, that men stand upon.

Cas. Why, he that cuts off twenty years of life 101

Cuts off so many years of fearing death.

Bru. Grant that, and then is death a benefit ;
So are we Cæsar's friends, that have abridg'd
His time of fearing death. Stoop, Romans, stoop, 106

And let us bathe our hands in Cæsar's blood
Up to the elbows, and besmear our swords ;
Then walk we forth, even to the market-place,
And, waving our red weapons o'er our heads,
Let's all cry, " Peace, freedom, and liberty ! "

Cas. Stoop, then, and wash. How many ages
hence 111

Shall this our lofty scene be acted over
In states unborn and accents yet unknown !

Bru. How many times shall Cæsar bleed in sport,

That now on Pompey's basis lies along 116
No worthier than the dust !

Cas. So oft as that shall be,
So often shall the knot of us be call'd

The men that gave their country liberty.

Dec. What, shall we forth ?

Cas. Ay, every man away.

Brutus shall lead ; and we will grace his heels
With the most boldest and best hearts of Rome. 121

Enter a SERVANT.

Bru. Soft ! who comes here ? A friend of Antony's.

Serv. Thus, Brutus, did my master bid me kneel.

Thus did Mark Antony bid me fall down ;
And, being prostrate, thus he bade me say : 126

Brutus is noble, wise, valiant, and honest ;
Cæsar was mighty, bold, royal, and loving ;

Say I love Brutus, and I honour him ;
Say I fear'd Cæsar, honour'd him, and lov'd
him.

If Brutus will vouchsafe that Antony 130
May safely come to him, and be resolv'd

How Cæsar hath deserv'd to lie in death,
Mark Antony shall not love Cæsar dead

So well as Brutus living ; but will follow
The fortunes and affairs of noble Brutus 135

Thorough the hazards of this untrod state
With all true faith. So says my master Antony.

Bru. Thy master is a wise and valiant Roman ;

I never thought him worse.
Tell him, so please him come unto this place,

He shall be satisfied ; and, by my honour, 141
Depart untouch'd.

Serv. I'll fetch him presently. [Exit.]

Bru. I know that we shall have him well to friend.

Cas. I wish we may ; but yet have I a mind
That fears him much, and my misgiving still

Falls shrewdly to the purpose. 146

Re-enter ANTONY.

Bru. But here comes Antony. Welcome,
Mark Antony !

Ant. O mighty Cæsar ! dost thou lie so low ?
Are all thy conquests, glories, triumphs, spoils,

Shrunk to this little measure ? Fare thee well !
I know not, gentlemen, what you intend, 151

Who else must be let blood, who else is rank ;
If I myself, there is no hour so fit

As Cæsar's death's hour, nor no instrument
Of half that worth as those your swords, made rich 156

With the most noble blood of all this world.
I do beseech ye, if you bear me hard,

Now, whilst your purpled hands do reek and smoke,

Fulfil your pleasure. Live a thousand years,
I shall not find myself so apt to die; 160
No place will please me so, no mean of death,
As here by Cæsar, and by you cut off,
The choice and master spirits of this age.

Bru. O Antony, beg not your death of us.
Though now we must appear bloody and cruel,
As, by our hands and this our present act, 166
You see we do, yet see you but our hands
And this the bleeding business they have done.
Our hearts you see not; they are pitiful;
And pity to the general wrong of Rome — 170
As fire drives out fire, so pity pity —
Hath done this deed on Cæsar. For your part,
To you our swords have leaden points, Mark
Antony;

Our arms, in strength of malice, and our hearts
Of brothers' temper, do receive you in 175
With all kind love, good thoughts, and reverence.

Cas. Your voice shall be as strong as any man's

In the disposing of new dignities.

Bru. Only be patient till we have appeas'd
The multitude, beside themselves with fear, 180
And then we will deliver you the cause
Why I, that did love Cæsar when I struck him,
Have thus proceeded.

Ant. I doubt not of your wisdom.
Let each man render me his bloody hand.
First, Marcus Brutus, will I shake with you; 185
Next, Caius Cassius, do I take your hand;
Now, Decius Brutus, yours; now yours, Metel-lus;

Yours, Cinna; and, my valiant Casca, yours;
Though last, not least in love, yours, good Trebonius.

Gentlemen all, — alas, what shall I say? 190
My credit now stands on such slippery ground
That one of two bad ways you must conceit me,
Either a coward or a flatterer.

That I did love thee, Cæsar, O, 't is true;
If then thy spirit look upon us now, 195
Shall it not grieve thee dearer than thy death,
To see thy Antony making his peace,
Shaking the bloody fingers of thy foes,
Most noble! in the presence of thy corpse?
Had I as many eyes as thou hast wounds, 200
Weeping as fast as they stream forth thy blood,
It would become me better than to close
In terms of friendship with thine enemies.
Pardon me, Julius! Here wast thou bay'd, brave hart;

Here didst thou fall; and here thy hunters
stand, 205

Sign'd in thy spoil, and crimson'd in thy lethe.
O world, thou wast the forest to this hart;
And this, indeed, O world, the heart of thee.
How like a deer, stricken by many princes,
Dost thou here lie! 210

Cas. Mark Antony, —

Ant. Pardon me, Caius Cassius!
The enemies of Cæsar shall say this;
Then, in a friend, it is cold modesty.

Cas. I blame you not for praising Cæsar so;
But what compact mean you to have with
us? 215

Will you be prick'd in number of our friends;
Or shall we on, and not depend on you?

Ant. Therefore I took your hands, but was,
indeed,
Sway'd from the point, by looking down on Cæsar.

Friends am I with you all and love you all, 220
Upon this hope, that you shall give me reasons
Why and wherein Cæsar was dangerous.

Bru. Or else were this a savage spectacle.
Our reasons are so full of good regard
That were you, Antony, the son of Cæsar, 225
You should be satisfied.

Ant. That's all I seek;
And am, moreover, suitor that I may Produce his body to the market-place;
And in the pulpit, as becomes a friend,
Speak in the order of his funeral. 230

Bru. You shall, Mark Antony.

Cas. Brutus, a word with you.
[Aside to Bru.] You know not what you do.

Do not consent
That Antony speak in his funeral.
Know you how much the people may be mov'd
By that which he will utter?

Bru. By your pardon.
I will myself into the pulpit first, 236
And show the reason of our Cæsar's death.

What Antony shall speak, I will protest
He speaks by leave and by permission, 240
And that we are contented Cæsar shall
Have all true rites and lawful ceremonies.
It shall advantage more than do us wrong.

Cas. I know not what may fall; I like it not.

Bru. Mark Antony, here, take you Cæsar's body.

You shall not in your funeral speech blame
us, 245

But speak all good you can devise of Cæsar,
And say you do't by our permission;
Else shall you not have any hand at all
About his funeral. And you shall speak
In the same pulpit whereto I am going, 250
After my speech is ended.

Ant. Be it so;

I do desire no more.

Bru. Prepare the body then, and follow us.
[Eæunt all but Antony.]

Ant. O, pardon me, thou bleeding piece of earth,
That I am meek and gentle with these butchers! 255

Thou art the ruins of the noblest man
That ever lived in the tide of times.
Wee to the hand that shed this costly blood!
Over thy wounds now do I prophesy,
Which, like dumb mouths, do ope their ruby lips, 260

To beg the voice and utterance of my tongue:
A curse shall light upon the limbs of men;
Domestic fury and fierce civil strife
Shall cumber all the parts of Italy;
Blood and destruction shall be so in use 265
And dreadful objects so familiar
That mothers shall but smile when they behold
Their infants quartered with the hands of war;
All pity chok'd with custom of fell deeds;

And Cæsar's spirit, ranging for revenge, 270
 With Ate by his side come hot from hell,
 Shall in these confines with a monarch's voice
 Cry "Havoc," and let slip the dogs of war;
 That this foul deed shall smell above the earth
 With carrion men, groaning for burial. 275

Enter Octavius' SERVANT.

You serve Octavius Cæsar, do you not?

Serv. I do, Mark Antony.

Ant. Cæsar did write for him to come to Rome.

Serv. He did receive his letters, and is coming;

And bid me say to you by word of mouth — 280
 O Cæsar! — [Seeing the body.]

Ant. Thy heart is big; get thee apart and weep.

Passion, I see, is catching; for mine eyes,
 Seeing those beads of sorrow stand in thine,
 Began to water. Is thy master coming? 285

Serv. He lies to-night within seven leagues of Rome.

Ant. Post back with speed and tell him what hath chanc'd.

Here is a mourning Rome, a dangerous Rome,
 No Rome of safety for Octavius yet; 290
 Hie hence, and tell him so. Yet, stay a while;
 Thou shalt not back till I have borne this corpse
 Into the market-place. There shall I try,
 In my oration, how the people take
 The cruel issue of these bloody men;
 According to the which, thou shalt discourse 295
 To young Octavius of the state of things.
 Lend me your hand.

[Exeunt [with Cæsar's body].]

[SCENE II. The Forum.]

Enter BRUTUS and CASSIUS, with the PLEBEIANS.

Pleb. We will be satisfied! Let us be satisfied!

Bru. Then follow me, and give me audience, friends.

Cassius, go you into the other street,
 And part the numbers.
 Those that will hear me speak, let 'em stay here;
 Those that will follow Cassius, go with him; 300
 And public reasons shall be rendered
 Of Cæsar's death.

1. Pleb. I will hear Brutus speak.

2. Pleb. I will hear Cassius; and compare their reasons,

When severally we hear them rendered. 310

[Exit Cassius, with some of the Plebeians.] Brutus goes into the pulpit.

3. Pleb. The noble Brutus is ascended; silence!

Bru. Be patient till the last.

Romans, countrymen, and lovers! hear me for my cause, and be silent, that you may hear; believe me for mine honour, and have respect to mine honour, that you may believe; be sure me in your wisdom, and awake your senses, that you may the better judge. If there be any in this assembly, any dear friend of Cæsar's, to him I say, that Brutus' love to Cæsar was no less than his. If then that friend demand 320 why Brutus rose against Cæsar, this is my answer: Not that I lov'd Cæsar less, but that I lov'd Rome more. Had you rather Cæsar were living and die all slaves, than that Cæsar were dead, to live all freemen? As Cæsar lov'd 325 me, I weep for him; as he was fortunate, I rejoice at it; as he was valiant, I honour him; but, as he was ambitious, I slew him. There is tears for his love; joy for his fortune; honour for his valour; and death for his ambition. 330 Who is here so base that would be a bondman? If any, speak; for him have I offended. Who is here so rude that would not be a Roman? If any, speak; for him have I offended. Who is here so vile that will not love his country? If any, speak; for him have I offended. I pause for a reply. 337

All. None, Brutus, none.

Bru. Then none have I offended. I have done no more to Cæsar than you shall do to Brutus: The question of his death is enroll'd in the Capitol; his glory not extenuated, wherein he was worthy, nor his offences enforc'd, for which he suffered death. 344

Enter ANTONY [and others], with Cæsar's body.

Here comes his body, mourn'd by Mark Antony; who, though he had no hand in his death, shall receive the benefit of his dying, a place in the commonwealth; as which of you shall not? With this I depart, that, as I slew my best lover for the good of Rome, I have the same dagger for myself, when it shall please my country to need my death. 350

All. Live, Brutus! live, live!

1. Pleb. Bring him with triumph home unto his house.

2. Pleb. Give him a statue with his ancestors. 355

3. Pleb. Let him be Cæsar.

4. Pleb. Cæsar's better parts shall be crown'd in Brutus.

1. Pleb. We'll bring him to his house With shouts and clamours.

Bru. My countrymen, —

2. Pleb. Peace, silence! Brutus speaks.

1. Pleb. Peace, ho!

Bru. Good countrymen, let me depart alone, And, for my sake, stay here with Antony. 361 Do grace to Cæsar's corpse, and grace his speech

Tending to Cæsar's glories, which Mark Antony, By our permission, is allow'd to make. I do entreat you, not a man depart 365

Save I alone, till Antony have spoke. [Exit.]

1. Pleb. Stay, ho! and let us hear Mark Antony.

3. Pleb. Let him go up into the public chair; We'll hear him. Noble Antony, go up.

Ant. For Brutus' sake, I am beholding to you. [Goes into the pulpit.] 370

4. Pleb. What does he say of Brutus?

3. Pleb. He says, for Brutus' sake, He finds himself beholding to us all.

4. Pleb. 'T were best he speak no harm of Brutus here.

1. Pleb. This Cæsar was a tyrant.

3. Pleb. Nay, that's certain: We are blest that Rome is rid of him. 75

2. Pleb. Peace! let us hear what Antony can say.

Ant. You gentle Romans, —

All. Peace, ho! let us hear him.

Ant. Friends, Romans, countrymen, lend me your ears!

I come to bury Cæsar, not to praise him.

The evil that men do lives after them, 80

The good is oft interred with their bones;

So let it be with Cæsar. The noble Brutus

Hath told you Cæsar was ambitious;

If it were so, it was a grievous fault,

And grievously hath Cæsar answer'd it. 85

Here, under leave of Brutus and the rest —

For Brutus is an honourable man;

So are they all, all honourable men —

Come I to speak in Cæsar's funeral.

He was my friend, faithful and just to me; 90

But Brutus says he was ambitious,

And Brutus is an honourable man.

He hath brought many captives home to Rome,

Whose ransoms did the general coffers fill;

Did this in Cæsar seem ambitious? 95

When that the poor have cried, Cæsar hath wept;

Ambition should be made of sterner stuff:

Yet Brutus says he was ambitious,

And Brutus is an honourable man.

You all did see that on the Lupercal 100

I thrice presented him a kingly crown,

Which he did thrice refuse. Was this ambition?

Yet Brutus says he was ambitious,

And, sure, he is an honourable man.

I speak not to disprove what Brutus spoke, 105

But here I am to speak what I do know.

You all did love him once, not without cause;

What cause withholds you then to mourn for him?

O judgement! thou art fled to brutish beasts,

And men have lost their reason. Bear with me;

My heart is in the coffin there with Cæsar, 111

And I must pause till it come back to me.

1. Pleb. Methinks there is much reason in his sayings.

2. Pleb. If thou consider rightly of the matter,

Cæsar has had great wrong.

3. Pleb. Has he, masters?

I fear there will be a worse case in his place. 115

4. Pleb. Mark'd ye his words? He would not take the crown;

Therefore 'tis certain he was not ambitious.

1. Pleb. If it be found so, some will dear abide it.

2. Pleb. Poor soul! his eyes are red as fire with weeping. 120

3. Pleb. There's not a nobler man in Rome than Antony.

4. Pleb. Now mark him, he begins again to speak.

Ant. But yesterday the word of Cæsar might

Have stood against the world; now lies he there,

And none so poor to do him reverence. 125

O masters, if I were dispos'd to stir

Your hearts and minds to mutiny and rage,

I should do Brutus wrong, and Cassius wrong,

Who, you all know, are honourable men.

I will not do them wrong; I rather choose 130

To wrong the dead, to wrong myself and you,

Than I will wrong such honourable men.

But here's a parchment with the seal of Cæsar;

I found it in his closet; 'tis his will.

Let but the commons hear this testament — 135

Which, pardon me, I do not mean to read —

And they would go and kiss dead Cæsar's wounds

And dip their napkins in his sacred blood,

Yea, beg a hair of him for memory,

And, dying, mention it within their wills, 140

Bequeathing it as a rich legacy

Unto their issue.

4. Pleb. We'll hear the will. Read it, Mark Antony.

All. The will, the will! we will hear Cæsar's will.

Ant. Have patience, gentle friends, I must not read it; 145

It is not meet you know how Cæsar lov'd you.

You are not wood, you are not stones, but men;

And, being men, hearing the will of Cæsar,

It will inflame you, it will make you mad,

'Tis good you know not that you are his heirs;

For, if you should, O, what would come of it! 151

4. Pleb. Read the will; we'll hear it, Antony.

You shall read us the will, Cæsar's will.

Ant. Will you be patient? Will you stay a while?

I have o'ershot myself to tell you of it. 155

I fear I wrong the honourable men

Whose daggers have stabb'd Cæsar; I do fear it.

4. Pleb. They were traitors; honourable men!

All. The will! the testament!

2. Pleb. They were villains, murderers. The will! read the will. 160

Ant. You will compel me, then, to read the will?

Then make a ring about the corpse of Cæsar, And let me show you him that made the will.

Shall I descend? and will you give me leave? 165

All. Come down.

2. Pleb. Descend.

3. Pleb. You shall have leave.

[Antony comes down from the pulpit.]

4. Pleb. A ring; stand round.

1. Pleb. Stand from the hearse, stand from the body.

2. Pleb. Room for Antony, most noble Antony. 170

Ant. Nay, press not so upon me; stand far off.

All. Stand back; room; bear back!

Ant. If you have tears, prepare to shed them now.

You all do know this mantle; I remember

The first time ever Cæsar put it on, 175
 'T was on a summer's evening, in his tent,
 That day he overcame the Nervii.
 Look, in this place ran Cassius' dagger through;
 See what a rent the envious Casca made;
 Through this the well-beloved Brutus stabb'd,
 And as he pluck'd his cursed steel away, 181
 Mark how the blood of Cæsar followed it,
 As rushing out of doors, to be resolv'd
 If Brutus so unkindly knock'd, or no;
 For Brutus, as you know, was Cæsar's angel.
 Judge, O you gods, how dearly Cæsar lov'd 186
 him!

This was the most unkindest cut of all;
 For when the noble Cæsar saw him stab,
 Ingratitude, more strong than traitors' arms,
 Quite vanquish'd him. Then burst his mighty 190
 heart;

And, in his mantle muffling up his face,
 Even at the base of Pompey's statue,
 Which all the while ran blood, great Cæsar 195 fell.

O, what a fall was there, my countrymen!
 Then I, and you, and all of us fell down,
 Whilst bloody treason flourish'd over us.
 O, now you weep, and I perceive you feel
 The dint of pity. These are gracious drops.
 Kind souls, what, weep you when you but be- 200
 hold

Our Cæsar's vesture wounded? Look you here: [Lifting Cæsar's mantle.] 200
 Here is himself, marr'd, as you see, with traitors.

1. Pleb. O piteous spectacle!
2. Pleb. O noble Cæsar!
3. Pleb. O woeful day!
4. Pleb. O traitors, villains! 205
1. Pleb. O most bloody sight!
2. Pleb. We will be reveng'd!

[All.] Revenge! About!
 Seek! Burn! Fire! Kill! Slay!
 Let not a traitor live!

Ant. Stay, countrymen. 210
 1. Pleb. Peace there! hear the noble Antony.
 2. Pleb. We'll hear him, we'll follow him,
 we'll die with him.

Ant. Good friends, sweet friends, let me not stir you up

To such a sudden flood of mutiny. 215
 They that have done this deed are honourable.
 What private griefs they have, alas, I know
 not,

That made them do it; they are wise and honourable,

And will, no doubt, with reasons answer you.
 I come not, friends, to steal away your hearts.
 I am no orator, as Brutus is; 221
 But, as you know me all, a plain blunt man
 That love my friend; and that they know full well

That gave me public leave to speak of him; 224
 For I have neither wit, nor words, nor worth,
 Action, nor utterance, nor the power of speech
 To stir men's blood; I only speak right on.
 I tell you that which you yourselves do know;
 Show you sweet Cæsar's wounds, poor, poor,
 dumb mouths,

And bid them speak for me. But were I Brutus, 238
 And Brutus Antony, there were an Antony
 Would ruffle up your spirits, and put a tongue
 In every wound of Cæsar, that should move
 The stones of Rome to rise and mutiny.

All. We'll mutiny. 235

1. Pleb. We'll burn the house of Brutus.

3. Pleb. Away, then! come, seek the conspirators.

Ant. Yet hear me, countrymen; yet hear me
 speak.

All. Peace, ho! hear Antony, most noble
 Antony!

Ant. Why, friends, you go to do you know not what. 240

Wherein hath Cæsar thus deserv'd your loves?
 Alas, you know not; I must tell you, then.
 You have forgot the will I told you of.

All. Most true. The will! Let's stay and hear the will.

Ant. Here is the will, and under Cæsar's seal. 245

To every Roman citizen he gives,
 To every several man, seventy-five drachmas.

2. Pleb. Most noble Cæsar! We'll revenge his death.

3. Pleb. O royal Cæsar!

Ant. Hear me with patience. 250

All. Peace, ho!

Ant. Moreover, he hath left you all his walks,

His private arbours and new-planted orchards,
 On this side Tiber; he hath left them you,
 And to your heirs forever, common pleasures,
 To walk abroad, and recreate yourselves. 255 Here was a Cæsar! When comes such another?

1. Pleb. Never, never! Come, away, away!
 We'll burn his body in the holy place,
 And with the brands fire the traitors' houses.
 Take up the body. 261

2. Pleb. Go fetch fire.

3. Pleb. Pluck down benches.

4. Pleb. Pluck down forms, windows, anything. [Exeunt Plebeians [with the body].]

Ant. Now let it work. Mischief, thou art afoot, 265

Take thou what course thou wilt!

Enter a SERVANT.

How now, fellow?

Serv. Sir, Octavius is already come to Rome.
Ant. Where is he?

Serv. He and Lepidus are at Cæsar's house.

Ant. And thither will I straight to visit
 him;

He comes upon a wish. Fortune is merry, 271
 And in this mood will give us anything.

Serv. I heard him say, Brutus and Cas-sius
 Are rid like madmen through the gates of Rome.

Ant. Belike they had some notice of the
 people, 275

How I had moved them, Bring me to Octavius.
 [Exeunt.]

[SCENE III. A street.]

Enter CINNA the poet, and after him the PLEBEIANS.

Cin. I dreamt to-night that I did feast with Cæsar,

And things unluckily charge my fantasy.
I have no will to wander forth of doors,
Yet something leads me forth.

1. Pleb. What is your name? 5

2. Pleb. Whither are you going?

3. Pleb. Where do you dwell?

4. Pleb. Are you a married man or a bachelor?

2. Pleb. Answer every man directly. 10

1. Pleb. Ay, and briefly.

4. Pleb. Ay, and wisely.

3. Pleb. Ay, and truly, you were best.

Cin. What is my name? Whither am I going? Where do I dwell? Am I a married man or a bachelor? Then, to answer every man directly and briefly, wisely and truly: wisely I say, I am a bachelor.

2. Pleb. That's as much as to say, they are fools that marry. You'll bear me a bang for that, I fear. Proceed; directly. 15

Cin. Directly, I am going to Cæsar's funeral.

1. Pleb. As a friend or an enemy?

Cin. As a friend.

2. Pleb. That matter is answered directly. 20

4. Pleb. For your dwelling, — briefly.

Cin. Briefly, I dwell by the Capitol.

3. Pleb. Your name, sir, truly.

Cin. Truly, my name is Cinna.

1. Pleb. Tear him to pieces; he's a conspirator. 25

Cin. I am Cinna the poet, I am Cinna the poet.

4. Pleb. Tear him for his bad verses, tear him for his bad verses. 30

Cin. I am not Cinna the conspirator.

4. Pleb. It is no matter, his name's Cinna. Pluck but his name out of his heart, and turn him going. 35

3. Pleb. Tear him, tear him! Come, brands, ho! fire-brands! To Brutus', to Cassius'; burn all! Some to Decius' house, and some to Casca's; some to Ligarius'. Away, go! [Exeunt.]

ACT IV

[SCENE I. A house in Rome.]

ANTONY, OCTAVIUS, and LEPIDUS [seated at a table].

Ant. These many, then, shall die; their names are prick'd.

Oct. Your brother too must die; consent you, Lepidus?

Lep. I do consent, —

Oct. Prick him down, Antony.

Lep. Upon condition Publius shall not live, Who is your sister's son, Mark Antony. 5

Ant. He shall not live; look, with a spot I damn him.

But, Lepidus, go you to Cæsar's house;

Fetch the will hither, and we shall determine How to cut off some charge in legacies.

Lep. What, shall I find you here? 10

Oct. Or here, or at the Capitol.

[Exit Lepidus.]

Ant. This is a slight unmeritable man, Meet to be sent on errands; is it fit, The threefold world divided, he should stand One of the three to share it?

Oct. So you thought him; And took his voice who should be prick'd to die, 15

In our black sentence and proscription.

Ant. Octavius, I have seen more days than you;

And though we lay these honours on this man To ease ourselves of divers slanderous loads, He shall but bear them as the ass bears gold, To groan and sweat under the business, Either led or driven, as we point the way; And having brought our treasure where we will, 20

Then take we down his load, and turn him off, Like to the empty ass, to shake his ears And graze in commons. 25

Oct. You may do your will; But he's a tried and valiant soldier.

Ant. So is my horse, Octavius; and for that I do appoint him store of provender. 30

It is a creature that I teach to fight, To wind, to stop, to run directly on, His corporal motion govern'd by my spirit. And, in some taste, is Lepidus but so; He must be taught and train'd and bid go forth; 35

A barren-spirited fellow; one that feeds On abjects, orts, and imitations, Which, out of use and stal'd by other men, Begin his fashion. Do not talk of him But as a property. And now, Octavius, Listen great things. Brutus and Cassius Are levying powers; we must straight make head; 40

Therefore let our alliance be combin'd, Our best friends made, our means stretch'd; And let us presently go sit in council How covert matters may be best disclos'd And open perils surest answered. 45

Oct. Let us do so; for we are at the stake, And bay'd about with many enemies; And some that smile have in their hearts, I fear, 50

Millions of mischiefs. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE II. Camp near Sardis. Before Brutus's tent.]

Drum. Enter BRUTUS, LUCILIUS, [LUCIUS,] and the army. Titinius and PINDARUS meet them.

Bru. Stand, ho!

Lucil. Give the word, ho! and stand.

Bru. What now, Lucilius! is Cassius near?

Lucil. He is at hand; and Pindarus is come To do you salutation from his master. 5

Bru. He greets me well. Your master, Pindarus,

In his own change, or by ill officers,
Hath given me some worthy cause to wish
Things done undone; but, if he be at hand,
I shall be satisfied.

Pin. I do not doubt 10
But that my noble master will appear
Such as he is, full of regard and honour.

Bru. He is not doubted. A word, Lucilius:
How he receiv'd you let me be resolv'd.

Lucil. With courtesy and with respect 15 enough;

But not with such familiar instances,
Nor with such free and friendly conference,
As he hath us'd of old.

Bru. Thou hast describ'd
A hot friend cooling. Ever note, Lucilius,
When love begins to sicken and decay, 20
It useth an enforced ceremony.
There are no tricks in plain and simple faith;
But hollow men, like horses hot at hand,
Make gallant show and promise of their mettle;

[Low march within.]

But when they should endure the bloody spur
They fall their crests, and, like deceitful jades,
Sink in the trial. Comes his army on? 27

Lucil. They mean this night in Sardis to be quarter'd.

The greater part, the horse in general,
Are come with Cassius.

Enter CASSIUS and his Powers.

Bru. Hark! he is arriv'd. 30
March gently on to meet him.

Cas. Stand, ho!

Bru. Stand, ho! Speak the word along.

[1. Sol.] Stand!

[2. Sol.] Stand! 35

[3. Sol.] Stand!

Cas. Most noble brother, you have done me
wrong.

Bru. Judge me, you gods! wrong I mine enemies?

And, if not so, how should I wrong a brother?

Cas. Brutus, this sober form of yours hides wrongs; 40

And when you do them —

Bru. Cassius, be content;
Speak your griefs softly; I do know you well.
Before the eyes of both our armies here,
Which should perceive nothing but love from us,
Let us not wrangle. Bid them move away; 45
Then in my tent, Cassius, enlarge your griefs,
And I will give you audience.

Cas. Pindarus,
Bid our commanders lead their charges off
A little from this ground.

Bru. [Lucius], do you the like; and let no man
Come to our tent till we have done our conference. 51

[Lucilius] and Tifinius, guard our door.

[Exeunt.]

[SCENE III. Brutus's tent.]

[Enter] BRUTUS and CASSIUS.

Cas. That you have wrong'd me doth appear in this:

You have condemn'd and noted Lucius Pella
For taking bribes here of the Sardians;
Wherein my letters, praying on his side,
Because I knew the man was slighted off, — 5

Bru. You wrong'd yourself to write in such a case.

Cas. In such a time as this it is not meet
That every nice offence should bear his comment.

Bru. Let me tell you, Cassius, you yourself
Are much condemn'd to have an itching palm, 10
To sell and mart your offices for gold
To undeservers.

Cas. I an itching palm!
You know that you are Brutus that speaks
this,

Or, by the gods, this speech were else your last.

Bru. The name of Cassius honours this corruption, 15

And Chastisement doth therefore hide his head.

Cas. Chastisement!

Bru. Remember March, the ides of March remember:

Did not great Julius bleed for justice' sake?
What villain touch'd his body, that did stab? 20

And not for justice? What, shall one of us,
That struck the foremost man of all this world

But for supporting robbers, shall we now
Contaminate our fingers with base bribes,

And sell the mighty space of our large honours
For so much trash as may be grasped thus? 25

I had rather be a dog, and bay the moon,
Than such a Roman.

Cas. Brutus, bait not me;

I'll not endure it. You forget yourself
To hedge me in. I am a soldier, I, 30

Older in practice, abler than yourself
To make conditions.

Bru. Go to; you are not, Cassius.

Cas. I am.

Bru. I say you are not.

Cas. Urge me no more, I shall forget myself;
Have mind upon your health, tempt me no farther. 35

Bru. Away, slight man!

Cas. Is 't possible?

Bru. Hear me, for I will speak.
Must I give way and room to your rash choler?
Shall I be frightened when a madman stares? 40

Cas. O ye gods, ye gods! must I endure all
this?

Bru. All this! ay, more. Fret till your proud heart break;

Go show your slaves how choleric you are,
And make your bondmen tremble. Must I budge?

Must I observe you? Must I stand and crouch
Under your testy humour? By the gods, 45

You shall digest the venom of your spleen,
Though it do split you; for, from this day forth,

I'll use you for my mirth, yea, for my laughter,
When you are waspish.

Cas. Is it come to this? 50

Bru. You say you are a better soldier:
Let it appear so; make your vaunting true,
And it shall please me well. For mine own part,
I shall be glad to learn of noble men.

Cas. You wrong me every way; you wrong me, Brutus;
I said an elder soldier, not a better.
Did I say "better"? 55

Bru. If you did, I care not.

Cas. When Cæsar liv'd, he durst not thus have mov'd me.

Bru. Peace, peace! you durst not so have tempted him.

Cas. I durst not! 60

Bru. No.

Cas. What, durst not tempt him!

Bru. For your life you durst not.

Cas. Do not presume too much upon my love;

I may do that I shall be sorry for.

Bru. You have done that you should be sorry for. 65

There is no terror, Cassius, in your threats,
For I am arm'd so strong in honesty
That they pass by me as the idle wind,
Which I respect not. I did send to you
For certain sums of gold, which you deni'd me;
For I can raise no money by vile means. — 71
By heaven, I had rather coin my heart,
And drop my blood for drachmas, than to wring
From the hard hands of peasants their vile trash

By any indirection. — I did send
To you for gold to pay my legions,
Which you deni'd me. Was that done like Cassius? 75

Should I have answer'd Caius Cassius so?
When Marcus Brutus grows so covetous
To lock such rascal counters from his friends,
Be ready, gods, with all your thunderbolts;
Dash him to pieces! 81

Cas. I deni'd you not.

Bru. You did.

Cas. I did not. He was but a fool that brought

My answer back. Brutus hath riv'd my heart.
A friend should bear his friend's infirmities, 86
But Brutus makes mine greater than they are.

Bru. I do not, till you practise them on me.

Cas. You love me not.

Bru. I do not like your faults.

Cas. A friendly eye could never see such faults. 90

Bru. A flatterer's would not, though they do appear

As huge as high Olympus.

Cas. Come, Antony, and young Octavius, come,

Revenge yourselves alone on Cassius,
For Cassius is weary of the world; 95
Hated by one he loves; brav'd by his brother;
Cheek'd like a bondman; all his faults ob-
serv'd,

Set in a note-book, learn'd and conn'd by rote
To cast into my teeth. O, I could weep
My spirit from mine eyes! There is my dagger, 100

And here my naked breast; within, a heart
Dearer than Plutus' mine, richer than gold.
If that thou be'st a Roman, take it forth;
I, that deni'd thee gold, will give my heart.

Strike, as thou didst at Cæsar; for, I know,
When thou didst hate him worst, thou lov'dst him better 106

Than ever thou lov'dst Cassius.

Bru. Sheathe your dagger.

Be angry when you will, it shall have scope.

Do what you will, dishonour shall be humour.

O Cassius, you are yoked with a lamb 110

That carries anger as the flint bears fire;

Who, much enforced, shows a hasty spark,

And straight is cold again.

Cas. Hath Cassius liv'd

To be but mirth and laughter to his Brutus,

When grief and blood ill-temper'd vexeth him?

Bru. When I spoke that, I was ill-temper'd
too. 116

Cas. Do you confess so much? Give me your hand.

Bru. And my heart too.

Cas. O Brutus!

Bru. What's the matter?

Cas. Have not you love enough to bear with me,

When that rash humour which my mother gave me 120

Makes me forgetful?

Bru. Yes, Cassius; and, from henceforth,
When you are over earnest with your Brutus, He'll think your mother chides, and leave you
so.

Poet. [Within.] Let me go in to see the generals;

There is some grudge between 'em, 'tis not meet 125

They be alone.

Lucil. [Within.] You shall not come to them.

Poet. [Within.] Nothing but death shall stay
me.

Enter POET [followed by LUCILIUS, TITINIUS, and LUCIUS].

Cas. How now! what's the matter?

Poet. For shame, you generals! what do you mean? 130

Love, and be friends, as two such men should
be;

For I have seen more years, I'm sure, than ye.

Cas. Ha, ha! how vilely doth this cynic rhyme! 135

Bru. Get you hence, sirrah; saucy fellow,
hence!

Cas. Bear with him, Brutus; 't is his fashion. 138

Bru. I'll know his humour, when he knows his time.

What should the wars do with these jiggling
fools?

Companion, hence!

Cas. Away, away, be gone!
[Exit Poet.]

Bru. Lucilius and Titinius, bid the commanders

Prepare to lodge their companies to-night. 140

Cas. And come yourselves, and bring Mes-sala with you

Immediately to us.

[Exeunt Lucilius and Titinius.]

Bru. Lucius, a bowl of wine!

[Exit Lucius.]

Cas. I did not think you could have been so angry.

Bru. O Cassius, I am sick of many griefs.

Cas. Of your philosophy you make no use
If you give place to accidental evils. 148

Bru. No man bears sorrow better. Portia is dead.

Cas. Ha! Portia!

Bru. She is dead.

Cas. How scap'd I killing when I cross'd
you so? 150

O insupportable and touching loss!

Upon what sickness?

Bru. Impatient of my absence,
And grief that young Octavius with Mark Antony

Have made themselves so strong, — for with her death

That tidings came, — with this she fell distract,
And, her attendants absent, swallow'd fire. 156

Cas. And died so?

Bru. Even so.

Cas. O ye immortal gods!

Re-enter Boy [Lucius], with wine and tapers.

Bru. Speak no more of her. Give me a bowl of wine.

In this I bury all unkindness, Cassius. [Drinks.]

Cas. My heart is thirsty for that noble pledge. 160

Fill, Lucius, till the wine o'erswell the cup;
I cannot drink too much of Brutus' love.

[Drinks.]

Re-enter TITINIUS, with MESSALA.

Bru. Come in, Titinius! [Exit Lucius.]

Welcome, good Messala.

Now sit we close about this taper here,
And call in question our necessities. 166

Cas. Portia, art thou gone?

Bru. No more, I pray you.

Messala, I have here received letters

That young Octavius and Mark Antony

Come down upon us with a mighty power,

Bending their expedition toward Philippi. 170

Mes. Myself have letters of the self-same tenour.

Bru. With what addition?

Mes. That by proscription and bills of outlawry,

Octavius, Antony, and Lepidus

Have put to death an hundred senators. 175

Bru. Therein our letters do not well agree;
Mine speak of seventy senators that died

By their proscriptions, Cicero being one.

Cas. Cicero one!

Mes. Cicero is dead,

And by that order of proscription. 180

Had you your letters from your wife, my lord?

Bru. No, Messala.

Mes. No nothing in your letters writ of her?

Bru. Nothing, Messala.

Mes. That, methinks, is strange.

Bru. Why ask you? Hear you aught of her in yours? 185

Mes. No, my lord.

Bru. Now, as you are a Roman, tell me true.

Mes. Then like a Roman bear the truth I tell:

For certain she is dead, and by strange manner.

Bru. Why, farewell, Portia. We must die,
Messala. 190

With meditating that she must die once,

I have the patience to endure it now.

Mes. Even so great men great losses should endure.

Cas. I have as much of this in art as you,
But yet my nature could not bear it so. 195

Bru. Well, to our work alive. What do you think

Of marching to Philippi presently?

Cas. I do not think it good.

Bru. Your reason?

Cas. This it is:
'T is better that the enemy seek us. 200

So shall he waste his means, weary his soldiers, Doing himself offence; whilst we, lying still,

Are full of rest, defence, and nimbleness.

Bru. Good reasons must, of force, give place to better.

The people 'twixt Philippi and this ground
Do stand but in a forc'd affection. 205

For they have grudg'd us contribution.

The enemy, marching along by them,

By them shall make a fuller number up,

Come on refresh'd, new-added, and encourag'd;

From which advantage shall we cut him off 210

If at Philippi we do face him there,

These people at our back.

Cas. Hear me, good brother.
Bru. Under your pardon. You must note beside,

That we have tried the utmost of our friends;
Our legions are brim-full, our cause is ripe. 215

The enemy increaseth every day;

We, at the height, are ready to decline.

There is a tide in the affairs of men;

Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;

Omitted, all the voyage of their life 220

Is bound in shallows and in miseries.

On such a full sea are we now afloat;

And we must take the current when it serves,
Or lose our ventures.

Cas. Then, with your will, go on.
We'll along ourselves, and meet them at Philippi. 225

Bru. The deep of night is crept upon our talk,

And nature must obey necessity;

Which we will niggard with a little rest.

There is no more to say?

Cas. No more. Good-night.
Early to-morrow will we rise, and hence. 230

Bru. Lucius! (Re-enter Lucius.) My gown.

[Exit Lucius.] Farewell, good Messala;

Good-night, Titinius. Noble, noble Cassius,

Good-night, and good repose.

Cas. O my dear brother!
This was an ill beginning of the night. 234

Never come such division 'tween our souls!
Let it not, Brutus.

Re-enter LUCIUS, with the gown.

Bru. Everything is well.

Cas. Good-night, my lord.

Bru. Good-night, good brother.

Tit. Mes. Good-night, Lord Brutus.

Bru. Farewell, every one.

[Exeunt [all but Brutus and Lucius].]

Give me the gown. Where is thy instrument?

Luc. Here in the tent.

Bru. What, thou speak'st drowsily?

Poor knave, I blame thee not; thou art o'er-watch'd. 241

Call Claudius and some other of my men;

I'll have them sleep on cushions in my tent.

Luc. Varro and Claudius!

Enter VARRO and CLAUDIUS.

Var. Calls my lord? 245

Bru. I pray you, sirs, lie in my tent and sleep;

It may be I shall raise you by and by

On business to my brother Cassius.

Var. So please you, we will stand and watch your pleasure.

Bru. I will not have it so: lie down, good sirs; 250

It may be I shall otherwise bethink me.

[Varro and Claudius lie down.]

Look, Lucius, here's the book I sought for so;

I put it in the pocket of my gown.

Luc. I was sure your lordship did not give it me.

Bru. Bear with me, good boy, I am much forgetful. 255

Canst thou hold up thy heavy eyes a while,

And touch thy instrument a strain or two?

Luc. Ay, my lord, an't please you.

Bru. It does, my boy.

I trouble thee too much, but thou art willing.

Luc. It is my duty, sir. 260

Bru. I should not urge thy duty past thy might;

I know young bloods look for a time of rest.

Luc. I have slept, my lord, already.

Bru. It was well done; and thou shalt sleep again;

I will not hold thee long. If I do live, 265

I will be good to thee. [Music, and a song.]

This is a sleepy tune. O murderous slumber,

Lay'st thou thy leaden mace upon my boy,

That plays these music? Gentle knave, good-night;

I will not do thee so much wrong to wake thee. 270

If thou dost nod, thou break'st thy instrument.

I'll take it from thee; and, good boy, good-night.

Let me see, let me see; is not the leaf turn'd down

Where I left reading? Here it is, I think.

Enter the GHOST of Cæsar.

How ill this taper burns! Ha! who comes here? 275

I think it is the weakness of mine eyes

That shapes this monstrous apparition.

It comes upon me. Art thou anything?

Art thou some god, some angel, or some devil,
That mak'st my blood cold and my hair to stare? 280

Speak to me what thou art.

Ghost. Thy evil spirit, Brutus.

Bru. Why com'st thou?

Ghost. To tell thee thou shalt see me at Philippi.

Bru. Well; then I shall see thee again? 285

Ghost. Ay, at Philippi.

Bru. Why, I will see thee at Philippi, then. [Exit Ghost.]

Now I have taken heart thou vanishest.

Ill spirit, I would hold more talk with thee.

Boy, Lucius! Varro! Claudius! Sirs, awake!

Claudius! 291

Luc. The strings, my lord, are false.

Bru. He thinks he still is at his instrument.

Lucius, awake!

Luc. My lord? 295

Bru. Didst thou dream, Lucius, that thou so criest out?

Luc. My lord, I do not know that I did cry.

Bru. Yes, that thou didst. Didst thou see anything?

Luc. Nothing, my lord.

Bru. Sleep again, Lucius. Sirrah Claudius! Fellow thou, awake! 301

Var. My lord?

Clau. My lord?

Bru. Why did you so cry out, sirs, in your sleep? 304

Var. Clau. Did we, my lord?

Bru. Ay. Saw you anything?

Var. No, my lord, I saw nothing.

Clau. Nor I, my lord.

Bru. Go and commend me to my brother Cassius;

Did him set on his powers betimes before,

And we will follow.

Var. Clau. It shall be done, my lord. [Exeunt.]

ACT V

[SCENE I. The plains of Philippi.]

Enter OCTAVIUS, ANTONY, and their army.

Oct. Now, Antony, our hopes are answered.

You said the enemy would not come down,

But keep the hills and upper regions.

It proves not so: their battles are at hand;

They mean to warn us at Philippi here, 3
Answering before we do demand of them.

Ant. Tut, I am in their bosoms, and I know
Wherefore they do it. They could be content

To visit other places, and come down

With fearful bravery, thinking by this face 10
To fasten in our thoughts that they have courage;

But 'tis not so.

Enter a MESSENGER.

Mess. Prepare you, generals,

The enemy comes on in gallant show;

Their bloody sign of battle is hung out,
And something to be done immediately. 15

Ant. Octavius, lead your battle softly on,
Upon the left hand of the even field.

Oct. Upon the right hand I; keep thou the left.

Ant. Why do you cross me in this exigent?

Oct. I do not cross you; but I will do so. 20 [March.

Drum. Enter BRUTUS, CASSIUS, and their army [LUCILIUS, TITINIUS, MESSALA, and others].

Bru. They stand, and would have parley.

Cas. Stand fast, Titinius; we must out and talk.

Oct. Mark Antony, shall we give sign of battle?

Ant. No, Cæsar, we will answer on their charge.

Make forth; the generals would have some words. 25

Oct. Stir not until the signal.

Bru. Words before blows; is it so, countrymen?

Oct. Not that we love words better, as you do.

Bru. Good words are better than bad strokes,
Octavius.

Ant. In your bad strokes, Brutus, you give good words; 30

Witness the hole you made in Cæsar's heart,
Crying, "Long live! hail, Cæsar!"

Cas. Antony,
The posture of your blows are yet unknown;
But for your words, they rob the Hybla bees,
And leave them honeyless.

Ant. Not stingless too?

Bru. O, yes, and soundless too; 35

For you have stolen their buzzing, Antony,
And very wisely threat before you sting.

Ant. Villains, you did not so, when your vile daggers

Hack'd one another in the sides of Cæsar. 40

You show'd your teeth like apes, and fawn'd
like hounds,

And how'd like bondmen, kissing Cæsar's feet;
Whilst damned Casca, like a cur, behind

Struck Cæsar on the neck. O you flatterers!

Cas. Flatterers! Now, Brutus, thank yourself; 45

This tongue had not offended so to-day,
If Cassius might have rul'd.

Oct. Come, come, the cause! If arguing make us sweat,

The proof of it will turn to redder drops.
Look! 50

I draw a sword against conspirators;

When think you that the sword goes up again?
Never, till Cæsar's three and thirty wounds

Be well aveng'd; or till another Cæsar

Have added slaughter to the sword of traitors.
Bru. Cæsar, thou canst not die by traitors' 55

hands.

Unless thou bring'st them with thee. So I hope;

Oct. I was not born to die on Brutus' sword.

Bru. O, if thou wert the noblest of thy strain,

Young man, thou couldst not die more honourable. 60

Cas. A peevish schoolboy, worthless of such honour,

Join'd with a masker and a reveller!

Ant. Old Cassius still!

Oct. Come, Antony, away!
Defiance, traitors, hurl we in your teeth.

If you dare fight to-day, come to the field; 65
If not, when you have stomachs.

[Exeunt Octavius, Antony, and army.

Cas. Why, now, blow wind, swell billow, and swim bark!

The storm is up, and all is on the hazard.

Bru. Ho, Lucilius! hark, a word with you.
Lucil. (Standing forth.) My lord? 70

[Brutus and Lucilius converse apart.]

Cas. Messala!

Mes. (Standing forth.) What says my general? 75

Cas. Messala,

This is my birthday; as this very day
Was Cassius born. Give me thy hand, Messala.

Be thou my witness that against my will,
As Pompey was, am I compell'd to set 75

Upon one battle all our liberties.

You know that I held Epicurus strong

And his opinion; now I change my mind,

And partly credit things that do presage.

Coming from Sardis, on our former ensign 80

Two mighty eagles fell, and there they perch'd,
Gorging and feeding from our soldiers' hands;

Who to Philippi here consorted us.

This morning are they fled away and gone;

And in their steads do ravens, crows, and kites

Fly o'er our heads and downward look on us, 85

As we were sickly prey. Their shadows seem

A canopy most fatal, under which

Our army lies, ready to give up the ghost.

Mes. Believe not so.

Cas. I but believe it partly;
For I am fresh of spirit, and resolv'd 91

To meet all perils very constantly.

Bru. Even so, Lucilius.

Cas. Now, most noble Brutus,
The gods to-day stand friendly, that we may,

Lovers in peace, lead on our days to age! 95

But since the affairs of men rest still uncertain,
Let's reason with the worst that may befall.

If we do lose this battle, then is this

The very last time we shall speak together.

What are you then determined to do? 100

Bru. Even by the rule of that philosophy

By which I did blame Cato for the death

Which he did give himself, — I know not how,

But I do find it cowardly and vile,

For fear of what might fall, so to prevent 105

The time of life: — arming myself with patience

To stay the providence of some high powers

That govern us below.

Cas. Then, if we lose this battle,
You are contented to be led in triumph

Through the streets of Rome? 110

Bru. No, Cassius, no. Think not, thou noble Roman,
That ever Brutus will go bound to Rome;
He bears too great a mind. But this same day
Must end that work the ides of March begun;
And whether we shall meet again I know not;
Therefore our everlasting farewell take. 116
For ever, and for ever, farewell, Cassius!
If we do meet again, why, we shall smile;
If not, why then, this parting was well made.

Cas. For ever, and for ever, farewell, Brutus!
If we do meet again, we'll smile indeed;
If not, 'tis true this parting was well made.

Bru. Why, then, lead on. O, that a man might know
The end of this day's business ere it come!
But it sufficeth that the day will end,
And then the end is known. Come, ho! away! 125
[Exeunt.]

[SCENE II. The same. The field of battle.]

Alarum. Enter BRUTUS and MESSALA.

Bru. Ride, ride, Messala, ride, and give these bills Unto the legions on the other side.

[Loud alarum.]
Let them set on at once; for I perceive
But cold demeanour in Octavius' wing.
And sudden push gives them the overthrow. 5
Ride, ride, Messala: let them all come down.
[Exeunt.]

[SCENE III. Another part of the field.]

Alarums. Enter CASSIUS and TITINIUS.

Cas. O, look, Titinius, look, the villains fly!
Myself have to mine own turn'd enemy.
This ensign here of mine was turning back;
I slew the coward, and did take it from him.

Tit. O Cassius, Brutus gave the word too early;
Who, having some advantage on Octavius,
Took it too eagerly. His soldiers fell to spoil,
Whilst we by Antony are all enclos'd.

Enter PINDARUS.

Pin. Fly further off, my lord, fly further off;
Mark Antony is in your tents, my lord; 10
Fly, therefore, noble Cassius, fly far off.

Cas. This hill is far enough. Look, look, Titinius;
Are those my tents where I perceive the fire?

Tit. They are, my lord.
Cas. Titinius, if thou lovest me,
Mount thou my horse, and hide thy spurs in him, 15

Till he have brought thee up to yonder troops,
And here again; that I may rest assur'd
Whether yond troops are friend or enemy.

Tit. I will be here again, even with a thought. [Exit.]

Cas. Go, Pindarus, get higher on that hill;
My sight was ever thick; regard Titinius, 21
And tell me what thou not'st about the field.

[Pindarus ascends the hill.]

This day I breathed first; time is come round,
And where I did begin, there shall I end;
My life is run his compass. Sirrah, what news?

Pin. (Above.) O my lord! 26

Cas. What news?

Pin. Titinius is enclosed round about
With horsemen, that make to him on the spur;

Yet he spurs on. Now they are almost on him.
Now, Titinius! Now some light. O, he lights too. 31

He's ta'en. (Shout.) And, hark! they shout for joy.

Cas. Come down, behold no more.
O, coward that I am, to live so long,
To see my best friend ta'en before my face! 35
[Pindarus descends.]

Come hither, sirrah.

In Parthia did I take thee prisoner;
And then I swore thee, saving of thy life,
That whatsoever I did bid thee do,
Thou shouldst attempt it. Come now, keep thine oath; 40

Now be a freeman; and with this good sword,
That ran through Cæsar's bowels, search this bosom.

Stand not to answer; here, take thou the hilts,
And, when my face is cover'd, as 'tis now,
Guide thou the sword. [Pindarus slabs him.]

Cæsar, thou art reveng'd, 45
Even with the sword that kill'd thee. [Dies.]

Pin. So, I am free; yet would not so have been,

Durst I have done my will. O Cassius,
Far from this country Pindarus shall run,
Where never Roman shall take note of him. 50
[Exit.]

Re-enter TITINIUS with MESSALA.

Mes. It is but change, Titinius; for Octavius
Is overthrow'n by noble Brutus' power,
As Cassius' legions are by Antony.

Tit. These tidings will well comfort Cassius.

Mes. Where did you leave him?

Tit. All disconsolate,

With Pindarus his bondman, on this hill. 55

Mes. Is not that he that lies upon the ground?

Tit. He lies not like the living. O my heart!

Mes. Is not that he?

Tit. No, this was he, Messala,

But Cassius is no more. O setting sun, 60

As in thy red rays thou dost sink to-night,
So in his red blood Cassius' day is set;

The sun of Rome is set! Our day is gone;

Clouds, dews, and dangers come; our deeds are done!

Mistrust of my success hath done this deed. 65

Mes. Mistrust of good success hath done this deed.

O hateful error, melancholy's child,
Why dost thou show to the apt thoughts of men

The things that are not? O error, soon conceiv'd,

Thou never com'st unto a happy birth, 70

But kill'st the mother that engend'red thee!

Tit. What, Pindarus! Where art thou, Pindarus?

Mes. Seek him, Titinius, whilst I go to meet The noble Brutus, thrusting this report Into his ears; I may say, "thrusting" it; 75 For piercing steel and darts envenomed Shall be as welcome to the ears of Brutus As tidings of this sight.

Tit. Hie you, Messala, And I will seek for Pindarus the while. 79

[Exit Messala.]

Why didst thou send me forth, brave Cassius? Did I not meet thy friends? and did not they Put on my brows this wreath of victory, And bid me give it thee? Didst thou not hear their shouts?

Alas, thou hast misconstrued everything! But, hold thee, take this garland on thy brow; Thy Brutus bid me give it thee, and I 85 Will do his bidding. Brutus, come apace, And see how I regarded Caius Cassius.

By your leave, gods! — this is a Roman's part. Come, Cassius' sword, and find Titinius' heart. [Kills himself. 90

Alarum. Re-enter MESSALA, with BRUTUS, young CATO, STRATO, VOLUMNIUS, LUCILIUS [and others].

Bru. Where, where, Messala, doth his body lie?

Mes. Lo, yonder, and Titinius mourning it.

Bru. Titinius' face is upward.

Cato. He is slain.

Bru. O Julius Cæsar, thou art mighty yet! Thy spirit walks abroad, and turns our swords 95

In our own proper entrails. [Low alarms.

Cato. Brave Titinius! Look, where'er he have not crown'd dead Cassius!

Bru. Are yet two Romans living such as these?

The last of all the Romans, fare thee well! It is impossible that ever Rome 100 Should breed thy fellow. Friends, I owe more tears

To this dead man than you shall see me pay. I shall find time, Cassius, I shall find time. Come, therefore, and to Thassos send his body; His funerals shall not be in our camp, 105 Lest it discomfort us. Lucilius, come; And come, young Cato; let us to the field. Labeo and Flavius, set our battles on.

'T is three o'clock; and, Romans, yet ere night We shall try fortune in a second fight. 110

[Exeunt.]

[SCENE IV. Another part of the field.]

Alarum. Enter BRUTUS, Messala, young CATO, LUCILIUS, and FLAVIUS.

Bru. Yet, countrymen, O, yet hold up your heads!

Cato. What bastard doth not? Who will go with me?

I will proclaim my name about the field. I am the son of Marcus Cato, ho!

A foe to tyrants, and my country's friend; 5 I am the son of Marcus Cato, ho!

Enter SOLDIERS, and fight.

[Bru.] And I am Brutus, Marcus Brutus, I; Brutus, my country's friend; know me for Brutus! [Exit.]

Lucil. O young and noble Cato, art thou down?

Why, now thou diest as bravely as Titinius, 10 And mayst be honour'd, being Cato's son.

[L.] Sol. Yield, or thou diest.

Lucil. Only I yield to die: There is so much that thou wilt kill me straight; [Offering money.]

Kill Brutus, and be honour'd in his death.

[L.] Sol. We must not. A noble prisoner! 15

Enter ANTONY.

2. Sol. Room, ho! Tell Antony, Brutus is ta'en.

1. Sol. I'll tell the news. Here comes the general.

Brutus is ta'en, Brutus is ta'en, my lord!

Ant. Where is he?

Lucil. Safe, Antony; Brutus is safe enough. I dare assure thee that no enemy 21

Shall ever take alive the noble Brutus; The gods defend him from so great a shame!

When you do find him, or alive or dead, He will be found like Brutus, like himself. 25

Ant. This is not Brutus, friend; but, I assure you,

A prize no less in worth. Keep this man safe, Give him all kindness; I had rather have Such men my friends than enemies. Go on, And see where'er Brutus be alive or dead; 30

And bring us word unto Octavius' tent How everything is chanc'd. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V. [Another part of the field.]

Enter BRUTUS, DARDANIUS, CLITUS, STRATO, and VOLUMNIUS.

Bru. Come, poor remains of friends, rest on this rock.

Cl. Statilius show'd the torchlight, but, my lord,

He came not back. He is or ta'en or slain.

Bru. Sit thee down, Clitus; slaying is the word,

It is a deed in fashion. Hark thee, Clitus. 5 [Whispering.]

Cl. What, I, my lord? No, not for all the world.

Bru. Peace then! no words.

Cl. I'll rather kill myself.

Bru. Hark thee, Dardanius. [Whispering.]

Dar. Shall I do such a deed?

Cl. O Dardanius!

Dar. O Clitus! 10

Cl. What ill request did Brutus make to thee?

Dar. To kill him, Clitus. Look, he meditates.

Cl. Now is that noble vessel full of grief, That it runs over even at his eyes.

Bru. Come hither, good Volumnius; list a word. 15

Vol. What says my lord?

Bru. Why, this, Volumnius: The ghost of Cæsar hath appear'd to me Two several times by night; at Sardis once, And, this last night, here in Philippi fields. I know my hour is come.

Vol. Not so, my lord. 20

Bru. Nay, I am sure it is, Volumnius. Thou seest the world, Volumnius, how it goes; Our enemies have beat us to the pit.

[Low alarums.

It is more worthy to leap in ourselves, Than tarry till they push us. Good Volumnius, 25

Thou know'st that we two went to school together;

Even for that our love of old, I prithee, Hold thou my sword-hilts, whilst I run on it.

Vol. That's not an office for a friend, my lord. 30

Cl. Fly, fly, my lord; there is no tarrying here.

Bru. Farewell to you, and you, and you, Volumnius.

Strato, thou hast been all this while asleep; Farewell to thee too, Strato. Countrymen, My heart doth joy that yet in all my life I found no man but he was true to me. 35

I shall have glory by this losing day More than Octavius and Mark Antony By this vile conquest shall attain unto. So fare you well at once; for Brutus' tongue Hath almost ended his life's history. 40 Night hangs upon mine eyes; my bones would rest, That have but labour'd to attain this hour.

[Alarum. Cry within, "Fly, fly, fly!"

Cl. Fly, my lord, fly.

Bru. Hence! I will follow. [Exeunt Clitus, Dardanius, and Volumnius.]

I prithee, Strato, stay thou by thy lord. Thou art a fellow of a good respect; Thy life hath had some smatch of honour in it. 45

Hold then my sword, and turn away thy face, While I do run upon it. Wilt thou, Strato?

Str. Give me your hand first. Fare you well, my lord.

Bru. Farewell, good Strato. [Runs on his sword.] Cæsar, now be still; I kill'd not thee with half so good a will. 50

[Dies.

Alarum. Retreat. Enter OCTAVIUS, ANTONY, MESSALA, LUCILIUS, and the army.

Oct. What man is that?

Mes. My master's man. Strato, where is thy master?

Str. Free from the bondage you are in, Messala;

The conquerors can but make a fire of him, 55 For Brutus only overcame himself, And no man else hath honour by his death.

Lucil. So Brutus should be found. I thank thee, Brutus,

That thou hast prov'd Lucilius' saying true.

Oct. All that sery'd Brutus, I will entertain them. 60

Fellow, wilt thou bestow thy time with me?

Str. Ay, if Messala will prefer me to you.

Oct. Do so, good Messala.

Mes. How died my master, Strato?

Str. I held the sword, and he did run on it. 65

Mes. Octavius, then take him to follow thee, That did the latest service to my master.

Ant. This was the noblest Roman of them all.

All the conspirators, save only he, Did that they did in envy of great Cæsar; 70 He only, in a general honest thought And common good to all, made one of them.

His life was gentle, and the elements So mix'd in him that Nature might stand up 74 And say to all the world, "This was a man!"

Oct. According to his virtue let us use him, With all respect and rites of burial.

Within my tent his bones to-night shall lie, Most like a soldier, order'd honourably. 80 So call the field to rest; and let's away To part the glories of this happy day.

THE TRAGEDY OF HAMLET, PRINCE OF DENMARK

On July 26, 1602, "a booke called the Revenge of Hamlett" was entered in the Stationers' Register, and in the following year a quarto edition of Hamlet, ascribed on the title-page to Shakespeare, was published. In 1604 the Second Quarto appeared, "enlarged to almost as much againe as it was, according to the true and perfect coppie." It is generally recognized that the First Quarto was printed from a manuscript concocted from notes taken at the theatre, possibly with the assistance of the written parts of one or two minor actors; and further, that it represents a form of the play earlier and much shorter than that found in the Second Quarto. Thus the date of Shakespeare's first draft of Hamlet is, at latest, the earlier months of 1602; of his second, 1603-4. Third, Fourth, and Sixth Quartos, without independent authority, appeared in 1605, 1611, and 1637; the Fifth is undated. The text of the First Folio differs in a very large number of details from that of the Second Quarto; and it contains some 85 lines not in the Quarto, while the Quarto has about 218 lines not in the Folio. Both of these sets of omissions appear to be due to cuts made for acting purposes. It is clear that these two texts were printed from independent copies of the author's manuscript; and most, if not all, of the variations in detail may be accounted for by the carelessness of transcribers and printers. They are not such as to prove an additional revision by the author. The present text is based on the First Folio, but considerable use has been made of the Second Quarto, the omissions supplied from this source being, as usual, enclosed in brackets.

The story of Hamlet is a northern legend which is first found narrated at length in the History of the Danes written in Latin by Saxo Grammaticus about 1200. It was told in French by Belleforest in his Histoires Tragiques (1570), and his version was translated into English, and published, in the earliest known edition, in 1608. The theme was familiar on the English stage, apparently by 1589, when it seems to be alluded to by Nash, and certainly before 1594, when Henslowe records its performance, without the mark usually affixed to the titles of new plays. The exact interpretation of the passage in Nash's preface to Greene's Menaphon is still a matter of dispute; but it is commonly, though not universally, taken to imply that Thomas Kyd is there alluded to as the author of a tragedy on Hamlet. Similarities in structure and style tend to confirm the conjecture that on such a play by the author of The Spanish Tragedy Shakespeare based his play; and many scholars find evidence of important survivals of Kyd's work in the Quarto of 1603, and even in the later text. It is held by some that this earlier play is represented by a German prose Hamlet acted by English players in Germany in the seventeenth century. But this sketch, whether based on the work of Kyd, or on the First Quarto, or on the Second, or on a stage version of either of these last,—for all these hypotheses have been put forth,—reproduces its original in so degraded a form that it is not possible to take it as a fair representative of its source.

The main situation of the tragedy goes back to the prose tale. There we have a king murdered by his brother, who had previously seduced and has now married his queen; and the son of the king aiming at revenge, finally achieving it, and using the device of pretended madness to protect himself in the meantime. The prototype of Polonius is killed while eavesdropping, but his character bears little resemblance to that of Shakespeare's Lord Chamberlain; Ophelia and Horatio are merely hinted at; while Laertes, Fortinbras, and several of the minor characters, such as the grave-diggers and Osric, are altogether absent. The original Hamlet goes to England without interruption from pirates, witnesses the death of his two companions, returns and kills not only the king, but all his courtiers, goes to England again and marries two wives, one of whom betrays him to his death and marries his slayer.

Other elements in the tragedy that are probably not due to Shakespeare's invention have been gathered from a study of contemporary "tragedies of revenge." Such are the ghost inciting to vengeance, the delay in carrying it out, the mad girl with her songs, churchyard scenes, the swearing on the sword hilt, and the voice of the ghost in the cellar. How many of such additions were made by Shakespeare, how many by the author of the lost play, cannot be decided. But for the magnificence of the poetry, the amazing subtlety of the psychology, and the intensity of the tragic emotion it is not hard to assign the credit.

SCENE I. [Elsinore. A platform before the castle.]

FRANCISCO [at his post. Enter to him] BER-NARDO.

Ber. Who's there?

Fran. Nay, answer me. Stand, and unfold yourself.

Ber. Long live the king!

Fran. Bernardo?

Ber. He.

Fran. You come most carefully upon your hour.

Ber. 'Tis now struck twelve. Get thee to bed, Francisco.

Fran. For this relief much thanks. 'Tis bitter cold,

And I am sick at heart.

Ber. Have you had quiet guard?

Fran. Not a mouse stirring.

Ber. Well, good-night.

If you do meet Horatio and Marcellus,
The rivals of my watch, bid them make haste.

Enter HORATIO and MARCELLUS.

Fran. I think I hear them. Stand! Who's there?

Hor. Friends to this ground.

Mar. And liegemen to the Dane.

Fran. Give you good-night.

Mar. O, farewell, honest soldier.
Who hath relief'd you?

Fran. Bernardo has my place.

[Exit.]
Mar. You good-night.

Holla! Bernardo!

Say,
What, is Horatio there?

Hor. A piece of him.

Ber. Welcome, Horatio; welcome, good Marcellus.

Hor. What, has this thing appear'd again to-night?

Ber. I have seen nothing.

Mar. Horatio says 'tis but our fantasy,
And will not let belief take hold of him
Touching this dreaded sight, twice seen of us;
Therefore I have entreated him along
With us, to watch the minutes of this night,
That if again this apparition come,
He may approve our eyes and speak to it.

Hor. Tush, tush, 't will not appear.

Ber. Sit down a while,
And let us once again assail your ears,

That are so fortified against our story,
What we two nights have seen.

Hor. Well, sit we down,
And let us hear Bernardo speak of this.

Ber. Last night of all,
When yond same star that's westward from the pole

Had made his course to illume that part of heaven

Where now it burns, Marcellus and myself,
The bell then beating one, —

Enter the Ghost.

Mar. Peace, break thee off! Look, where it comes again!

Ber. In the same figure, like the King that's dead.

Mar. Thou art a scholar; speak to it, Horatio.

Ber. Looks it not like the King? Mark it, Horatio.

Hor. Most like; it harrows me with fear and wonder.

Ber. It would be spoke to.

Mar. Question it, Horatio.

Hor. What art thou that usurp'st this time of night,

Together with that fair and warlike form
In which the majesty of buried Denmark
Did sometimes march? By heaven I charge thee, speak!

Mar. It is offended.

Ber. See, it stalks away!

Hor. Stay! Speak, speak! I charge thee, speak! [Exit Ghost.]

Mar. 'Tis gone, and will not answer.

Ber. How now, Horatio! you tremble and look pale.

Is not this something more than fantasy?

What think you on 't?

Hor. Before my God, I might not this believe

Without the sensible and true avouch
Of mine own eyes.

Mar. Is it not like the King?

Hor. As thou art to thyself.

Such was the very armour he had on
When he the ambitious Norway combated.
So frown'd he once, when, in an angry parle,
He smote the sledged Polacks on the ice.
'T is strange.

Mar. Thus twice before, and jump at this dead hour,

With martial stalk hath he gone by our watch.
Hor. In what particular thought to work I know not;

But, in the gross and scope of my opinion,
This bodes some strange eruption to our state.

Mar. Good now, sit down, and tell me, he that knows,

Why this same strict and most observant watch
So nightly toils the subject of the land,
And why such daily cast of brazen cannon,
And foreign mart for implements of war;
Why such impress of shipwrights, whose sore task

Does not divide the Sunday from the week.
What might be toward, that this sweaty haste
Doth make the night joint-labourer with the day,

Who is 't that can inform me?

Hor. That can I;

At least, the whisper goes so. Our last king,
Whose image even but now appear'd to us,
Was, as you know, by Fortinbras of Norway,
Thereto prick'd on by a most emulate pride,
Dar'd to the combat; in which our valiant

Hamlet—

For so this side of our known world esteem'd him—

Did slay this Fortinbras; who, by a seal'd compact,

Well ratified by law and heraldry,
Did forfeit, with his life, all those his lands
Which he stood seiz'd on, to the conqueror;
Against the which, a moiety competent

Was gaged by our king; which had return'd
To the inheritance of Fortinbras,
Had he been vanquisher; as, by the same covenant,

And carriage of the article design'd,
His fell to Hamlet. Now, sir, young Fortinbras,

Of unimproved mettle hot and full,
Hath in the skirts of Norway here and there
Shark'd up a list of landless resolute,
For food and diet, to some enterprise

That hath a stomach in 't; which is no other—
As it doth well appear unto our state—

But to recover of us, by strong hand
And terms compulsative, those foresaid lands
So by his father lost; and this, I take it,

Is the main motive of our preparations,
The source of this our watch, and the chief head
Of this post-haste and romage in the land.

[Ber.] I think it be no other but e'en so.
Well may it sort that this portentous figure

Comes armed through our watch, so like the King

That was and is the question of these wars.

Hor. A mote it is to trouble the mind's eye.
In the most high and palmy state of Rome,

A little ere the mightiest Julius fell,
The graves stood tenantless and the sheeted
dead

Did squeak and gibber in the Roman streets.

[As well as]
As stars with trains of fire and dews of blood,
Disasters in the sun; and the moist star

Upon whose influence Neptune's empire stands
Was sick almost to doomsday with eclipse.

And even the like precurse of fierce events,
As harbingers preceding still the fates

And prologue to the omen coming on,
Have heaven and earth together demonstrated

Unto our climatures and countrymen.]

Re-enter Ghost.

But soft, behold! Lo, where it comes again!
I'll cross it, though it blast me. Stay, illusion!

If thou hast any sound, or use of voice,
Speak to me;

If there be any good thing to be done
That may to thee do ease and grace to me,

Speak to me;

If thou art privy to thy country's fate,
Which, happily, foreknowing may avoid,

O speak!

Or if thou hast uphoarded in thy life
Extorted treasure in the womb of earth,

For which, they say, you spirits oft walk in
death,

Speak of it; stay, and speak! (Cock crows.)
Stop it, Marcellus.

Mar. Shall I strike at it with my partisan?
Hor. Do, if it will not stand.

Ber. 'T is here!
Hor. 'T is here!

Mar. 'T is gone!
[Exit Ghost.]

We do it wrong, being so majestical,
To offer it the show of violence;
For it is, as the air, invulnerable,

And our vain blows malicious mockery.

Ber. It was about to speak, when the cock crew.

Hor. And then it started like a guilty thing Upon a fearful summons. I have heard, The cock, that is the trumpet to the morn, 150 Doth with his lofty and shrill-sounding throat Awake the god of day; and, at his warning, Whether in sea or fire, in earth or air, The extravagant and erring spirit hies To his confine; and of the truth herein 155 This present object made probation.

Mar. It faded on the crowing of the cock. Some say that ever 'gainst that season comes Wherein our Saviour's birth is celebrated, The bird of dawning singeth all night long; 160 And then, they say, no spirit can walk abroad; The nights are wholesome; then no planets strike,

No fairy takes, nor witch hath power to charm, So hallow'd and so gracious is the time.

Hor. So have I heard and do in part believe it. 165

But, look, the morn, in russet mantle clad, Walks o'er the dew of yon high eastern hill. Break we our watch up; and, by my advice, Let us impart what we have seen to-night Unto young Hamlet; for, upon my life, 170 This spirit, dumb to us, will speak to him. Do you consent we shall acquaint him with it, As needful in our loves, fitting our duty?

Mar. Let's do't, I pray; and I this morning know

Where we shall find him most conveniently. 175 [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. [A room of state in the castle.]

Flourish. Enter the KING, QUEEN, HAMLET, POLONIUS, LAERTES, OPHELIA, Lords, and Attendants.

King. Though yet of Hamlet our dear brother's death

The memory be green, and that it us befitted To bear our hearts in grief, and our whole kingdom

To be contracted in one brow of woe, Yet so far hath discretion fought with nature 5 That we with wisest sorrow think on him Together with remembrance of ourselves.

Therefore our sometime sister, now our queen, The imperial jointress of this warlike state, Have we, as 't were with a defeated joy, — 10 With one auspicious and one dropping eye, With mirth in funeral and with dirge in marriage,

In equal scale weighing delight and dole, — Taken to wife; nor have we herein barr'd Your better wisdoms, which have freely gone 15 With this affair along. For all, our thanks. Now follows that you know: young Fortinbras,

Holding a weak supposal of our worth, Or thinking by our late dear brother's death Our state to be disjoint and out of frame, 20 Colleagu'd with the dream of his advantage, He hath not fail'd to pester us with message Importing the surrender of those lands

Lost by his father, with all bonds of law, 25 To our most valiant brother. So much for him.

Enter VOLTIMAND and CORNELIUS.

Now for ourself and for this time of meeting, Thus much the business is: we have here writ To Norway, uncle of young Fortinbras, — Who, impotent and bed-rid, scarcely hears Of this his nephew's purpose, — to suppress 30 His further gait herein, in that the levies, The lists and full proportions, are all made Out of his subject; and we here dispatch You, good Cornelius, and you, Voltimand, For bearing of this greeting to old Norway; 35 Giving to you no further personal power To business with the king, more than the scope Of these delated articles allow.

[Giving a paper.]

Farewell, and let your haste commend your duty.

[Cor.] In that and all things will we show Vol. } our duty. 40

King. We doubt it nothing; heartily farewell. [Exeunt Voltimand and Cornelius.]

And now, Laertes, what's the news with you? You told us of some suit; what is't, Laertes? You cannot speak of reason to the Dane, 45 And lose your voice. What wouldst thou beg, Laertes,

That shall not be my offer, not thy asking? The head is not more native to the heart, The hand more instrumental to the mouth, Than is the throne of Denmark to thy father. What wouldst thou have, Laertes?

Laer. Dread my lord, Your leave and favour to return to France; 51 From whence though willingly I came to Denmark

To show my duty in your coronation, Yet now, I must confess, that duty done, My thoughts and wishes bend again towards France 55

And bow them to your gracious leave and pardon.

King. Have you your father's leave? What says Polonius?

Pol. He hath, my lord, [wrung from me my slow leave

By laboursome petition, and at last Upon his will I seal'd my hard consent.] 60 I do beseech you, give him leave to go.

King. Take thy fair hour, Laertes. Time be thine,

And thy best graces spend it at thy will! But now, my cousin Hamlet, and my son, —

Ham. [Aside.] A little more than kin, and less than kind. 65

King. How is it that the clouds still hang on you?

Ham. Not so, my lord; I am too much i' the sun. 70

Queen. Good Hamlet, cast thy nighted colour off,

And let thine eye look like a friend on Denmark. 75

Do not for ever with thy veiled lids Seek for thy noble father in the dust.

Hamlet { power to make him natural born actor with the reason } So the way people look -

Thou know'st 't is common ; - all that lives must die,

Passing through nature to eternity.

Ham. Ay, madam, it is common.

Queen.

Why seems it so particular with thee ?

Ham. Seems, madam ! Nay, it is ; I know not "seems."

'T is not alone my inky cloak, good mother,

Nor customary suits of solemn black,

Nor windy suspiration of forc'd breath,

No, nor the fruitful river in the eye,

Nor the dejected haviour of the visage,

Together with all forms, moods, shows of grief,

That can denote me truly. These indeed seem,

For they are actions that a man might play ;

But I have that within which passeth show,

These but the trappings and the suits of woe.

King. 'T is sweet and commendable in your nature, Hamlet,

To give these mourning duties to your father.

But, you must know, your father lost a father ;

That father lost, lost his ; and the survivor bound

In filial obligation for some term

To do obsequious sorrow. But to persevere

In obstinate condolement is a course

Of impious stubbornness ; 't is unmanly grief ;

It shows a will most incorrect to heaven,

A heart unfortified, a mind impatient,

An understanding simple and unschool'd ;

For what we know must be, and is as common

As any the most vulgar thing to sense,

Why should we in our peevish opposition

Take it to heart ? Fie ! 't is a fault to heaven,

A fault against the dead, a fault to nature,

To reason most absurd, whose common theme

Is death of fathers, and who still hath cried,

From the first corse till he that died to-day,

"This must be so." We pray you, throw to earth

This unprevailing woe, and think of us

As of a father ; for, let the world take note,

You are the most immediate to our throne,

And with no less nobility of love

Than that which dearest father bears his son,

Do I impart towards you. For your intent

In going back to school in Wittenberg,

It is most retrograde to our desire ;

And we beseech you, bend you to remain

Here in the cheer and comfort of our eye,

Our chiefest courtier, cousin, and our son.

Queen. Let not thy mother lose her prayers, Hamlet.

I prithee, stay with us ; go not to Wittenberg.

Ham. I shall in all my best obey you, madam.

King. Why, 't is a loving and a fair reply.

Be as ourself in Denmark. Madam, come ;

This gentle and unforc'd accord of Hamlet

Sits smiling to my heart ; in grace whereof,

No jocund health that Denmark drinks to-day,

But the great cannon to the clouds shall tell,

And the King's rouse the heavens shall bruit

again,

Re-speaking earthly thunder. Come away.

[Flourish. Exeunt all but Hamlet.]

Ham. O, that this too too solid flesh would melt,

Thaw, and resolve itself into a dew !

Or that the Everlasting had not fix'd

His canon 'gainst self-slaughter ! O God ! God !

How weary, stale, flat, and unprofitable,

Seems to me all the uses of this world !

Fie on 't ! oh fie, fie ! 'T is an unweeded garden.

That grows to seed ; things rank and gross in nature

Possess it merely. That it should come to this !

But two months dead ! Nay, not so much, not two.

So excellent a king ; that was, to this,

Hyperion to a satyr ; so loving to my mother

That he might not betem the winds of heaven

Visit her face too roughly. Heaven and earth !

Must I remember ? Why, she would hang on him,

As if increase of appetite had grown

By what it fed on ; and yet, within a month, —

Let me not think on 't ! — Frailty, thy name is woman ! —

A little month, or e'er those shoes were old

With which she followed my poor father's body,

Like Niobe, all tears, — why she, even she —

O God ! a beast, that wants discourse of reason,

Would have mourn'd longer — married with mine uncle,

My father's brother, but no more like my father

Than I to Hercules ; within a month,

Ere yet the salt of most unrighteous tears

Had left the flushing of her galled eyes,

She married. O, most wicked speed, to post

With such dexterity to incestuous sheets !

It is not, nor it cannot come to good. —

But break my heart, for I must hold my tongue.

Enter HORATIO, MARCELLUS, and BERNARDO.

Hor. Hail to your lordship !

Ham. I am glad to see you well.

Horatio ! — or I do forget myself.

Hor. The same, my lord, and your poor servant ever.

Ham. Sir, my good friend ; I'll change that name with you.

And what make you from Wittenberg, Horatio ?

Marcellus ?

Mar. My good lord !

Ham. I am very glad to see you. [To Ber.]

Good even, sir. —

But what, in faith, make you from Wittenberg ?

Hor. A truant disposition, good my lord.

Ham. I would not hear your enemy say so,

Nor shall you do mine ear that violence,

To make it trustor of your own report

Against yourself. I know you are no truant.

But what is your affair in Elsinore ?

We'll teach you to drink deep ere you depart.

Hor. My lord, I came to see your father's funeral.

Ham. I pray thee, do not mock me, fellow-student.

I think it was to see my mother's wedding.

Hor. Indeed, my lord, it followed hard upon.
Ham. Thrift, thrift, Horatio! The funeral
 bak'd-meats 180

Did coldly furnish forth the marriage tables.
 Would I had met my dearest foe in heaven
 Ere I had ever seen that day, Horatio!
My father! — methinks I see my father. 184

Hor. Oh, where, my lord?
Ham. In my mind's eye, Horatio.
Ham. I saw him once; he was a goodly king.
Ham. He was a man, take him for all in all,
 I shall not look upon his like again.

Hor. My lord, I think I saw him yesternight.
Ham. Saw? Who? 190

Hor. My lord, the King your father.
Ham. The King my father!

Hor. Season your admiration for a while
 With an attent ear, till I may deliver,
 Upon the witness of these gentlemen,
 This marvel to you.

Ham. For God's love, let me hear.
Hor. Two nights together had these gentle-
 men, 196

Marcellus and Bernardo, on their watch,
 In the dead waste and middle of the night,
 Been thus encount'ed. A figure like your father,

Arm'd at all points exactly, cap-a-pie, 200
 Appears before them, and with solemn march Goes slow and stately by them. Thrice he walk'd

By their oppress'd and fear-surprised eyes, Within his truncheon's length; whilst they,
 distill'd

Almost to jelly with the act of fear, 205
 Stand dumb and speak not to him. This to me
 In dreadful secrecy impart they did,
 And I with them the third night kept the watch;

Where, as they had deliver'd, both in time,
 Form of the thing, each word made true and
 good, 210

The apparition comes. I knew your father;
 These hands are not more like.

Ham. But where was this?

Mar. My lord, upon the platform where we watch'd.

Ham. Did you not speak to it?

Hor. My lord, I did;
 But answer made it none. Yet once methought 215

It lifted up its head and did address
 Itself to motion, like as it would speak;
 But even then the morning cock crew loud,
 And at the sound it shrunk in haste away,
 And vanish'd from our sight.

Ham. 'Tis very strange.
Hor. As I do live, my honour'd lord, 'tis true, 221

And we did think it writ down in our duty
 To let you know of it.

Ham. Indeed, indeed, sirs. But this troubles
 me.

Hold you the watch to-night?

Mar. } We do, my lord.
Ber. }

Ham. Arm'd, say you? 226

Mar. } Arm'd, my lord.
Ber. }

Ham. From top to toe?

Mar. } My lord, from head to foot.
Ber. }

Ham. Then saw you not his face?

Hor. O, yes, my lord; he wore his beaver
 up. 230

Ham. What, look'd he frowningly?

Hor. A countenance more
 In sorrow than in anger.

Ham. Pale, or red?

Hor. Nay, very pale.

Ham. And fix'd his eyes upon you?

Hor. Most constantly.

Ham. I would I had been there.

Hor. It would have much amaz'd you. 236

Ham. Very like, very like. Stay'd it long?

Hor. While one with moderate haste might tell a hundred.

Mar. } Longer, longer.
Ber. }

Hor. Not when I saw't.

Ham. His beard was grizzly? No?

Hor. It was, as I have seen it in his life, 241
 A sable silver'd, grizzly.

Ham. I will watch to-night;
 Perchance 't will walk again.

Hor. I warrant you it will.

Ham. If it assume my noble father's person,

I'll speak to it, though hell itself should gape 245

And bid me hold my peace. I pray you all,
 If you have hitherto conceal'd this sight,
 Let it be tenable in your silence still;
 And whatsoever else shall hap to-night,
 Give it an understanding, but no tongue. 250

I will requite your loves. So, fare ye well.

Upon the platform 'twixt eleven and twelve,
 I'll visit you.

All. Our duty to your honour.

Ham. Your love, as mine to you; farewell.
 [Exeunt [all but Hamlet].]

My father's spirit in arms! All is not well; 255
 I doubt some foul play. Would the night were come!

Till then sit still, my soul. Foul deeds will rise, Though all the earth o'erwhelm them, to men's eyes. [Exit.]

SCENE III. [A room in Polonius's house.]

Enter LAERTES and OPHELIA.

Laer. My necessities are embark'd, fare-
 well;

And, sister, as the winds give benefit
 And convoy is assistant, do not sleep,
 But let me hear from you.

Oph. Do you doubt that?

Laer. For Hamlet and the trifling of his favours, 5

Hold it a fashion and a toy in blood,
 A violet in the youth of primy nature,
 Forward, not permanent, sweet, not lasting,
 The [perfume and] suppliance of a minute;
 No more.

Oph. No more but so?

Laer.

Think it no more:

For nature crescent does not grow alone 11
In thews and bulk, but, as this temple waxes,
The inward service of the mind and soul
Grows wide withal. Perhaps he loves you now,
And now no soil nor cautel doth besmirch 15
The virtue of his will; but you must fear,
His greatness weigh'd, his will is not his own;
For he himself is subject to his birth.
He may not, as unvalued persons do,
Carve for himself, for on his choice depends 20
The sanity and health of the whole state;
And therefore must his choice be circumscrib'd
Unto the voice and yielding of that body Whereof he is the head. Then, if he says he loves you,

It fits your wisdom so far to believe it 25
As he in his particular act and place
May give his saying deed; which is no further

Than the main voice of Denmark goes withal.
Then weigh what loss your honour may sustain

If with too credent ear you list his songs, 30
Or lose your heart, or your chaste treasure open
To his unmaster'd importunity.

Fear it, Ophelia, fear it, my dear sister,
And keep you in the rear of your affection,
Out of the shot and danger of desire. 35

The chariest maid is prodigal enough,
If she unmask her beauty to the moon.
Virtue itself scapes not calumnious strokes.

The canker galls the infants of the spring
Too oft before the buttons be disclos'd, 40
And in the morn and liquid dew of youth
Contagious blastments are most imminent.

Be wary then, best safety lies in fear;
Youth to itself rebels, though none else near.

Oph. I shall the effect of this good lesson 45
keep,

As watchman to my heart. But, good my brother,

Do not, as some ungracious pastors do,
Show me the steep and thorny way to heaven,
Whilst, like a puff'd and reckless libertine, 50
Himself the primrose path of dalliance treads,
And recks not his own rede.

Laer. O, fear me not.

Enter POLONIUS.

I stay too long; but here my father comes.

A double blessing is a double grace;
Occasion smiles upon a second leave.

Pol. Yet here, Laertes? Aboard, aboard, 55
for shame!

The wind sits in the shoulder of your sail,
And you are stay'd for. There; my blessing with you!

And these few precepts in thy memory
See thou character. Give thy thoughts no
tongue,

Nor any unproportion'd thought his act. 60

Be thou familiar, but by no means vulgar.
The friends thou hast, and their adoption tried,
Grapple them to thy soul with hoops of steel;
But do not dull thy palm with entertainment

Of each new-hatch'd, unfledg'd comrade. Beware 65

Of entrance to a quarrel; but being in,
Bear 't that the opposed may beware of thee.
Give every man thine ear, but few thy voice;
Take each man's censure, but reserve thy judgement.

Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy, 70
But not express'd in fancy; rich, not gaudy;
For the apparel oft proclaims the man,
And they in France of the best rank and station

Are most select and generous in that.
Neither a borrower nor a lender be; 75

For loan oft loses both itself and friend,
And borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry.

This above all: to thine own self be true,
And it must follow, as the night the day,

Thou canst not then be false to any man. 80

Farewell; my blessing season this in thee!

Laer. Most humbly do I take my leave, my lord.

Pol. The time invites you; go, your servants tend.

Laer. Farewell, Ophelia, and remember well
What I have said to you.

Oph. 'Tis in my memory lock'd,
And you yourself shall keep the key of it. 85

Laer. Farewell.

Pol. What is't, Ophelia, he hath said to

you?

Oph. So please you, something touching the Lord Hamlet.

Pol. Marry, well bethought. 90

'Tis told me, he hath very oft of late
Given private time to you, and you yourself

Have of your audience been most free and bounteous.

If it be so — as so 'tis put on me,
And that in way of caution — I must tell you,

You do not understand yourself so clearly 95
As it behoves my daughter and your honour.

What is between you? Give me up the truth.

Oph. He hath, my lord, of late made many tenders

Of his affection to me. 100

Pol. Affection! pooh! You speak like a green girl,

Unfitted in such perilous circumstance.

Do you believe his tenders, as you call them?

Oph. I do not know, my lord, what I should think.

Pol. Marry, I'll teach you: think yourself a baby 105

That you have ta'en his tenders for true pay,
Which are not sterling. Tender yourself more dearly,

Or — not to crack the wind of the poor phrase,
Running it thus — you 'll tender me a fool.

Oph. My lord, he hath importun'd me with love 110

In honourable fashion.

Pol. Ay, fashion you may call it. Go to, go to.

Oph. And hath given countenance to his speech, my lord.

With almost all the holy vows of heaven.

Pol. Ay, springs to catch woodcocks. I do know, 115
 When the blood burns, how prodigal the soul
 Lends the tongue vows. These blazes, daughter,
 Giving more light than heat, extinct in both
 Even in their promise, as it is a-making,
 You must not take for fire. From this time, 120
 daughter,
 Be somewhat scancer of your maiden presence.
 Set your entreatments at a higher rate
 Than a command to parley. For Lord Hamlet, Believe so much in him, that he is young,
 And with a larger tether may he walk 125
 Than may be given you. In few, Ophelia,
 Do not believe his vows; for they are brokers,
 Not of that dye which their investments show,
 But mere implorers of unholy suits,
 Breathing like sanctified and pious bawds, 130
 The better to beguile. This is for all:
 I would not, in plain terms, from this time
 forth,
 Have you so slander any moment leisure
 As to give words or talk with the Lord Hamlet.
 Look to 't, I charge you. Come your ways. 135
Oph. I shall obey, my lord. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE IV. The platform.]

Enter HAMLET, HORATIO, and MARCELLUS.

Ham. The air bites shrewdly; it is very cold.
Hor. It is a nipping and an eager air.

Ham. What hour now?

Hor. I think it lacks of twelve.

Mar. No, it is struck.

Hor. Indeed? I heard it not. Then it draws near the season
 Wherein the spirit held his wont to walk.

[A flourish of trumpets, and two pieces go off [within].]

What does this mean, my lord?

Ham. The King doth wake to-night and takes his rouse, drinks
 Keeps wassail, and the swaggering up-spring reels;

And, as he drains his draughts of Rhenish
 down,
 The kettle-drum and trumpet thus bray out
 The triumph of his pledge.

Hor. Is it a custom?

Ham. Ay, marry, 't.
 But to my mind, though I am native here
 And to the manner born, it is a custom 140
 More honour'd in the breach than the observance.

[This heavy-headed revel east and west
Makes us traduc'd and tax'd of other nations.
They clepe us drunkards, and with swinish phrase call them vags.

Soil our addition; and indeed it takes
From our achievements, though perform'd at height,

The pith and marrow of our attribute.
 So, oft it chances in particular men,
 That for some vicious mole of nature in them,
 As, in their birth — wherein they are not guilty,
 Since nature cannot choose his origin —

By their o'ergrowth of some complexion
 Oft breaking down the pales and forts of reason,
 Or by some habit that too much o'er-leavens
 The form of plausible manners, that these men,
 Carrying, I say, the stamp of one defect, 145
 Being nature's livery, or fortune's star,
 His virtues else — be they as pure as grace,
 As infinite as man may undergo —
 Shall in the general censure take corruption 150
 From that particular fault. The dram of eale
 Doth all the noble substance often doot
 To his own scandal.]

Enter Ghost.

Hor. Look, my lord, it comes!
Ham. Angels and ministers of grace defend
 us!

Be thou a spirit of health or goblin damn'd, 155 Bring with thee airs from heaven or blasts from hell,

Be thy intents wicked or charitable,
 Thou com'st in such a questionable shape
 That I will speak to thee. I'll call thee Hamlet,

King, father; royal Dane, O, answer me! 160
 Let me not burst in ignorance; but tell

Why thy canoniz'd bones, hearsed in death,
 Have burst their cerements; why the sepulchre,
 Wherein we saw thee quietly inurn'd,

Hath op'd his ponderous and marble jaws, 165
 To cast thee up again. What may this mean,
 That thou, dead corpse, again in complete steel

Revisits thus the glimpses of the moon,
 Making night hideous, and we fools of nature
 So horribly to shake our disposition 170
 With thoughts beyond the reaches of our souls?

Say, why is this? Wherefore? What should we do? [Ghost beckons Hamlet.]

Hor. It beckons you to go away with it,
 As if it some impartment did desire
 To you alone.

Mar. Look, with what courteous action
 It wafts you to a more removed ground. 175
 But do not go with it.

Hor. No, by no means.

Ham. It will not speak; then will I follow it.

Hor. Do not, my lord.

Ham. Why, what should be the fear?

I do not set my life at a pin's fee,
 And for my soul, what can it do to that,
 Being a thing immortal as itself?

It waves me forth again. I'll follow it.

Hor. What if it tempt you toward the flood,
 my lord,

Or to the dreadful summit of the cliff
 That beetles o'er his base into the sea,

And there assume some other horrible form,
 Which might deprive your sovereignty of reason
 And draw you into madness? Think of it.

[The very place puts toys of desperation,
Without more motive, into every brain

That looks so many fathoms to the sea
And hears it roar beneath.]

Ham. It wafts me still.

Go on, I'll follow thee.

Mar. You shall not go, my lord.

Ham. Hold off your hand. 180

Hor. Be rul'd; you shall not go.

Ham. My fate cries out,
And makes each petty artery in this body
As hardy as the Nemean lion's nerve.

Still am I call'd. Unhand me, gentlemen. stg
By heaven, I'll make a ghost of him that lets
me!

I say, away! — Go on, I'll follow thee. 86

[Exeunt Ghost and Hamlet.]

Hor. He waxes desperate with imagination.

Mar. Let's follow. 'Tis not fit thus to obey
him.

Hor. Have after. To what issue will this
come?

Mar. Something is rotten in the state of
Denmark. 90

Hor. Heaven will direct it.

Mar. Nay, let's follow him.
[Exeunt.]

[SCENE V. Another part of the platform.]

Enter GHOST and HAMLET.

Ham. Where wilt thou lead me? Speak, I'll go no further.

Ghost. Mark me. listen to me

Ham. I will.

Ghost. My hour is almost come,
When I to sulphurous and tormenting flames
Must render up myself.

Ham. Alas, poor ghost!

Ghost. Pity me not, but lend thy serious hearing 5

To what I shall unfold.

Ham. Speak; I am bound to hear.

Ghost. So art thou to revenge, when thou shalt hear.

Ham. What?

Ghost. I am thy father's spirit,
Doom'd for a certain term to walk the night, 10
And for the day confin'd to fast in fires,
Till the foul crimes done in my days of nature
Are burnt and purg'd away. But that I am forbid

To tell the secrets of my prison-house,
I could a tale unfold whose lightest word 15
Would harrow up thy soul, freeze thy young
blood,

Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their spheres,

Thy knotty and combined locks to part
And each particular hair to stand on end,
Like quills upon the fretful porpentine. 20

But this eternal blazon must not be
To ears of flesh and blood. List, Hamlet, O, list!

If thou didst ever thy dear father love —

Ham. O God!

Ghost. Revenge his foul and most unnatural murder. 25

Ham. Murder!

Ghost. Murder most foul, as in the best it is,
But this most foul, strange, and unnatural.

Ham. Haste me to know't, that I, with wings as swift

As meditation or the thoughts of love, 30
May sweep to my revenge.

Ghost.

I find thee apt;
And duller shouldst thou be than the fat weed
That roots itself in ease on Lethe wharf, Wouldst thou not stir in this. Now, Hamlet,
hear.

It's given out that, sleeping in mine orchard,
A serpent stung me; so the whole ear of Denmark 36

Is by a forged process of my death

Rankly abus'd; but know, thou noble youth,
The serpent that did sting thy father's life
Now wears his crown.

Ham.

my prophetic soul! 40

Mine uncle!

Ghost. Ay, that incestuous, that adulterate beast,

With witchcraft of his wit, with traitorous
gifts, —

O wicked wit and gifts, that have the power
So to seduce! — won to his shameful lust 45

The will of my most seeming-virtuous queen.
O Hamlet, what a falling-off was there!

From me, whose love was of that dignity
That it went hand in hand even with the vow

I made to her in marriage, and to decline 50
Upon a wretch whose natural gifts were poor
To those of mine!

But virtue, as it never will be moved,
Though lewdness court it in a shape of heaven,

So lust, though to a radiant angel link'd, 55
Will sate itself in a celestial bed
And prey on garbage.

But, soft! methinks I scent the morning's air.
Brief let me be. Sleeping within mine orchard,

My custom always in the afternoon, 60
Upon my secure hour thy uncle stole,
With juice of cursed hebenon in a vial,

And in the porches of mine ears did pour
The leperous distilment; whose effect

Holds such an enmity with blood of man 65
That swift as quicksilver it courses through
The natural gates and alleys of the body,

And with a sudden vigour it doth posset
And curd, like eager droppings into milk,

The thin and wholesome blood. So did it mine,
And a most instant tetter bark'd about, 70

Most lazar-like, with vile and loathsome crust,
All my smooth body.

Thus was I, sleeping, by a brother's hand
Of life, of crown, and queen, at once dis-
patch'd;

Cut off even in the blossoms of my sin,
Unhous'd, disappointed, unanel'd, 75

No reckoning made, but sent to my account
With all my imperfections on my head.

O, horrible! O, horrible! most horrible! 80
If thou hast nature in thee, bear it not;
Let not the royal bed of Denmark be
A couch for luxury and damned incest.

But, howsoever thou pursuest this act,
Taint not thy mind, nor let thy soul contrive 85

Against thy mother aught. Leave her to heaven!

And to those thorns that in her bosom lodge,
To prick and sting her. Fare thee well at once!

The glow-worm shows the matin to be near,

And 'gins to pale his uneffectual fire. 90

Adieu, adieu! Hamlet, remember me. [Exit.]

Ham. O all you host of heaven! O earth!
What else?

And shall I couple hell? O, fie! Hold, my heart,

And you, my sinews, grow not instant old,

But bear me stiffly up. Remember thee! 95

Ay, thou poor ghost, while memory holds a seat

In this distracted globe. Remember thee!

Yea, from the table of my memory

I'll wipe away all trivial fond records,

All saws of books, all forms, all pressures 100

past,

That youth and observation copied there,

And thy commandment all alone shall live

Within the book and volume of my brain, 105

Unmix'd with baser matter. Yes, yes, by heav-

ven!

O most pernicious woman!

O villain, villain, smiling, damned villain!

My tables, my tables,—meet it is I set it 110

down!

That one may smile, and smile, and be a villain!

At least I'm sure it may be so in Denmark.

So, uncle, there you are. Now to my word;

It is "Adieu, adieu! remember me." 115

I have sworn't.

Mar. } (Within.) My lord, my lord!

Hor. } (Within.) Lord Hamlet!

Mar. } (Within.) Heaven secure him!

Hor. } (Within.) No, you'll reveal it.

Ham. } (Within.) So be it!

Mar. } (Within.) Illo, ho, ho, my lord! 120

Ham. } (Within.) Hillo, ho, ho, boy! Come, bird, come.

Enter HORATIO and MARCELLUS.

Mar. How is't, my noble lord?

Hor. What news, my lord?

Ham. O, wonderful!

Hor. Good my lord, tell it.

Ham. No, you'll reveal it.

Hor. Not I, my lord, by heaven.

Mar. Nor I, my lord.

Ham. How say you, then, would heart of 125 man once think it?—

But you'll be secret?

Hor. } Ay, by heaven, my lord.

Mar. } (Within.) There's ne'er a villain dwelling in all 130

Denmark—

But he's an arrant knave.

Hor. There needs no ghost, my lord, come 135

from the grave

To tell us this.

Ham. Why, right, you are i' the right.

And so, without more circumstance at all,

I hold it fit that we shake hands and part;

You, as your business and desires shall point 140

you,

For every man has business and desire,

Such as it is; and for mine own poor part,

Look you, I'll go pray.

Hor. These are but wild and whirling words,

my lord.

Ham. I'm sorry they offend you, heartily;
Yes, faith, heartily.

Hor. There's no offence, my lord.

Ham. Yes, by Saint Patrick, but there is, 145

Horatio,

And much offence too. Touching this vision 150

here,

It is an honest ghost, that let me tell you.

For your desire to know what is between us,

O'ermaster't as you may. And now, good 155

friends,

As you are friends, scholars, and soldiers,

Give me one poor request.

Hor. What is't, my lord? We will.

Ham. Never make known what you have 160 seen to-night.

Hor. } My lord, we will not.

Mar. } Nay, but swear't.

Hor. } In faith,

My lord, not I.

Mar. } Nor I, my lord, in faith. 165

Ham. Upon my sword.

Mar. We have sworn, my lord, already.

Ham. Indeed, upon my sword, indeed.

Ghost. Swear! [Ghost cries under the stage.]

Ham. Ah, ha, boy! say'st thou so? Art 170

thou there, truepenny?

Come on; you hear this fellow in the cellarage.

Consent to swear.

Hor. } Propose the oath, my lord.

Ham. } Never to speak of this that you have 175 seen.

Swear by my sword.

Ghost. [Beneath.] Swear.

Ham. Hic et ubique? Then we'll shift our 180

ground.

Come hither, gentlemen,

And lay your hands again upon my sword.

Never to speak of this that you have heard,

Swear by my sword. 185

Ghost. [Beneath.] Swear.

Ham. Well said, old mole! Canst work i'

the earth so fast?

A worthy pioneer! Once more remove, good 190

friends.

Hor. O day and night, but this is wondrous strange!

Ham. And therefore as a stranger give it 195

welcome.

There are more things in heaven and earth 200

Horatio,

Than are dreamt of in our philosophy.

But come;

Here, as before, never, so help you mercy,

How strange or odd soe'er I bear myself,— 205

As I perchance hereafter shall think meet

To put an antic disposition on—

That you, at such time seeing me, never shall,

With arms encumb'ed thus, or this headshake,

Or by pronouncing of some doubtful phrase, 210

As "Well, we know," or "We could, an if we would,"

Or "If we list to speak," or "There be, an if they might,"

Or such ambiguous giving out, to note

That you know aught of me,—this not to do,

So grace and mercy at your most need help you,
Swear. 181

Ghost. [Beneath.] Swear.

Ham. Rest, rest, perturbed spirit! [They swear.] So, gentlemen,

With all my love I do commend me to you.

And what so poor a man as Hamlet is 185

May do, to express his love and friending to you,

God willing, shall not lack. Let us go in together;

And still your fingers on your lips, I pray.

The time is out of joint;—O cursed spite,

That ever I was born to set it right! 190

Nay, come, let's go together. [Exeunt.]

ACT II

[SCENE I. A room in Polonius's house.]

Enter POLONIUS and REYNALDO.

Pol. Give him this money and these notes, Reynaldo.

Rey. I will, my lord.

Pol. You shall do marvellous wisely, good Reynaldo,

Before you visit him, to make inquiry Of his behaviour.

Rey. My lord, I did intend it. 5

Pol. Marry, well said, very well said. Look you, sir,

Inquire me first what Danskers are in Paris, And how, and who, what means, and where they keep,

What company, at what expense; and finding By this encompassment and drift of question 10 That they do know my son, come you more nearer

Than your particular demands will touch it. Take you, as 't were, some distant knowledge of him.

As thus, "I know his father and his friends, And in part him." Do you mark this, Reynaldo? 15

Rey. Ay, very well, my lord.

Pol. "And in part him; but," you may say, "not well.

But, if 't be he I mean, he's very wild, Addicted so and so;" and there put on him What forgeries you please; marry, none so rank 20

As may dishonour him,—take heed of that;

But, sir, such wanton, wild, and usual slips

As are companions noted and most known

To youth and liberty.

Rey. As gaming, my lord? 25

Pol. Ay, or drinking, fencing, swearing, quarrelling,

Drabbing; you may go so far.

Rey. My lord, that would dishonour him.

Pol. Faith, no, as you may season it in the charge.

You must not put another scandal on him,

That he is open to incontinency. 30

That's not my meaning. But breathe his faults so quaintly

That they may seem the taints of liberty, The flash and outbreak of a fiery mind, A savageness in unreckoned blood, Of general assault.

Rey. But, my good lord,— 35

Pol. Wherefore should you do this?

Rey. Ay, my lord,

I would know that.

Pol. Marry, sir, here's my drift,

And, I believe, it is a fetch of warrant:

You laying these slight sullies on my son,

As 't were a thing a little soil'd i' the working,

Mark you, 41

Your party in converse, him you would sound,

Having ever seen in the prenominate crimes

The youth you breathe of guilty, be assur'd

He closes with you in this consequence; 45

"Good sir," or so, or "friend," or "gentleman,"

According to the phrase and the addition

Of man and country.

Rey. Very good, my lord.

Pol. And then, sir, does he this—he does— What was I about to say? [By the mass,] I was about to say something. Where did I leave?

Rey. At "closes in the consequence," at "friend or so," and "gentleman."

Pol. At "closes in the consequence," ay, marry.

He closes with you thus: "I know the gentleman. 55

I saw him yesterday, or t' other day,

Or then, or then, with such and such; and, as you say,

There was he gaming; there o'ertook in 's rouse;

There falling out at tennis;" or, perchance,

"I saw him enter such a house of sale," 60

Videlicet, a brothel, or so forth.

See you now

Your bait of falsehood takes this carp of truth;

And thus do we of wisdom and of reach,

With windlasses and with assays of bias, 65

By indirections find directions out.

So by my former lecture and advice,

Shall you my son. You have me, have you not?

Rey. My lord, I have.

Pol. God buy you; fare you well.

Rey. Good my lord.

Pol. Observe his inclination in yourself. 70

Rey. I shall, my lord.

Pol. And let him ply his music.

Rey. Well, my lord.

Pol. Farewell! [Exit Reynaldo.]

Enter OPHELIA.

How now, Ophelia! what's the matter?

Oph. Alas, my lord, I have been so afflicted! 75

Pol. With what, in the name of God?

Oph. My lord, as I was sewing in my chamber,

Lord Hamlet, with his doublet all unbrac'd, No hat upon his head, his stockings foul'd,

Ungart' red, and down-gyved to his ankle, 80

Pale as his shirt, his knees knocking each other,

And with a look so piteous in purport
As if he had been loosed out of hell
To speak of horrors, — he comes before me.

Pol. Mad for thy love?

Oph. My lord, I do not know,
But truly, I do fear it.

Pol. What said he?

Oph. He took me by the wrist and held me hard;

Then goes he to the length of all his arm,
And, with his other hand thus o'er his brow,
He falls to such perusal of my face 90
As he would draw it. Long stay'd he so.
At last, a little shaking of mine arm,
And thrice his head thus waving up and down,
He rais'd a sigh so piteous and profound
That it did seem to shatter all his bulk 95
And end his being. That done, he lets me go;
And, with his head over his shoulder turn'd,
He seem'd to find his way without his eyes,
For out o' doors he went without their help,
And, to the last, bended their light on me. 100

Pol. [Come,] go with me, I will go seek the King.

This is the very ecstasy of love,
Whose violent property fordoes itself
And leads the will to desperate undertakings 105
As oft as any passion under heaven
That does afflict our natures. I am sorry, —
What, have you given him any hard words of late?

Oph. No, my good lord, but, as you did command,

I did repel his letters and deny'd

His access to me.

Pol. That hath made him mad. 110
I am sorry that with better heed and judgement
I had not quoted him. I fear'd he did but trifle
And meant to wreck thee; but beshrew my jealousy!

By heaven, it is as proper to our age
To cast beyond ourselves in our opinions 115
As it is common for the younger sort
To lack discretion. Come, go we to the King.
This must be known, which, being kept close,
might move

More grief to hide than hate to utter love. 119
[Come.] [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. [A room in the castle.]

Flourish. Enter KING, QUEEN, ROSENCRANTZ, GUILDENSTERN, with others.

King. Welcome, dear Rosencrantz and Guildenstern!

Moreover that we much did long to see you,
The need we have to use you did provoke
Our hasty sending. Something have you heard
Of Hamlet's transformation; so I call it, 5
Since not the exterior nor the inward man Resembles that it was. What it should be,
More than his father's death, that thus hath put him

So much from the understanding of himself,
I cannot dream of. I entreat you both, 10
That, being of so young days brought up with him

And since so neighbour'd to his youth and humour, dispart in

That you vouchsafe your rest here in our court
Some little time; so by your companies
To draw him on to pleasures, and to gather 15
So much as from occasions you may glean,
[Whether aught, to us unknown, afflicts him thus,]

That, open'd, lies within our remedy.

Queen. Good gentlemen, he hath much talk'd of you;

And sure I am two men there are not living 20
To whom he more adheres. If it will please you
To show us so much gentry and good will
As to expend your time with us a while
For the supply and profit of our hope,
Your visitation shall receive such thanks 25
As fits a king's remembrance.

Ros. Both your Majesties
Might, by the sovereign power you have of us,
Put your dread pleasures more into command
Than to entreaty.

Guil. We both obey,
And here give up ourselves, in the full bent 30
To lay our services freely at your feet,
To be commanded.

King. Thanks, Rosencrantz and gentle Guildenstern.

Queen. Thanks, Guildenstern and gentle Rosencrantz,

And I beseech you instantly to visit 35
My too much changed son. Go, some of ye,
And bring the gentlemen where Hamlet is.

Guil. Heavens make our presence and our practices what we do,
Pleasant and helpful to him!

Queen. Amen!

[Exeunt [Rosencrantz, Guildenstern, and some Attendants].

Enter POLONIUS.

Pol. The ambassadors from Norway, my good lord,
Are joyfully return'd. 40

King. Thou still hast been the father of good news.

Pol. Have I, my lord? Assure you, my good liege,

I hold my duty as I hold my soul,
Both to my God and to my gracious king. 45
And I do think, or else this brain of mine
Hunts not the trail of policy so sure
As it hath us'd to do, that I have found
The very cause of Hamlet's lunacy.

King. O, speak of that; that I do long to hear. 50

Pol. Give first admittance to the ambassadors.

My news shall be the fruit to that great feast.

King. Theyself do grace to them, and bring them in. [Exit Polonius.]

He tells me, my sweet queen, that he hath found

The head and source of all your son's distemper. 55

Queen. I doubt it is no other but the main,
His father's death and our o'erhasty marriage.

Re-enter POLONIUS, with VOLTIMAND and CORNELIUS.

King. Well, we shall sift him. — Welcome, my good friends!
Say, Voltimand, what from our brother Norway?

Volt. Most fair return of greetings and desires. 90

Upon our first, he sent out to suppress His nephew's levies, which to him appear'd To be a preparation 'gainst the Polack, But, better look'd into, he truly found It was against your Highness. Whereat grieved, That so his sickness, age, and impotence 95 Was falsely borne in hand, sends out arrests On Fortinbras; which he, in brief, obeys, Receives rebuke from Norway, and in fine Makes vow before his uncle never more To give the assay of arms against your Majesty.

Whereon old Norway, overcome with joy, Gives him three thousand crowns in annual fee, And his commission to employ those soldiers, So levied as before, against the Polack; 100 With an entreaty, herein further shown,

[Giving a paper.]

That it might please you to give quiet pass Through your dominions for his enterprise, On such regards of safety and allowance As therein are set down.

King. It likes us well; 105 And at our more consider'd time we'll read, Answer, and think upon this business. Meantime we thank you for your well-took labour.

Go to your rest; at night we'll feast together. Most welcome home!

[Exeunt Voltimand and Cornelius.]

Pol. This business is well ended. 110 My liege, and madam, to expostulate What majesty should be, what duty is, Why day is day, night night, and time is time, Were nothing but to waste night, day, and time;

Therefore, since brevity is the soul of wit, 115 And tediousness the limbs and outward flourishes,

I will be brief. Your noble son is mad. Mad call I it; for, to define true madness, What is't but to be nothing else but mad? But let that go.

Queen. More matter, with less art. 120

Pol. Madam, I swear I use no art at all. That he is mad, 'tis true; 'tis true 'tis pity, And pity 'tis 'tis true. A foolish figure! But farewell it, for I will use no art. Mad let us grant him then; and now remains That we find out the cause of this effect, 125 Or rather say, the cause of this defect, For this effect defective comes by cause. Thus it remains, and the remainder thus. Perpend.

Consider. 130 I have a daughter — have whilst she is mine — Who, in her duty and obedience, mark, Hath given me this. Now gather, and surmise.

[Reads] the letter.

"To the celestial and my soul's idol, the most beautified Ophelia," — 110

That's an ill phrase, a vile phrase; "beautified" is a vile phrase. But you shall hear. Thus:

"In her excellent white bosom, these."

Queen. Came this from Hamlet to her?

Pol. Good madam, stay a while. I will be faithful. [Reads.] 115

"Doubt thou the stars are fire,

Doubt that the sun doth move,

Doubt truth to be a liar,

But never doubt I love. 120

"O dear Ophelia, I am ill at these numbers. I have not art to reckon my groans; but that I love thee best, O most best, believe it. Adieu.

Thine evermore, most dear lady,

Whilst this machine is to him,

HAMLET."

This in obedience hath my daughter show'd me, 125

And more above, hath his solicitings, As they fell out by time, by means, and place, All given to mine ear.

King. But how hath she Received his love?

Pol. What do you think of me?

King. As of a man faithful and honourable.

Pol. I would fain prove so. But what might you think, 131

When I had seen this hot love on the wing, — As I perceiv'd it, I must tell you that,

Before my daughter told me, — what might you,

Or my dear Majesty your queen here, think, 135

If I had play'd the desk or table-book,

Or given my heart a winking, mute and dumb,

Or look'd upon this love with idle sight,

What might you think? No, I went round to work,

And my young mistress thus I did bespeak: 140

"Lord Hamlet is a prince, out of thy star.

"This must not be;" and then I precepts gave her,

That she should lock herself from his resort, Admit no messengers, receive no tokens.

Which done, she took the fruits of my advice; 145

And he, repulsed — a short tale to make —

Fell into a sadness, then into a fast,

Thence to a watch, thence into a weakness,

Thence to a lightness, and, by this declension,

Into the madness whereon now he raves, 150

And all we wait for.

King. Do you think 'tis this?

Queen. It may be, very likely.

Pol. Hath there been such a time — I'd fain know that —

That I have positively said, "'Tis so,"

When it prov'd otherwise?

King. Not that I know.

Pol. Take this from this, if this be otherwise. 155

If circumstances lead me, I will find Where truth is hid, though it were hid indeed

Within the centre.

King. How may we try it further?

Pol. You know, sometimes he walks four hours together
Here in the lobby. 160

Queen. So he has, indeed.

Pol. At such a time I'll loose my daughter to him.

Be you and I behind an arras then;
Mark the encounter. If he love her not
And be not from his reason fallen thereon, 165
Let me be no assistant to a state,
But keep a farm and carters.

King. We will try it.

Enter HAMLET, reading on a book.

Queen. But look where sadly the poor wretch comes reading.

Pol. Away, I do beseech you, both away.
I'll board him presently.

[Exeunt King, Queen [and Attendants].]

O, give me leave, 170
How does my good Lord Hamlet?

Ham. Well, God-a-mercy.

Pol. Do you know me, my lord?

Ham. Excellent well; you are a fishmonger.
Pol. Not I, my lord. 175

Ham. Then I would you were so honest a man.

Pol. Honest, my lord!

Ham. Ay, sir. 'To be honest, as this world goes, is to be one man pick'd out of ten thousand.

Pol. That's very true, my lord. 180

Ham. For if the sun breed maggots in a dead dog, being a good kissing carrion, — Have you a daughter?

Pol. I have, my lord. 184

Ham. Let her not walk i' the sun. Conception is a blessing, but not as your daughter may conceive. Friend, look to 't. 187

Pol. [Aside.] How say you by that? Still harping on my daughter. Yet he knew me not at first; he said I was a fishmonger. He is far gone, far gone. And truly in my youth I suffered much extremity for love; very near this. I'll speak to him again. — What do you read, my lord? 193

Ham. Words, words, words.

Pol. What is the matter, my lord?

Ham. Between who?

Pol. I mean, the matter you read, my lord. 197

Ham. Slanders, sir; for the satirical slave says here that old men have grey beards, that their faces are wrinkled, their eyes purging thick amber or plum-tree gum, and that they have a plentiful lack of wit, together with weak hams; all which, sir, though I most powerfully and potently believe, yet I hold it not honesty to have it thus set down; for you yourself, sir, should be old as I am, if like a crab you could go backward. 206

Pol. [Aside.] Though this be madness, yet there is method in 't. — Will you walk out of the air, my lord?

Ham. Into my grave? 210

Pol. Indeed, that is out o' the air. [Aside.] How pregnant sometimes his replies are! a happiness that often madness hits on, which reason and sanity could not so prosperously be deliver'd of. I will leave him, and suddenly contrive the means of meeting between him and my daughter. — My honourable lord, I will most humbly take my leave of you. 218

Ham. You cannot, sir, take from me anything that I will more willingly part withal, — [Aside] except my life, my life. 221

Pol. Fare you well, my lord.

Ham. These tedious old fools! Hamlet thinks not tedious

Enter ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN.

Pol. You go to seek my Lord Hamlet? There he is.

Ros. [To Polonius.] God save you, sir! 225
[Exit Polonius.]

Guil. Mine honour'd lord!

Ros. My most dear lord!

Ham. My excellent good friends! How dost thou, Guildenstern? Oh, Rosencrantz! Good lads, how do ye both? 230

Ros. As the indifferent children of the earth.

Guil. Happy, in that we are not over-happy. On Fortune's cap we are not the very button. 237

Ham. Nor the soles of her shoe?

Ros. Neither, my lord. 238

Ham. Then you live about her waist, or in the middle of her favour?

Guil. Faith, her privates we.

Ham. In the secret parts of Fortune? Oh, most true; she is a strumpet. What's the news? 240

Ros. None, my lord, but that the world's grown honest.

Ham. Then is doomsday near. But your news is not true. Let me question more in particular. What have you, my good friends, deserved at the hands of Fortune, that she sends you to prison hither? 247

Guil. Prison, my lord?

Ham. Denmark's a prison.

Ros. Then is the world one. 250

Ham. A goodly one, in which there are many confines, wards, and dungeons, Denmark being one o' the worst.

Ros. We think not so, my lord. 254

Ham. Why, then, 'tis none to you; for there is nothing either good or bad, but thinking makes it so. To me it is a prison.

Ros. Why, then, your ambition makes it one. 'Tis too narrow for your mind. 259

Ham. O God, I could be bounded in a nutshell and count myself a king of infinite space, were it not that I have bad dreams.

Guil. Which dreams indeed are ambition, for the very substance of the ambitious is merely the shadow of a dream. 265

Ham. A dream itself is but a shadow.

Ros. Truly, and I hold ambition of so airy and light a quality that it is but a shadow's shadow.

Ham. Then are our beggars bodies, and our monarchs and outstretch'd heroes the beggars' shadows. Shall we to the court? for, by my fay, I cannot reason. 272

Ros. } We'll wait upon you.
Guil. }

Ham. No such matter. I will not sort you with the rest of my servants, for, to speak to you like an honest man, I am most dreadfully attended. But in the beaten way of friendship, what make you at Elsinore?

Ros. To visit you, my lord; no other occasion.

Ham. Beggar that I am, I am even poor in thanks, but I thank you; and sure, dear friends, my thanks are too dear a halfpenny. Were you not sent for? Is it your own inclining? Is it a free visitation? Come, deal justly with me. Come, come. Nay, speak.

Guil. What should we say, my lord?

Ham. Why, anything, but to the purpose. You were sent for; and there is a kind of confession in your looks which your modesties have not craft enough to colour. I know the good king and queen have sent for you.

Ros. To what end, my lord?

Ham. That you must teach me. But let me conjure you, by the rights of our fellowship, by the consonance of our youth, by the obligation of our ever-preserved love, and by what more dear a better proposer could charge you withal, be even and direct with me, whether you were sent for or no!

Ros. [Aside to Guil.] What say you?

Ham. [Aside.] Nay, then, I have an eye of you. — If you love me, hold not off.

Guil. My lord, we were sent for.

Ham. I will tell you why; so shall my anticipation prevent your discovery, and your secrecy to the King and Queen moults no feather. I have of late — but wherefore I know not — lost all my mirth, forgone all custom of exercise; and indeed it goes so heavily with my disposition that this goodly frame, the earth, seems to me a sterile promontory, this most excellent canopy, the air, look you, this brave o'erhanging firmament, this majestical roof fretted with golden fire, why, it appears no other thing to me than a foul and pestilent congregation of vapours. What a piece of work is a man! How noble in reason! How infinite in faculty! In form and moving how express and admirable! In action how like an angel! In apprehension how like a god! The beauty of the world! The paragon of animals! And yet, to me, what is this quintessence of dust? Man delights not me, — no, nor woman neither, though by your smiling you seem to say so.

Ros. My lord, there was no such stuff in my thoughts.

Ham. Why did you laugh then, when I said, "Man delights not me"?

Ros. To think, my lord, if you delight not in man, what lenten entertainment the players shall receive from you. We coted them on the way, and hither are they coming to offer you service.

Ham. He that plays the king shall be welcome; his majesty shall have tribute of me; the adventurous knight shall use his foil and target; the lover shall not sigh gratis; the humorous man shall end his part in peace; the clown shall make those laugh whose lungs are tickle o' the sere; and the lady shall say her mind freely, or the blank verse shall halt for't. What players are they?

Ros. Even those you were wont to take delight in, the tragedians of the city.

Ham. How chances it they travel? Their residence, both in reputation and profit, was better both ways.

Ros. I think their inhibition comes by the means of the late innovation.

Ham. Do they hold the same estimation they did when I was in the city? Are they so follow'd?

Ros. No, indeed, they are not.

Ham. How comes it? Do they grow rusty?

Ros. Nay, their endeavour keeps in the wonted pace; but there is, sir, an aery of children, little eyases, that cry out on the top of [388] question, and are most tyrannically clapp'd for't. These are now the fashion, and so berattle the common stages — so they call them — that many wearing rapiers are afraid of goose-quills and dare scarce come thither.

Ham. What, are they children? Who maintains 'em? How are they escoted? Will they pursue the quality no longer than they can sing? Will they not say afterwards, if they should grow themselves to common players, — as it is most like, if their means are no better — their writers do them wrong, to make them exclaim against their own succession?

Ros. Faith, there has been much to do on both sides, and the nation holds it no sin to tarre them to controversy. There was for a while no money bid for argument unless the poet and the player went to cuffs in the question.

Ham. Is't possible?

Guil. O, there has been much throwing about of brains.

Ham. Do the boys carry it away?

Ros. Ay, that they do, my lord; Hercules and his load too.

Ham. It is not strange; for mine uncle is King of Denmark, and those that would make mows at him while my father lived, give twenty, forty, [fifty,] an hundred ducats apiece for his picture in little. ['Sblood,] there is something in this more than natural, if philosophy could find it out.

[Flourish for the Players.]

Guil. There are the players.

Ham. Gentlemen, you are welcome to Elsinore. Your hands, come. The appurtenance of welcome is fashion and ceremony. Let me comply with you in the garb, lest my extent to the players, which, I tell you, must show fairly outward, should more appear like entertainment than yours. You are welcome; but my uncle-father and aunt-mother are deceiv'd.

Guil. In what, my dear lord?

Ham. I am but mad north-north-west. When the wind is southerly I know a hawk from a handsaw.

Enter POLONIUS.

Pol. Well be with you, gentlemen!

Ham. [Aside to them.] Hark you, Guildenstern, and you too, at each ear a hearer: that great baby you see there is not yet out of his swathing-clouts. 401

Ros. Happily he is the second time come to them, for they say an old man is twice a child.

Ham. I will prophesy he comes to tell me of the players; mark it. [Aloud.] You say right, sir; for o' Monday morning 't was so indeed. 407

Pol. My lord, I have news to tell you.

Ham. My lord, I have news to tell you. When Roscius was an actor in Rome,—

Pol. The actors are come hither, my lord.

Ham. Buzz, buzz!

Pol. Upon mine honour,— 413

Ham. "Then came each actor on his ass,"—

Pol. The best actors in the world, either for tragedy, comedy, history, pastoral, pastoral-comical, historical-pastoral, tragical-historical, tragical-comical-historical-pastoral, scene indivisible, or poem unlimited; Seneca cannot be too heavy, nor Plautus too light. For the law of writ and the liberty, these are the only men. 421

Ham. O Jephthah, judge of Israel, what a treasure hadst thou!

Pol. What a treasure had he, my lord?

Ham. Why, 425

"One fair daughter, and no more,
The which he loved passing well."

Pol. [Aside.] Still on my daughter.

Ham. Am I not i' the right, old Jephthah?

Pol. If you call me Jephthah, my lord, I have a daughter that I love passing well. 431

Ham. Nay, that follows not.

Pol. What follows, then, my lord?

Ham. Why, 435

"As by lot, God wot,"

and then, you know,

"It came to pass, as most like it was,"—

The first row of the pious chanson will show you more, for look where my abridgements come. 439

Enter four or five PLAYERS.

You're welcome, masters, welcome all. I am glad to see thee well. Welcome, good friends. O, my old friend! Thy face is valanc'd since I saw thee last; com'st thou to beard me in Denmark? What, my young lady and mistress! By'r lady, your ladyship is nearer heaven 445 than when I saw you last, by the altitude of a chopine. Pray God, your voice, like a piece of uncurrent gold, be not crack'd within the ring. Masters, you are all welcome. We'll e'en to't like French falconers—fly at anything we see; we'll have a speech straight. Come, 450 give us a taste of your quality; come, a passionate speech.

1. Play. What speech, my lord?

Ham. I heard thee speak me a speech once, but it was never acted; or, if it was, not above once. For the play, I remember, 455 pleas'd not the million; 't was caviare to the general; but it was—as I receiv'd it, and others, whose judgement in such matters cried in the top of mine—an excellent play, well digested in the scenes, set down with as much 460 modesty as cunning. I remember, one said there were no sallets in the lines to make the matter savoury, nor no matter in the phrase that might indict the author of affectation; but call'd it an honest method, [as wholesome as] 465 sweet, and by very much more handsome than fine.] One speech in it I chiefly lov'd; 't was Aeneas' tale to Dido, and thereabout of it especially where he speaks of Priam's slaughter. If it live in your memory, begin at this line: let me see, let me see— 467

"The rugged Pyrrhus, like the Hyrcanian beast,"

—It is not so. It begins with Pyrrhus:—

"The rugged Pyrrhus, he whose sable arms, Black as his purpose, did the night resemble 475 When he lay couched in the ominous horse, Hath now this dread and black complexion smear'd

With heraldry more dismal. Head to foot

Now is he total gules, horribly trick'd

With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, 480 sons,

Bak'd and impasted with the parching streets, That lend a tyrannous and damned light

To their vile murders. Roasted in wrath and fire,

And thus o'er-sized with coagulate gore, With eyes like carbuncles, the hellish Pyrrhus Old grandsire Priam seeks." 485

[So, proceed you.]

Pol. 'Fore God, my lord, well spoken, with good accent and good discretion.

1. Play. "Anon he finds him Striking too, short at Greeks. His antique 491 sword, Rebellious to his arm, lies where it falls, Repugnant to command. Unequal match,

Pyrrhus at Priam drives, in rage strikes wide, But with the whiff and wind of his fell sword

The unnerved father falls. Then senseless 495 Ilium,

Seeming to feel his blow, with flaming top Stoops to his base, and with a hideous crash

Takes prisoner Pyrrhus' ear; for, lo! his sword,

Which was declining on the milky head 500 Of reverend Priam, seem'd i' the air to stick.

So, as a painted tyrant, Pyrrhus stood And like a neutral to his will and matter,

Did nothing. But, as we often see, against some storm, 505 A silence in the heavens, the rack stand still,

The bold winds speechless and the orb below As hush as death, anon the dreadful thunder

Doth rend the region; so, after Pyrrhus' pause, Aroused vengeance sets him new a-work; 510

And never did the Cyclops' hammers fall On Mars his armour forg'd for proof eterne

With less remorse than Pyrrhus' bleeding sword Now falls on Priam.

Out, out, thou strumpet Fortune! All you gods, In general synod take away her power! 515

Break all the spokes and fellies from her wheel,
And bowl the round nave down the hill of
heaven

As low as to the fiends!"

Pol. This is too long.

520

Ham. It shall to the barber's, with your beard. Prithee, say on; he's for a jig or a tale of bawdry, or he sleeps. Say on; come to Hecuba.

1. Play. "But who, O, who had seen the mobled queen?"

525

Ham. "The mobled queen?"

Pol. That's good; "mobled queen" is good.

1. Play. "Run barefoot up and down, threatning the flame

With bisson rheum, a clout about that head
Where late the diadem stood, and for a robe,
About her lank and all o'er-teemed loins, 531
A blanket, in the alarm of fear caught up;—
Who this had seen, with tongue in venom steep'd,

'Gainst Fortune's state would treason have pro-nounc'd.

But if the gods themselves did see her then, 535
When she saw Pyrrhus make malicious sport
In mincing with his sword her husband's limbs,
The instant burst of clamour that she made,
Unless things mortal move them not at all,
Would have made milch the burning eyes of
heaven, 540

And passion in the gods."

Pol. Look, wh'er he has not turn'd his colour and has tears in 's eyes. Pray you, no more.

Ham. 'Tis well; I'll have thee speak out 545 the rest soon. Good my lord, will you see the players well bestow'd? Do ye hear? Let them be well us'd, for they are the abstracts and brief chronicles of the time; after your death you were better have a bad epitaph than their ill report while you lived. 551

Pol. My lord, I will use them according to their desert.

Ham. God's bodykins, man, better. Use every man after his desert, and who should scape whipping? Use them after your own honour and dignity. The less they deserve, the more merit is in your bounty. Take them in.

Pol. Come, sirs.

[Exit. 559]

Ham. Follow him, friends; we'll hear a play to-morrow. [Exit all the Players but the First.] Dost thou hear me, old friend? Can you play "The Murder of Gonzago"?"

1. Play. Ay, my lord. 564

Ham. We'll ha' 't to-morrow night. You could, for a need, study a speech of some dozen or sixteen lines, which I would set down and insert in 't, could ye not?

1. Play. Ay, my lord. 569

Ham. Very well. Follow that lord,—and look you mock him not. [Exit 1. Player.] My good friends, I'll leave you till night. You are welcome to Elsinore.

Ros. Good my lord!

[Exit [Rosencrantz and Guilden-
stern.]]

Ham. Ay, so, God buy ye.—Now I am
alone. 575

O, what a rogue and peasant slave am I!

Is it not monstrous that this player here,
But in a fiction, in a dream of passion,
Could force his soul so to his own conceit
That from her working all his visage wann'd, 580
Tears in his eyes, distraction in 's aspect,
A broken voice, and his whole function suiting
With forms to his conceit? And all for nothing!

For Hecuba!

What's Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba, 585

That he should weep for her? What would he
do,

Had he the motive and the cue for passion
That I have? He would drown the stage with tears

And cleave the general ear with horrid speech,
Make mad the guilty and appall the free, 590
Confound the ignorant, and amaze indeed
The very faculty of eyes and ears.

Yet I,

A dull and muddy-mettled rascal, peak
Like John-a-dreams, unpregnant of my cause,
And can say nothing; no, not for a king, 595
Upon whose property and most dear life
A damn'd defeat was made. Am I a coward?
Who calls me villain, breaks my pate across,
Plucks off my beard and blows it in my face, 600
Tweaks me by the nose, gives me the lie i' the throat

As deep as to the lungs, who does me this?

Ha!

[SOUNDS.] I should take it; for it cannot be
But I am pigeon-liver'd and lack gall 605
To make oppression bitter, or ere this
I should have fatted all the region kites
With this slave's offal. Bloody, bawdy villain!
Remorseless, treacherous, lecherous, kindless villain!

O, vengeance!

610

Why, what an ass am I! Sure, this is most brave,

That I, the son of a dear father murdered,
Prompted to my revenge by heaven and hell,
Must, like a whore, unpack my heart with
words,

And fall a-cursing, like a very drab, 615
A scullion!

Fie upon 't! Foh! About, my brain! I have heard

That guilty creatures sitting at a play
Have by the very cunning of the scene
Been struck so to the soul that presently 620
They have proclaim'd their malefactions;
For murder, though it have no tongue, will
speak

With most miraculous organ. I'll have these players

Play something like the murder of my father
Before mine uncle. I'll observe his looks; 625
I'll tent him to the quick. If he but blench,
I know my course. The spirit that I have seen
May be the devil; and the devil hath power
To assume a pleasing shape; yea, and perhaps
Out of my weakness and my melancholy, 630
As he is very potent with such spirits, Abuses me to damn me. I'll have grounds

but if you mouth it, as many of your players do, I had as lief the town-crier spoke my lines. Nor do not saw the air too much with your hand, thus, but use all gently; for in the very [5] torrent, tempest, and, as I may say, the whirlwind of passion, you must acquire and beget a temperance that may give it smoothness. O, it offends me to the soul to see a robustious periwig-pated fellow tear a passion to tatters, to [10] very rags, to split the ears of the groundlings, who for the most part are capable of nothing but inexplicable dumb-shows and noise. I could have such a fellow whipp'd for o'erdoing Termagant. It out-herods Herod. Pray you, avoid it. 16

1. Play. I warrant your honour.

Ham. Be not too tame neither, but let your own discretion be your tutor. Suit the action to the word, the word to the action; with this [20] special observance, that you o'erstep not the modesty of nature. For anything so overdone is from the purpose of playing, whose end, both at the first and now, was and is, to hold, as heaven, the mirror up to nature; to show virtue her own feature, scorn her own image, and [25] the very age and body of the time his form and pressure. Now this overdone, or come tardy off, though it make the unskilful laugh, cannot but make the judicious grieve; the censure of the which one must, in your allowance, o'erweigh [30] a whole theatre of others. O, there be players that I have seen play, and heard others praise, and that highly, not to speak it profanely, that, neither having the accent of Christians nor the gait of Christian, pagan, nor man, have so [35] strutted and bellowed that I have thought some of Nature's journeymen had made men and not made them well, they imitated humanity so abominably. 41

1. Play. I hope we have reform'd that indifferently with us, sir. 41

Ham. O, reform it altogether. And let those that play your clowns speak no more than is set down for them; for there be of them that will themselves laugh to set on some quantity of barren spectators to laugh too, though in [45] the mean time some necessary question of the play be then to be considered. That's villainous, and shows a most pitiful ambition in the fool that uses it. Go, make you ready. 50

[Exeunt Players.]

Enter POLONIUS, ROSENCRANTZ, and GUILDENSTERN.

How now, my lord! Will the King hear this piece of work?

Pol. And the Queen too, and that presently.

Ham. Bid the players make haste.

[Exit Polonius.]

Will you two help to hasten them?

Ros. } We will, my lord.
Guil. }

[Exeunt Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.]

Ham. What ho! Horatio.

Enter HORATIO.

Hor. Here, sweet lord, at your service.

Ham. Horatio, thou art e'en as just a man As e'er my conversation cop'd withal. 60

Hor. O, my dear lord, —

Ham. Nay, do not think I flatter. For what advancement may I hope from thee That no revenue hast but thy good spirits To feed and clothe thee? Why should the poor be flatter'd? 65

No, let the candied tongue lick absurd pomp, And crook the pregnant hinges of the knee Where thrift may follow fawning. Dost thou hear? 70

Since my dear soul was mistress of my choice, And could of men distinguish, her election Hath seal'd thee for herself; for thou hast been 75

As one, in suffering all, that suffers nothing. A man that Fortune's buffets and rewards Hath ta'en with equal thanks; and blest are those 80

Whose blood and judgement are so well commingled,

That they are not a pipe for Fortune's finger To sound what stop she please. Give me that man 85

That is not passion's slave, and I will wear him In my heart's core, ay, in my heart of heart, As I do thee. — Something too much of this. — There is a play to-night before the King. 90

One scene of it comes near the circumstance Which I have told thee of my father's death.

I prithee, when thou seest that act a-foot, Even with the very comment of thy soul Observe mine uncle. If his occulted guilt 95

Do not itself unkennel in one speech, It is a damned ghost that we have seen,

And my imaginations are as foul As Vulcan's stithy. Give him heedful note; 100

For I mine eyes will rivet to his face, And after we will both our judgements join To censure of his seeming. 105

Hor. Well, my lord.

If he steal aught the whilst this play is playing, And scape detecting, I will pay the theft.

Danish march. A flourish. Enter KING, QUEEN, POLONIUS, OPHELIA, ROSENCRANTZ, GUILDENSTERN, and other Lords attendant, with the guard carrying torches.

Ham. They are coming to the play; I must be idle. 95

Get you a place.

King. How fares our cousin Hamlet?

Ham. Excellent, i' faith, — of the chameleon's dish. I eat the air, promise-cramm'd. You cannot feed capons so. 100

King. I have nothing with this answer, Hamlet; these words are not mine.

Ham. No, nor mine now. [To Polonius.] My lord, you play'd once i' the university, you say? 105

Pol. That I did, my lord, and was accounted a good actor.

Ham. And what did you enact?

Pol. I did enact Julius Cæsar. I was kill'd i' the Capitol; Brutus kill'd me.

Ham. It was a brute part of him to kill so capital a calf there. Be the players ready? 111

Ros. Ay, my lord, they stay upon your patience.

Queen. Come hither, my good Hamlet, sit by me. 115

Ham. No, good mother, here's metal more attractive. [Lying down at Ophelia's feet.]

Pol. [To the King.] O, ho! do you mark that?

Ham. Lady, shall I lie in your lap?

Oph. No, my lord. 120

Ham. I mean, my head upon your lap?

Oph. Ay, my lord.

Ham. Do you think I meant country matters?

Oph. I think nothing, my lord.

Ham. That's a fair thought to lie between maid's legs. 125

Oph. What is, my lord?

Ham. Nothing.

Oph. You are merry, my lord.

Ham. Who, I? 130

Oph. Ay, my lord.

Ham. O God, your only jig-maker. What should a man do but be merry? For, look you, how cheerfully my mother looks, and my father died within 's two hours. 135

Oph. Nay, 't is twice two months, my lord.

Ham. So long? May then, let the devil wear black, for I'll have a suit of sables. O heavens! die two months ago, and not forgotten yet? Then there's hope a great man's memory may outlive his life half a year; but, by 'r 140 lady, he must build churches then, or else shall he suffer not thinking on, with the hobby-horse, whose epitaph is, "For, O, for, O, the hobby-horse is forgot." 145

Hautboys play. The dumb-show enters.

*Enter a King and Queen very lovingly, the Queen embracing him. She kneels and makes show of prostration unto him. He takes her up and declines his head upon her neck; lays him down upon a bank of flowers. She, seeing him asleep, leaves him. Anon comes in a fellow, takes off his crown, kisses it, and pours poison in the King's ears, and exit. The Queen returns, finds the King dead, and makes passionate action. The poisoner, with some two or three Mutes, comes in again, seeming to lament with her. The dead body is carried away. The poisoner woos the Queen with gifts; she seems loath and unwilling a while, but in the end accepts his love. [Exeunt.]*

Oph. What means this, my lord?

Ham. Marry, this is miching mallecho; that means mischief.

Oph. Belike this show imports the argument of the play? 150

Enter PROLOGUE.

Ham. We shall know by this fellow. The players cannot keep counsel, they'll tell all.

Oph. Will they tell us what this show meant?

Ham. Ay, or any show that you'll show him. Be not you asham'd to show, he'll not shame to tell you what it means. 155

Oph. You are naught, you are naught. I'll mark the play.

Pro. For us, and for our tragedy,

Here stooping to your clemency, 160

We beg your hearing patiently. [Exit.]

Ham. Is this a prologue, or the posy of a ring?

Oph. 'T is brief, my lord.

Ham. As woman's love.

Enter [two Players,] KING and his QUEEN.

P. King. Full thirty times hath Phœbus' cart gone round 165

Neptune's salt wash and Tellus' orb'd ground,
And thirty dozen moons with borrowed sheen
About the world have times twelve thirties been,

Since love our hearts and Hymen did our hands
Unite commutual in most sacred bands. 170

P. Queen. So many journeys may the sun and moon

Make us again count o'er ere love be done!

But, woe is me, you are so sick of late,
So far from cheer and from your former state,
That I distrust you. Yet, though I distrust, 175
Discomfort you, my lord, it nothing must;
For women's fear and love holds quantity,
In neither aught, or in extremity.

Now, what my love is, proof hath made you
know;

And as my love is siz'd, my fear is so. 180 [Where love is great, the littlest doubts are fear;

Where little fears grow great, great love grows
there.]

P. King. Faith, I must leave thee, love, and shortly too.

My operant powers their functions leave to do;
And thou shalt live in this fair world behind,
Honour'd, belov'd; and haply one as kind 185
For husband shalt thou—

P. Queen. O, confound the rest!
Such love must needs be treason in my breast!
In second husband let me be accurst!

None wed the second but who kill'd the first.

Ham. [Aside.] Wormwood, wormwood! 191

P. Queen. The instances that second marriage move

Are base respects of thrift, but none of love.

A second time I kill my husband dead,

When second husband kisses me in bed. 195

P. King. I do believe you think what now you speak,

But what we do determine oft we break.

Purpose is but the slave to memory,

Of violent birth, but poor validity;

Which now, like fruit unripe, sticks on the tree, 200

But fall unshaken when they mellow be.

Most necessary 't is that we forget

To pay ourselves what to ourselves is debt.

What to ourselves in passion we propose,

The passion ending, doth the purpose lose. 205
The violence of either grief or joy
Their own enactures with themselves destroy.
Where joy most revels, grief doth most lament;

Grief joys, joy grieves, on slender accident.
This world is not for aye, nor 't is not strange
That even our loves should with our fortunes change, 211

For 't is a question left us yet to prove,
Whether love lead fortune, or else fortune love.
The great man down, you mark his favourite
flies;

The poor advanc'd makes friends of enemies.
And hitherto doth love on fortune tend,
For who not needs shall never lack a friend;
And who in want a hollow friend doth try,
Directly seasons him his enemy.

But, orderly to end where I begun, 220
Our wills and fates do so contrary run
That our devices still are overthrown;
Our thoughts are ours, their ends none of our own.

So think thou wilt no second husband wed;
But die thy thoughts when thy first lord is
dead. 225

P. Queen. Nor earth to me give food, nor heaven light!

Sport and repose lock from me day and night!
[To desperation turn my trust and hope!
An anchor's cheer in prison be my scope!]
Each opposite that blanks the face of joy 230
Meet what I would have well and it destroy!
Both here and hence pursue me lasting strife,
If, once a widow, ever I be wife!

Ham. If she should break it now!

P. King. 'Tis deeply sworn. Sweet, leave me here a while. 235

My spirits grow dull, and fain I would beguile
The tedious day with sleep. [Sleeps.]

P. Queen. Sleep rock thy brain,
And never come mischance between us twain!

[Exit.]
Ham. Madam, how like you this play?

Queen. The lady protests too much, methinks. 240

Ham. O, but she'll keep her word.

King. Have you heard the argument? Is there no offence in 't?

Ham. No, no, they do but jest, poison in jest.
No offence 't the world. 245

King. What do you call the play?

Ham. The Mouse-trap. Marry, how? Tropi-cally. This play is the image of a murder done in Vienna. Gonzago is the duke's name; his wife, Baptista. You shall see anon. 'Tis a knaveish piece of work, but what o' that? 250
Your Majesty and we that have free souls, it touches us not. Let the gall'd jade wince, our withers are unwrung.

Enter LUCIANUS.

This is one Lucianus, nephew to the king.

Oph. You are a good chorus, my lord. 255

Ham. I could interpret between you and your love, if I could see the puppets dallying.

Oph. You are keen, my lord, you are keen.

Ham. It would cost you a groaning to take off my edge. 260

Oph. Still better, and worse.

Ham. So you mistake your husbands. Begin, murderer; pox, leave thy damnable faces and begin. Come, "the croaking raven doth bellow for revenge." 265

Luc. Thoughts black, hands apt, drugs fit, and time agreeing;

Confederate season, else no creature seeing.
Thou mixture rank, of midnight weeds collected,

With Hecate's ban thrice blasted, thrice infected,

Thy natural magic and dire property
On wholesome life usurp immediately. 270

[Pours the poison in [to the sleeper's] ears.]

Ham. He poisons him i' the garden for 's estate. His name's Gonzago; the story is extant, and writ in choice Italian. You shall see anon how the murderer gets the love of Gonzago's wife. 275

Oph. The King rises.

Ham. What, frightened with false fire?

Queen. How fares my lord?

Pol. Give o'er the play.

King. Give me some light. Away! 280

All. Lights, lights, lights!

[Exit all but Hamlet and Horatio.]

Ham. Why, let the stricken deer go weep,
The hart ungalled play;

For some must watch, while some must sleep,—

So runs the world away. 285

Would not this, sir, and a forest of feathers—
if the rest of my fortunes turn Turk with me—with two Provincial roses on my raz'd shoes, get me a fellowship in a cry of players, sir?

Hor. Half a share. 290

Ham. A whole one, I.

For thou dost know, O Damon dear,

This realm dismantled was

Of Jove himself; and now reigns here
A very, very—pajock, ase — meant to be 295

Hor. You might have rhym'd.

Ham. O good Horatio, I'll take the ghost's word for a thousand pound. Didst perceive?

Hor. Very well, my lord.

Ham. Upon the talk of the poisoning? 300

Hor. I did very well note him.

Re-enter ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN.

Ham. Ah, ha! Come, some music! Come,
the recorders!

For if the king like not the comedy,

Why then, belike, he likes it not, perdy. 305
Come, some music!

Guil. Good my lord, vouchsafe me a word
with you.

Ham. Sir, a whole history.

Guil. The King, sir, — 310

Ham. Ay, sir, what of him?

Guil. Is in his retirement marvellous distem-per'd. ick

Ham. With drink, sir?

Guil. No, my lord, rather with choler. 315

distempered

Ham. Your wisdom should show itself more richer to signify this to his doctor; for, for me to put him in this purgation would perhaps plunge him into far more choler. 319

Guil. Good my lord, put your discourse into some frame, and start not so wildly from my affair.

Ham. I am tame, sir; pronounce.

Guil. The Queen, your mother, in most great affliction of spirit, hath sent me to you.

Ham. You are welcome. 325

Guil. Nay, good my lord, this courtesy is not of the right breed. If it shall please you to make me a wholesome answer I will do your mother's commandment; if not, your pardon and my return shall be the end of my business.

Ham. Sir, I cannot. 331

Guil. What, my lord?

Ham. Make you a wholesome answer. My wit's diseased. But, sir, such answers as I can make, you shall command, or, rather, as you say, my mother. Therefore no more, but to the matter. My mother, you say,— 337

Ros. Then thus she says: your behaviour hath struck her into amazement and admiration.

Ham. O wonderful son, that can so astonish a mother! But is there no sequel at the heels of this mother's admiration? [Impart.] 342

Ros. She desires to speak with you in her closet ere you go to bed.

Ham. We shall obey, were she ten times our mother. Have you any further trade with us? 348

Ros. My lord, you once did love me.

Ham. So I do still, by these pickers and stealers. 349

Ros. Good my lord, what is your cause of distemper? You do surely bar the door upon your own liberty if you deny your griefs to your friend.

Ham. Sir, I lack advancement. 354

Ros. How can that be, when you have the voice of the King himself for your succession in Denmark?

Ham. Ay, but "While the grass grows,"—the proverb is something musty. 359

Re-enter one with a recorder.

O, the recorder! Let me see.—To withdraw with you:—why do you go about to recover the wind of me, as if you would drive me into a toil?

Guil. O, my lord, if my duty be too bold, my love is too unmanly. 364

Ham. I do not well understand that. Will you play upon this pipe?

Guil. My lord, I cannot.

Ham. I pray you.

Guil. Believe me, I cannot.

Ham. I do beseech you. 370

Guil. I know no touch of it, my lord.

Ham. 'Tis as easy as lying. Govern these ventages with your finger and thumb, give it breath with your mouth, and it will discourse most excellent music. Look you, these are the stops, 376

Guil. But these cannot I command to any utterance of harmony. I have not the skill.

Ham. Why, look you now, how unworthy a thing you make of me! You would play upon me, you would seem to know my stops, you would pluck out the heart of my mystery, you would sound me from my lowest note to the top of my compass; and there is much music, excellent voice, in this little organ, yet cannot you make it [speak. 'Shlood,'] 385 do you think that I am easier to be play'd on than a pipe? Call me what instrument you will, though you can fret me, you cannot play upon me.

Enter POLONIUS.

God bless you, sir. 390

Pol. My lord, the Queen would speak with you, and presently.

Ham. Do you see that cloud that's almost in shape like a camel?

Pol. By the mass, and it's like a camel, indeed. 395

Ham. Methinks it is like a weasel.

Pol. It is back'd like a weasel.

Ham. Or like a whale?

Pol. Very like a whale. 399

Ham. Then will I come to my mother by and by. [Aside.] They fool me to the top of my bent.—I will come by and by.

Pol. I will say so. [Exit.]

Ham. "By and by" is easily said. Leave me, friends. [Exit all but Hamlet.] 405 'Tis now the very witching time of night When churchyards yawn and hell itself breathes out Contagion to this world. Now could I drink hot blood,

And do such bitter business as the day Would quake to look on. Soft! now to my mother. 410

O heart, lose not thy nature! Let not ever The soul of Nero enter this firm bosom; Let me be cruel, not unnatural. I will speak daggers to her, but use none. My tongue and soul in this be hypocrites; 415 How in my words soever she be shent To give them seals never, my soul, consent! [Exit.]

[SCENE III. A room in the castle.]

Enter KING, ROSENCRANTZ, and GUILDENSTERN.

King. I like him not, nor stands it safe with us To let his madness range. Therefore prepare you.

I your commission will forthwith dispatch, And he to England shall along with you. The terms of our estate may not endure Hazard so dangerous as doth hourly grow Out of his lunacies.

Guil. We will ourselves provide. Most holy and religious fear it is To keep those many many bodies safe That live and feed upon your Majesty. 420

Ros. The single and peculiar life is bound
With all the strength and armour of the mind
To keep itself from noyance, but much more
That spirit upon whose weal depends and rests
The lives of many. The cease of majesty
Dies not alone, but, like a gulf, doth draw
What's near it with it. It is a massy wheel,
Fixed on the summit of the highest mount,
To whose huge spokes ten thousand lesser things
Are mortis'd and adjoin'd; which, when it falls,
Each small annexment, petty consequence,
Attends the boisterous ruin. Never alone
Did the King sigh, but with a general groan.

King. Arm you, I pray you, to this speedy voyage,
For we will fetters put upon this fear,
Which now goes too free-footed.

Ros. We will haste us.
Guil. }
[*Exeunt Rosencrantz and Guilden-
stern.*]

Enter POLONIUS.

Pol. My lord, he's going to his mother's closet.
Behind the arras I'll convey myself,
To hear the process. I'll warrant she'll tax him home;
And, as you said, and wisely was it said,
'Tis meet that some more audience than a
mother,
Since nature makes them partial, should o'er-
hear
The speech, of vantage. Fare you well, my liege.
I'll call upon you ere you go to bed,
And tell you what I know.

King. Thanks, dear my lord.
[Exit Polonius.]

O, my offence is rank, it smells to heaven;
It hath the primal eldest curse upon 't,
A brother's murder. Pray can I not,
Though inclination be as sharp as will.
My stronger guilt defeats my strong intent,
And, like a man to double business bound,
I stand in pause where I shall first begin,
And both neglect. What if this cursed hand
Were thicker than itself with brother's blood,
Is there not rain enough in the sweet heavens
To wash it white as snow? Whereto serves mercy

But to confront the visage of offence?
And what's in prayer but this twofold force,
To be forestalled ere we come to fall,
Or pardon'd being down? Then I'll look up;
My fault is past. But, O, what form of prayer
Can serve my turn? "Forgive me my foul murder"?

That cannot be; since I am still possess'd
Of those effects for which I did the murder,
My crown, mine own ambition, and my queen.
May one be pardon'd and retain the offence?
In the corrupted currents of this world
Offence's gilded hand may shove by justice,
And oft 'tis seen the wicked prize itself

Buys out the law. But 'tis not so above.
There is no shuffling, there the action lies
In his true nature; and we ourselves compell'd,

Even to the teeth and forehead of our faults,
To give in evidence. What then? What rests?
Try what repentance can. What can it not?
Yet what can it when one cannot repent?
O wretched state! O bosom black as death!
O limed soul, that, struggling to be free, Art more engag'd! Help, angels! Make as-
say!

Bow, stubborn knees, and, heart with strings
of steel,
Be soft as sinews of the new-born babe!
All may be well. [Retires and kneels.]

Enter HAMLET.

Ham. Now might I do it pat, now he is praying.
And now I'll do 't.—And so he goes to
heaven;

And so am I reveng'd. That would be scann'd.
A villain kills my father, and for that,
I, his sole son, do this same villain send
To heaven.

Oh, this is hire and salary, not revenge.
He took my father grossly, full of bread,
With all his crimes broad blown, as flush as May;

And how his audit stands who knows save
Heaven?
But in our circumstance and course of thought
'Tis heavy with him. And am I then re-veng'd,

To take him in the purging of his soul,
When he is fit and season'd for his passage?
No!
Up, sword, and know thou a more horrid
hent.

When he is drunk asleep, or in his rage,
Or in the incestuous pleasure of his bed,
At gaming, swearing, or about some act
That has no relish of salvation in 't,— Then trip him, that his heels may kick at
heaven,

And that his soul may be as damn'd and black
As hell, whereto it goes. My mother stays.
This physie but prolongs thy sickly days.

[Exit.]
King. [Rising.] My words fly up, my thoughts remain below.

Words without thoughts never to heaven go.
[Exit.]

[SCENE IV. The Queen's closet.]

Enter QUEEN and POLONIUS.

Pol. He will come straight. Look you lay home to him.
Tell him his pranks have been too broad to bear with,
And that your Grace hath screen'd and stood between
Much heat and him. I'll silence me e'en here.
Pray you, be round with him.

Ham. (Within.) Mother, mother, mother!

Queen. I'll warrant you, fear me not. Withdraw, I hear him coming.

[Polonius hides behind the arras.]

Enter HAMLET.

Ham. Now, mother, what's the matter?

Queen. Hamlet, thou hast thy father much offended.

Ham. Mother, you have my father much offended.

Queen. Come, come, you answer with an idle tongue.

Ham. Go, go, you question with a wicked tongue.

Queen. Why, how now, Hamlet!

Ham. What's the matter now?

Queen. Have you forgot me?

Ham. No, by the rood, not so. You are the Queen, your husband's brother's wife;

But would you were not so! You are my mother.

Queen. Nay, then, I'll set those to you that can speak.

Ham. Come, come, and sit you down. You shall not budge.

You go not till I set you up a glass

Where you may see the inmost part of you.

Queen. What wilt thou do? Thou wilt not murder me?

Help, help, ho!

Pol. [Behind.] What, ho! help, help, help!

Ham. [Drawing.] How now! A rat? Dead, for a ducat, dead!

[Kills Polonius [through the arras].]

Pol. [Behind.] O, I am slain!

Queen. O me, what hast thou done?

Ham. Nay, I know not.

Is it the King?

Queen. O, what a rash and bloody deed is this!

Ham. A bloody deed! Almost as bad, good mother,

As kill a king, and marry with his brother.

Queen. As kill a king!

Ham. Ay, lady. 't was my word.

[Lifts up the arras and discovers Polonius.]

Thou wretched, rash, intruding fool, farewell!

I took thee for thy better. Take thy fortune.

Thou find'st to be too busy is some danger.

—Leave wringing of your hands. Peace! Sit you down,

And let me wring your heart; for so I shall, if it be made of penetrable stuff,

If damned custom have not braz'd it so

That it is proof and bulwark against sense.

Queen. What have I done, that thou dar'st wag thy tongue

In noise so rude against me?

Ham. Such an act

That blurs the grace and blush of modesty,

Calls virtue hypocrite, takes off the rose

From the fair forehead of an innocent love

And sets a blister there, makes marriage-vows

As false as dicers' oaths; O, such a deed

As from the body of contraction plucks

The very soul, and sweet religion makes
A rhapsody of words. Heaven's face doth glow,

Yea, this solidity and compound mass,
With tristful visage, as against the doom,
Is thought-sick at the act.

Queen. Ay me, what act,
That roars so loud and thunders in the index?

Ham. Look here, upon this picture, and on this,

The counterfeited presentment of two brothers.

See, what a grace was seated on this brow:

Hyperion's curls, the front of Jove himself,

An eye like Mars, to threaten or command,

A station like the herald Mercury

New-lighted on a heaven-kissing hill,

A combination and a form indeed,

Where every god did seem to set his seal,

To give the world assurance of a man.

This was your husband. Look you now what follows:

Here is your husband, like a mildew'd ear,
Blasting his wholesome brother. Have you eyes?

Could you on this fair mountain leave to feed,
And batten on this moor? Ha! have you eyes?

You cannot call it love, for at your age

The hey-day in the blood is tame, it's humble,

And waits upon the judgement; and what judgement

Would step from this to this? [Sense sure you have,

Else could you not have motion; but sure, that sense

Is apoplex'd; for madness would not err,

Nor sense to ecstasy was ne'er so thrall'd

But it reserv'd some quantity of choice,

To serve in such a difference.] What devil was 't

That thus hath cozen'd you at hoodman-blind?

[Eyes without feeling, feeling without sight,

Ears without hands or eyes, smelling sans all,

Or but a sickly part of one true sense

Could not so mope.]

O shame! where is thy blush? Rebellious hell,

If thou canst mutine in a matron's bones,

To flaming youth let virtue be as wax,

And melt in her own fire. Proclaim no shame

When the compulsive ardour gives the charge,

Since frost itself as actively doth burn

And reason panders will.

Queen. O Hamlet, speak no more!

Thou turn'st mine eyes into my very soul,

And there I see such black and grained spots

As will not leave their tinct.

Ham. Nay, but to live
In the rank sweat of an enseamed bed,

Stew'd in corruption, honeying and making love

Over the nasty sty, —

Queen. O, speak to me no more!

These words like daggers enter in mine ears.

No more, sweet Hamlet!

Ham. A murderer and a villain!

A slave that is not twentieth part the tithe

Of your precedent lord! A vice of kings!

A cutpurse of the empire and the rule,

That from a shelf the precious diadem stole,
And put it in his pocket!

Queen. No more!

Enter GHOST.

Ham. A king of shreds and patches, —
Save me, and hover o'er me with your wings,
You heavenly guards! What would your gracious figure?

Queen. Alas, he's mad! 105

Ham. Do you not come your tardy son to chide,

That, laps'd in time and passion, lets go by
The important acting of your dread command?
O, say!

Ghost. Do not forget! This visitation 110
Is but to whet thy almost blunted purpose.
But, look, amazement on thy mother sits.
O, step between her and her fighting soul.
Conceit in weakest bodies strongest works.
Speak to her, Hamlet.

Ham. How is it with you, lady?

Queen. Alas, how is't with you, 115

That you do bend your eye on vacancy
And with the incorporal air do hold discourse?
Forth at your eyes your spirits wildly peep,
And, as the sleeping soldiers in the alarm, 120
Your bedded hair, like life in excrements,
Start up and stand on end. O gentle son,
Upon the heat and flame of thy distemper
Sprinkle cool patience. Whereon do you look?

Ham. On him, on him! Look you, how pale he glares! 125

His form and cause conjoin'd, preaching to stones,

Would make them capable. Do not look upon
me,

Lest with this piteous action you convert
My stern effects; then what I have to do Will want true colour, tears perchance for
blood. 130

Queen. To whom do you speak this?

Ham. Do you see nothing there?

Queen. Nothing at all, yet all that is I see.

Ham. Nor did you nothing hear?

Queen. No, nothing but ourselves.

Ham. Why, look you there! Look, how it steals away!

My father, in his habit as he lived! 135

Look, where he goes, even now, out at the portal! [Exit Ghost.]

Queen. This is the very coinage of your brain.
This bodiless creation ecstasy
Is very cunning in.

Ham. Ecstasy!

My pulse, as yours, doth temperately keep
time, 140

And makes as healthful music. It is not madness

That I have uttered. Bring me to the test,
And I the matter will re-word, which madness
Would gambol from. Mother, for love of grace,
Lay not that flattering unction to your soul, 145
That not your trespass, but my madness speaks.
It will but skin and film the ulcerous place,
Whilst rank corruption, mining all within,
Infects unseen. Confess yourself to Heaven;

Repent what's past, avoid what is to come, 150
And do not spread the compost on the weeds,
To make them rank. Forgive me this my virtue.
For in the fatness of these pursy times
Virtue itself of vice must pardon beg,
Yea, curb and woo for leave to do him good. 155
Queen. O Hamlet, thou hast cleft my heart in twain.

Ham. O, throw away the worse part of it,
And live the purer with the other half.
Good-night; but go not to mine uncle's bed.

Assume a virtue, if you have it not. 160
[That monster, custom, who all sense doth eat,
Of habits devil, is angel yet in this,

That to the use of actions fair and good
He likewise gives a frock or livery,

That aptly is put on.] Refrain to-night, 165
And that shall lend a kind of easiness
To the next abstinence; [the next more easy;

For use almost can change the stamp of nature,
And either master the devil or throw him out,

With wondrous potency.] Once more, good-
night; 170

And when you are desirous to be blest,
I'll blessing beg of you. For this same lord,

[Pointing to Polonius.]
I do repent; but Heaven hath pleas'd it so,

To punish me with this and this with me,
That I must be their scourge and minister. 175

I will bestow him, and will answer well
The death I gave him. So, again, good-night.

I must be cruel, only to be kind.
Thus bad begins and worse remains behind.

[One word more, good lady.]

Queen. What shall I do?

Ham. Not this, by no means, that I bid you
do: 181

Let the bloat king tempt you again to bed,
Pinch wanton on your cheek, call you his mouse,

And let him, for a pair of reechy kisses,
Or paddling in your neck with his damn'd fingers, 185

Make you to ravel all this matter out,
That I essentially am not in madness,
But mad in craft. 'Twere good you let him

know;
For who, that's but a queen, fair, sober, wise,
Would from a paddock, from a bat, a gib, 190
Such dear concernings hide? Who would do so?

No, in despite of sense and secrecy,
Unpeg the basket on the house's top,
Let the birds fly, and like the famous ape,

To try conclusions, in the basket creep, 195
And break your own neck down.

Queen. Be thou assur'd, if words be made of breath,

And breath of life, I have no life to breathe
What thou hast said to me.

Ham. I must to England; you know that?

Queen. Alack,
I had forgot. 'Tis so concluded on. 201

Ham. [There's letters sealed, and my two school-fellows,

Whom I will trust as I will adders fang'd,
They bear the mandate. They must sweep my way,

And marshal me to knavery. Let it work; 205
For 't is the sport to have the engineer
Hoist with his own petar; and 't shall go hard
But I will delve one yard below their mines,
And blow them at the moon. O, 't is most sweet,

When in one line two crafts directly meet.] 210
This man shall set me packing.
I'll lug the guts into the neighbour room.
Mother, good-night. Indeed this counsellor
Is now most still, most secret, and most grave,
Who was in life a foolish prating knave. 215
Come, sir, to draw toward an end with you.
Good-night, mother.

[Exeunt [severally,] Hamlet tugging in Polonius.]

[ACT IV]

[SCENE I. A room in the castle.]

Enter KING [QUEEN, Rosencrantz, and Guildenstern].

King. There's matter in these sighs; these profound heaves
You must translate; 't is fit we understand
them.

Where is your son?

Queen. Bestow this place on us a little while.]

[Exeunt Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.]

Ah, my good lord, what have I seen to-night! 5

King. What, Gertrude? How does Hamlet?

Queen. Mad as the seas and wind, when both contend

Which is the mightier. In his lawless fit,
Behind the arras hearing something stir,
He whips his rapier out, and cries, "A rat, a rat!" 10

And, in his brainish apprehension, kills
The unseen good old man.

King. O heavy deed!

It had been so with us, had we been there.
His liberty is full of threats to all,
To you yourself, to us, to every one. 15
Alas, how shall this bloody deed be answered?
It will be laid to us, whose providence
Should have kept short, restrain'd, and out of haunt,

This mad young man. But so much was our
love,

We would not understand what was most fit, 20
But, like the owner of a foul disease,
To keep it from divulging, let it feed
Even on the pith of life. Where is he gone?

Queen. To draw apart the body he hath kill'd,
O'er whom his very madness, like some ore 25
Among a mineral of metals base,
Shows itself pure; he weeps for what is done.

King. O Gertrude, come away!

The sun no sooner shall the mountains touch,
But we will ship him hence, and this vile deed
We must, with all our majesty and skill, 31
Both countenance and excuse. Ho, Guildenstern!

[Re-enter Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.]

Friends both, go join you with some further aid.

Hamlet in madness hath Polonius slain,
And from his mother's closet hath he dragg'd
him. 35

Go seek him out; speak fair, and bring the body

Into the chapel. I pray you, haste in this.

[Exeunt Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.]

Come, Gertrude, we'll call up our wisest
friends

To let them know both what we mean to do
And what 's untimely done; [so, haply, slander]
[Whose whisper o'er the world's diameter, 41
As level as the cannon to his blank, Transports his poisoned shot, may miss our
name,

And hit the woundless air.] O, come away!

My soul is full of discord and dismay. 45
[Exeunt.]

[SCENE II. Another room in the castle.]

Enter HAMLET.

Ham. Safely stowed.

Ros. } (Within.) Hamlet! Lord Hamlet!

Guild. }
Ham. What noise? Who calls on Hamlet?

O, here they come.

Enter ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN.

Ros. What have you done, my lord, with the dead body?

Ham. Compounded it with dust, whereto
't is kin.

Ros. Tell us where 't is, that we may take it thence

And bear it to the chapel.

Ham. Do not believe it.

Ros. Believe what? 10

Ham. That I can keep your counsel and not mine own. Besides, to be demanded of a sponge! What replication should be made by the son of a king?

Ros. Take you me for a sponge, my lord? 15

Ham. Ay, sir, that soaks up the King's countenance, his rewards, his authorities. But such officers do the King best service in the end. He keeps them, as an ape doth nuts, in the corner of his jaw; first mouth'd, to be last swallowed. When he needs what you have glean'd, it is but squeezing you, and, sponge, you shall be dry again. 23

Ros. I understand you not, my lord.

Ham. I am glad of it. A knavish speech sleeps in a foolish ear.

Ros. My lord, you must tell us where the body is, and go with us to the King. 28

Ham. The body is with the King, but the King is not with the body. The King is a thing—

Guild. A thing, my lord!

Ham. Of nothing. Bring me to him. Hide fox, and all after. 33
[Exeunt.]

[SCENE III. Another room in the castle.]

Enter KING [and two or three].

King. I have sent to seek him, and to find the body.

How dangerous is it that this man goes loose! Yet must not we put the strong law on him. He's lov'd of the distracted multitude, Who like not in their judgement, but their eyes, And where 'tis so, the offender's scourge is weigh'd, But never the offence. To bear all smooth and even, This sudden sending him away must seem Deliberate pause. Diseases desperate grown By desperate appliance are relieved, Or not at all.

Enter ROSENCRANTZ.

How now! What hath befallen?

Ros. Where the dead body is bestow'd, my lord,

We cannot get from him.

King. But where is he?

Ros. Without, my lord, guarded, to know your pleasure.

King. Bring him before us.

Ros. Ho, Guildenstern! bring in my lord.

Enter HAMLET and Guildenstern.

King. Now, Hamlet, where's Polonius?

Ham. At supper.

King. At supper! Where?

Ham. Not where he eats, but where he is eaten. A certain convocation of [politic] worms are e'en at him. Your worm is your only emperor for diet. We fat all creatures else to fat us, and we fat ourselves for maggots. Your fat king and your lean beggar is but variable service, two dishes, but to one table; that's the end.

[King. Alas, alas!]

Ham. A man may fish with the worm that hath eat of a king, and eat of the fish that hath fed of that worm.]

King. What dost thou mean by this?

Ham. Nothing but to show you how a king may go a progress through the guts of a beggar.

King. Where is Polonius?

Ham. In heaven; send thither to see. If your messenger find him not there, seek him i' the other place yourself. But indeed, if you find him not [within] this month, you shall nose him as you go up the stairs into the lobby.

King. Go seek him there.

[To some Attendants.]

Ham. He will stay till ye come.

[Exit Attendants.]

King. Hamlet, this deed of thine, for thine especial safety,—

Which we do tender, as we dearly grieve For that which thou hast done,—must send thee hence

With fiery quickness; therefore prepare thyself. The bark is ready, and the wind at help, The associates tend, and everything is bent For England.

Ham. For England?

King.

Ay, Hamlet.

Ham.

Good.

King. So is it, if thou knew'st our purposes. Ham. I see a cherub that sees them. But, come, for England! Farewell, dear mother.

King. Thy loving father, Hamlet.

Ham. My mother. Father and mother is man and wife, man and wife is one flesh, and so, my mother. Come, for England! [Exit.]

King. Follow him at foot, tempt him with speed aboard.

Delay it not; I'll have him hence to-night.

Away! for everything is seal'd and done

That else leans on the affair. Pray you, make haste.

[Exit Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.]

And, England, if my love thou hold'st at aught,—

As my great power thereof may give thee sense, Since yet thy cicatrice looks raw and red After the Danish sword, and thy free awe Pays homage to us—thou mayst not coldly set Our sovereign process, which imports at full, By letters conjuring to that effect, The present death of Hamlet. Do it, England; For like the hectic in my blood he rages, And thou must cure me. Till I know 't is done, Howe'er my haps, my joys were ne'er begun. [Exit.]

[SCENE IV. A plain in Denmark.]

Enter FORTINBRAS, [a CAPTAIN,] and army, [marching].

For. Go, captain, from me greet the Danish king.

Tell him that, by his license, Fortinbras Claims the conveyance of a promis'd march Over his kingdom. You know the rendezvous. If that his Majesty would aught with us, We shall express our duty in his eye; And let him know so.

Cap.

I will do 't, my lord.

For. Go softly on.

[Exit Fortinbras [and Soldiers].]

[Enter HAMLET, ROSENCRANTZ, and others.]

Ham. Good sir, whose powers are these?

Cap. They are of Norway, sir.

Ham.. How purpos'd, sir, I pray you?

Cap. Against some part of Poland.

Ham. Who commands them, sir?

Cap. The nephew to old Norway, Fortinbras.

Ham. Goes it against the main of Poland, sir,

Or for some frontier?

Cap. Truly to speak, and with no addition, We go to gain a little patch of ground That hath in it no profit but the name. To pay five ducats, five, I would not farm it; Nor will it yield to Norway or the Pole A ranker rate, should it be sold in fee.

Ham. Why, then the Polack never will defend it.

Cap. Yes, it is already garrison'd.
 Ham. Two thousand souls and twenty thousand ducats — 25
 Will not debate the question of this straw.
 This is the imposthume of much wealth and peace,
 That inward breaks, and shows no cause without
 Why the man dies. I humbly thank you, sir.
 Cap. God buy you, sir. [Exit.]
 Ros. Will 't please you go, my lord? 30
 Ham. I'll be with you straight. Go a little before. [Exeunt all except Hamlet.]
 How all occasions do inform against me,
 And spur my dull revenge! What is a man,
 If his chief good and market of his time
 Be but to sleep and feed? A beast, no more. 35
 Sure, He that made us with such large discourse, Looking before and after, gave us not
 That capability and god-like reason
 To fast in us unus'd. Now, whether it be Bestial oblivion, or some craven scruple 40
 Of thinking too precisely on the event, —
 A thought which, quarter'd, hath but one part wisdom
 And ever three parts coward, — I do not know
 Why yet I live to say, "This thing's to do,"
 Sith I have cause and will and strength and means 45
 To do't. Examples gross as earth exhort me;
 Witness this army of such mass and charge
 Led by a delicate and tender prince,
 Whose spirit with divine ambition puff'd
 Makes mouths at the invisible event, 50
 Exposing what is mortal and unsure
 To all that fortune, death, and danger dare, Even for an egg-shell. Rightly to be great
 Is not to stir without great argument,
 But greatly to find quarrel in a straw 55
 When honour's at the stake. How stand I then,
 That have a father kill'd, a mother stain'd,
 Excitements of my reason and my blood,
 And let all sleep, while to my shame I see
 The imminent death of twenty thousand men,
 That for a fantasy and trick of fame 61
 Go to their graves like beds, fight for a plot
 Whereon the numbers cannot try the cause,
 Which is not mot enough and continent
 To hide the slain? O, from this time forth, 65
 My thoughts be bloody, or be nothing worth!

[Exit.]

[SCENE V. Elsinore. A room in the castle.]

Enter QUEEN, HORATIO [and a GENTLEMAN].

Queen. I will not speak with her.
 [Gent.] She is importunate, indeed distract.
 Her mood will needs be pitied.
 Queen. What would she have?
 [Gent.] She speaks much of her father; says she hears
 There's tricks i' the world, and hems, and beats her heart, 5
 Spurns enviously at straws, speaks things in doubt

double-meaning

That carry but half sense. Her speech is nothing,
 Yet the unshaped use of it doth move
 The hearers to collection. They aim at it And botch the words up fit to their own thoughts; 10
 Which, as her winks, and nods, and gestures yield them,
 Indeed would make one think there would be thought,
 Though nothing sure, yet much unhappily.
 [Hor.] 'T were good she were spoken with,
 for she may strew
 Dangerous conjectures in ill-breeding minds. 15
 Let her come in. [Exit Gentleman.]
 Queen. [Aside.] To my sick soul, as sin's true nature is,
 Each toy seems prologue to some great amiss;
 So full of artless jealousy is guilt,
 It spills itself in fearing to be spilt. 20

Enter OPHELIA, distracted.

Oph. Where is the beauteous majesty of Denmark?
 Queen. How now, Ophelia!
 Oph. [Sings.]
 How should I your true love know
 From another one?
 By his cockle hat and staff, 25
 And his sandal shoon."
 Queen. Alas, sweet lady, what imports this song?
 Oph. Say you? Nay, pray you, mark.
 [Sings.] "He is dead and gone, lady,
 He is dead and gone; 30
 At his head a grass-green turf
 At his heels a stone."

Enter KING.

Queen. Nay, but, Ophelia, —
 Oph. Pray you, mark.
 [Sings.] "White his shroud as the mountain
 snow," — 35
 Queen. Alas, look here, my lord.
 Oph. [Sings.]
 "Larded with sweet flowers;
 Which bewept to the grave did not go
 With true-love showers."
 King. How do you, pretty lady? 40
 Oph. Well, God 'ild you! They say the owl was a baker's daughter. Lord, we know what we are, but know not what we may be. God be at your table!

King. Conceit upon her father. 45

Oph. Pray you, let's have no words of this,
 but when they ask you what it means, say you
 this:

[Sings.] "To-morrow is Saint Valentine's day,
 All in the morning betime,
 And I a maid at your window, 50
 To be your Valentine."

"Then up he rose and donn'd his clothes,
 And dupp'd the chamber door;
 Let in the maid, that out a maid
 Never departed more." 55

King. Pretty Ophelia!

Oph. Indeed, la, without an oath I'll make an end on't.

"By gis, and by Saint Charity,

Alack! and, Fie for shame!" 60

Young men will do 't, if they come to 't;

By Cock, they are to blame.

"Quoth she, 'Before you tumbled me,
You promis'd me to wed.'

'So would I ha' done, by yonder sun,

An thou hadst not come to my bed.' "

King. How long hath she been thus?

Oph. I hope all will be well. We must be patient; but I cannot choose but weep, to think they should lay him i' the cold ground.

My brother shall know of it; and so I thank [70] you for your good counsel. Come, my coach! Good-night, ladies; good-night, sweet ladies; good-night, good-night. [Exit.]

King. Follow her close; give her good watch, I pray you. [Exeunt some.] 75

O, this is the poison of deep grief; it springs All from her father's death. O Gertrude, Gertrude,

When sorrows come, they come not single spies,

But in battalions. First, her father slain; 70

Next, your son gone; and he most violent author Of his own just remove; the people muddled,

Thick and unwholesome in their thoughts and whispers,

For good Polonius' death; and we have done but greenly

In hugger-mugger to inter him; poor Ophelia Divided from herself and her fair judgement, 65

Without the which we are pictures, or mere beasts;

Last, and as much containing as all these, Her brother is in secret come from France,

Feeds on his wonder, keeps himself in clouds, And wants not buzzers to infect his ear 90

With pestilent speeches of his father's death, Wherein necessity, of matter beggar'd,

Will nothing stick our persons to arraign In ear and ear. O my dear Gertrude, this,

Like to a murdering-piece, in many places 65 Gives me superfluous death. [A noise within.]

Enter a MESSENGER.

Queen. Alack, what noise is this?

King. Where are my Switzers? Let them guard the door.

What is the matter?

Mess. Save yourself, my lord!

The ocean, overpeering of his list, Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste

Than young Laertes, in a riotous head, 101 O'erbears your officers. The rabble call him lord;

And, as the world were now but to begin, Antiquity forgot, custom not known,

(The ratifiers and props of every word,) 105 They cry, "Choose we! Laertes shall be king!"

Caps, hands, and tongues applaud it to the clouds,

"Laertes shall be king, Laertes king!"

Queen. How cheerfully on the false trail they cry!

O, this is counter, you false Danish dogs! 110

Enter LAERTES [armed; DANES following].

King. The doors are broke. [Noise within.]

Laer. Where is this king? Sirs, stand you all without.

Danes. No, let's come in.

Laer. I pray you, give me leave.

Danes. We will, we will.

[They retire without the door.]

Laer. I thank you; keep the door. O thou vile king, 115

Give me my father!

Queen. Calmly, good Laertes.

Laer. That drop of blood that's calm proclaims me bastard,

Cries cuckold to my father, brands the harlot Even here, between the chaste unsmirched brows

Of my true mother.

King. What is the cause, Laertes, That thy rebellion looks so giant-like? 121

Let him go, Gertrude; do not fear our person.

There's such divinity doth hedge a king, That treason can but peep to what it would,

Acts little of his will. Tell me, Laertes, 125 Why thou art thus incens'd. Let him go, Gertrude.

Speak, man.

Laer. Where's my father?

King. Dead.

Queen. But not by him.

King. Let him demand his fill.

Laer. How came he dead? I'll not be juggl'd with. 130

To hell, allegiance! Vows, to the blackest devil!

Conscience and grace, to the profoundest pit! I dare damnation. To this point I stand,

That both the worlds I give to negligence, Let come what comes; only I'll be reveng'd 135

Most thoroughly for my father.

King. Who shall stay you?

Laer. My will, not all the world.

And for my means, I'll husband them so well,

They shall go far with little.

King. Good Laertes,

If you desire to know the certainty 140 Of your dear father's death, is't writ in your revenge That, swoopstake, you will draw both friend and foe,

Winner and loser?

Laer. None but his enemies.

King. Will you know them then?

Laer. To his good friends thus wide I'll ope my arms, 145

And like the kind life-rend'ring pelican, Repast them with my blood.

King. Why, now you speak

Like a good child and a true gentleman. That I am guiltless of your father's death,

And am most sensibly in grief for it, 150

It shall as level to your judgement pierce
As day does to your eye.

[A noise within: "Let her come in!"]

Re-enter OPHELIA.

Laer. How now! what noise is that?
O heat, dry up my brains! Tears seven times salt

Burn out the sense and virtue of mine eye! 155
By heaven, thy madness shall be paid by weight

Till our scale turns the beam. O rose of
May!

Dear maid, kind sister, sweet Ophelia!
O heavens! is 't possible, a young maid's wits
Should be as mortal as an old man's life? 160
Nature is fine in love, and where 't is fine,
It sends some precious instance of itself
After the thing it loves.

Oph. [Sings.]

"They bore him barefaced on the bier;
Hey non nonny, nonny, hey nonny," 165
And on his grave rains many a tear," —
Pere you well, my dove!

Laer. Hadst thou thy wits and didst persuade revenge,

It could not move thus.

Oph. You must sing, "Down a-down, and [170 you call him a-down-a." O, how the wheel becomes it! It is the false steward, that stole his master's daughter:

Laer. This nothing's more than matter. 174
Oph. There's the rosemary, that's for remembrance; pray, love, remember; and there is pansies, that's for thoughts.

Laer. A document in madness, thoughts and remembrance fitted. 179

Oph. There's fennel for you, and columbines; there's rue for you, and here's some for me;
we may call it herb of grace o' Sundays.
O, you must wear your rue with a difference.
There's a daisy. I would give you some violets, but they wither'd all when my father died. They say he made a good end, — 180

[Sings.] "For bonny sweet Robin is all my joy,"

Laer. Thought and affliction, passion, hell itself,

She turns to favour and to prettiness.

Oph. [Sings.]

"And will he not come again?
And will he not come again?
No, no, he is dead;
Go to thy death-bed;
He never will come again." 190

"His beard as white as snow, 195
All flaxen was his poll.

He is gone, he is gone,
And we cast away moan.
God ha' mercy on his soul!"

And of all Christian souls, I pray God. God buy ye. [Exit. 200

Laer. Do you see this, you gods?

King. Laertes, I must commune with your grief,

Or you deny me right. Go but apart,

Make choice of whom your wisest friends you
will,
And they shall hear and judge 'twixt you and
me. 205

If by direct or by collateral hand
They find us touch'd, we will our kingdom give,

Our crown, our life, and all that we call ours,
To you in satisfaction; but if not,
Be you content to lend your patience to us, 210
And we shall jointly labour with your soul
To give it due content.

Laer. Let this be so.

His means of death, his obscure burial —
No trophy, sword, nor hatchment o'er his bones,

No noble rite nor formal ostentation — 215
Cry to be heard, as 't were from heaven to
earth,

That I must call 't in question.

King. So you shall;
And where the offence is let the great axe fall.
I pray you, go with me. [Exit.]

[SCENE VI. Another room in the castle.]

Enter HORATIO with an ATTENDANT.

Hor. What are they that would speak with
me?

Att. Sailors, sir. They say they have letters for you.

Hor. Let them come in. [Exit Attendant.]
I do not know from what part of the world
I should be greeted, if not from Lord Hamlet. 5

Enter SAILOR.

Sail. God bless you, sir.

Hor. Let Him bless thee too.

Sail. He shall, sir, an't please Him. There's a letter for you, sir — it comes from the ambassador that was bound for England — if your name be Horatio, as I am let to know it is. 11

[Hor.] [Reads.] "Horatio, when thou shalt have overlook'd this, give these fellows some means to the King; they have letters for him.
Ere we were two days old at sea, a pirate of very warlike appointment gave us chase. 15 Finding ourselves too slow of sail, we put on a compelled valour. In the grapple I boarded them. On the instant they got clear of our ship, so I alone became their prisoner. They have dealt with me like thieves of mercy, 20 but they knew what they did: I am to do a good turn for them. Let the King have the letters I have sent, and repair thou to me with as much haste as thou wouldst fly death. I have words to speak in your ear will make thee dumb, yet are they much too light for 25 the bore of the matter. These good fellows will bring thee where I am. Rosencrantz and Guildenstern hold their course for England; of them
I have much to tell thee. Farewell. 30

"He that thou knowest thine,

HAMLET."

Come, I will give you way for these your letters;

And do 't the speedier, that you may direct me
To him from whom you brought them.

[Exeunt.]

[SCENE VII. Another room in the castle.]

Enter KING and LAERTES.

King. Now must your conscience my acquit-
tance seal;

And you must put me in your heart for friend,
Sith you have heard, and with a knowing ear,
That he which hath your noble father slain
Pursued my life.

Laer. It well appears. But tell me
Why you proceeded not against these feats, 6
So crimeful and so capital in nature,
As by your safety, wisdom, all things else,
You mainly were stirr'd up.

King. O, for two special reasons,
Which may to you, perhaps, seem much un-sinew'd, 10
And yet to me they are strong. The Queen his mother

Lives almost by his looks; and for myself —
My virtue or my plague, be it either which —
She's so conjunctive to my life and soul,
That, as the star moves not but in his sphere, 15
I could not but by her. The other motive
Why to a public count I might not go,
Is the great love the general gender bear him;
Who, dipping all his faults in their affection,
Would, like the spring that turneth wood to stone, 20

Convert his gyves to graces; so that my arrows,
Too slightly tumb'red for so loud a wind,
Would have reverted to my bow again,
And not where I had aim'd them.

Laer. And so have I a noble father lost, 25
A sister driven into desperate terms,
Whose worth, if praises may go back again,
Stood challenger on mount of all the age
For her perfections. But my revenge will come.

King. Break not your sleeps for that. You must not think 30

That we are made of stuff so flat and dull
That we can let our beard be shook with danger
And think it pastime. You shortly shall hear
more.

I lov'd your father, and we love ourself,
And that, I hope, will teach you to imagine — 35

Enter a MESSENGER with letters.

How now! What news?

Mess. Letters, my lord, from Hamlet.
This to your Majesty; this to the Queen.

King. From Hamlet! Who brought them?

Mess. Sailors, my lord, they say; I saw them
not.

They were given me by Claudio. He receiv'd
them 40

[Of him that brought them].

King. Laertes, you shall hear them.
Leave us. [Exit Messenger.]

[Reads.] "High and mighty, You shall know
I am set naked on your kingdom. To-morrow shall I beg leave to see your kingly eyes, when I shall, first asking your pardon thereunto, recount the occasions of my sudden and more strange return.

HAMLET." 48

What should this mean? Are all the rest come back?

Or is it some abuse, or no such thing?

Laer. Know you the hand?

King. 'Tis Hamlet's character. "Naked!"
And in a postscript here, he says, "alone."
Can you advise me?

Laer. I'm lost in it, my lord. But let him
come. 55

It warms the very sickness in my heart
That I shall live and tell him of his teeth,
"Thus didest thou."

King. If it be so, Laertes, —
As how should it be so? How otherwise? —
Will you be rul'd by me?

Laer. [Ay, my lord,] 60

If so you'll not o'errule me to a peace.

King. To thine own peace. If he be now re-
turn'd,

As checking at his voyage, and that he means
No more to undertake it, I will work him
To an exploit, now ripe in my device, 65
Under the which he shall not choose but fall;
And for his death no wind of blame shall breathe,

But even his mother shall uncharge the practice
And call it accident.

[Laer. My lord, I will be rul'd;
The rather, if you could devise it so 70
That I might be the organ.

King. It falls right.
You have been talk'd of since your travel
much,

And that in Hamlet's hearing, for a quality Wherein, they say, you shine. Your sum of parts

Did not together pluck such envy from him 75
As did that one, and that, in my regard,
Of the unworthiest siege.

Laer. What part is that, my lord?

King. A very riband in the cap of youth,
Yet needful too; for youth no less becomes
The light and careless livery that it wears 80
Than settled age his sables and his weeds, Importing health and graveness.] Two months
since,

Here was a gentleman of Normandy; —
I've seen myself, and serv'd against, the French,
And they can well on horseback; but this gallant 85

Had witchcraft in 't. He grew unto his seat,
And to such wondrous doing brought his horse,
As had he been incorp'd and demi-natur'd
With the brave beast. So far he pass'd my thought,

That I, in forgery of shapes and tricks, 90
Come short of what he did.

Laer. A Norman, was 't?

King. A Norman.

Laer. Upon my life, Lamound.

King. The very same.

Laer. I know him well. He is the brooch
indeed

And gem of all the nation. 95

King. He made confession of you,
And gave you such a masterly report
For art and exercise in your defence,
And for your rapier most especially,
That he cried out, 't would be a sight indeed 100
If one could match you. [The scrimers of their nation,

He swore, had neither motion, guard, nor eye,
If you oppos'd them.] Sir, this report of his
Did Hamlet so envenom with his envy
That he could nothing do but wish and beg 105
Your sudden coming o'er to play with him.
Now, out of this —

Laer. What out of this, my lord?

King. Laertes, was your father dear to you?
Or are you like the painting of a sorrow,
A face without a heart?

Laer. Why ask you this? 110

King. Not that I think you did not love your
father,

But that I know love is begun by time,
And that I see, in passages of proof,
Time qualifies the spark and fire of it.
[There lives within the very flame of love 115
A kind of wick or snuff that will abate it,
And nothing is at a like goodness still;
For goodness, growing to a plurisy,
Dies in his own too much. That we would do,
We should do when we would; for this
"would" changes, 120

And hath abatements and delays as many
As there are tongues, are hands, are accidents;
And then this "should" is like a spendthrift
sigh,

That hurts by easing. But, to the quick o' the ulcer: —]

Hamlet comes back. What would you undertake, 125

To show yourself your father's son in deed
More than in words?

Laer. To cut his throat i' the church.

King. No place, indeed, should murder sanc-tuarize;

Revenge should have no bounds. But, good
Laertes,

Will you do this, keep close within your chamber? 130

Hamlet return'd shall know you are come home.

We'll put on those shall praise your excellence
And set a double varnish on the fame

The Frenchman gave you, bring you in fine
together

And wager on your heads. He, being remiss, 135
Most generous and free from all contriving,
Will not peruse the foils, so that, with ease,
Or with a little shuffling, you may choose

A sword unabated, and in a pass of practice
Requite him for your father: 140

Laer. I will do 't;

And, for that purpose, I'll anoint my sword.
I bought an unction of a mountebank,

So mortal that, but dip a knife in it,
Where it draws blood no cataplasm so rare,

Collected from all simples that have virtue 145
Under the moon, can save the thing from
death

That is but scratch'd withal. I'll touch my point

With this contagion, that, if I gall him slightly,

It may be death.

King. Let's further think of this,
Weigh what convenience both of time and 150 means

May fit us to our shape. If this should fail,
And that our drift look through our bad performance,

'T were better not assay'd; therefore this project

Should have a back or second, that might hold
If this should blast in proof. Soft! let me see.

We'll make a solemn wager on your cun-
nings, — 155

I ha't!

When in your motion you are hot and dry —
As make your bouts more violent to that end —

And that he calls for drink, I'll have prepar'd
him 160

A chalice for the nonce, whereon but sipping,
If he by chance escape your venom'd stuck,

Our purpose may hold there.

Enter QUEEN.

How, sweet queen!

Queen. One woe doth tread upon another's heel,

So fast they follow. Your sister's drown'd,
Laertes. 165

Laer. Drown'd! O, where?

Queen. There is a willow grows aslant a brook,

That shows his hoar leaves in the glassy stream.
There with fantastic garlands did she come

Of crow-flowers, nettles, daisies, and long purples 170

That liberal shepherds give a grosser name,
But our cold maids do dead men's fingers call

them;

There, on the pendent boughs her coronet weeds
Clamb'ring to hang, an envious slyer broke,

When down her weedy trophies and herself 175
Fell in the weeping brook. Her clothes spread wide,

And, maid-like, a while they bore her up;
Which time she chanted snatches of old tunes,

As one incapable of her own distress,
Or like a creature native and indued 180

Unto that element. But long it could not be Till that her garments, heavy with their drink,

Pull'd the poor wretch from her melodious lay
To muddy death.

Laer. Alas, then, is she drown'd?

Queen. Drown'd, drown'd. 185

Laer. Too much of water hast thou, poor
Ophelia,

And therefore I forbid my tears. But yet
It is our trick. Nature her custom holds,

Let shame say what it will; when these are
gone,

The woman will be out. Adieu, my lord; 190
I have a speech of fire that fain would blaze,
But that this folly douts it. [Exit.

King. Let's follow, Gertrude.

How much I had to do to calm his rage!
Now fear I this will give it start again,
Therefore let's follow. [Exeunt, 106]

[ACT V]

[SCENE I. A churchyard.]

Enter two CLOWNS [with spades and pickaxes].

1. Clo. Is she to be buried in Christian burial that wilfully seeks her own salvation?

2. Clo. I tell thee she is, and therefore make her grave straight. The crowner hath sat on her, and finds it Christian burial.

1. Clo. How can that be, unless she drown'd herself in her own defence?

2. Clo. Why, 'tis found so.

1. Clo. It must be "se offendendo," it cannot be else. For here lies the point: if I [10] drown myself wittingly, it argues an act, and an act hath three branches; it is, to act, to do, and to perform; argal, she drown'd herself wittingly.

2. Clo. Nay, but hear you, goodman deliver, —

1. Clo. Give me leave. Here lies the water; good. Here stands the man; good. If the man go to this water and drown himself, it is, will he, nill he, he goes, — mark you that? But if the water come to him and drown him, he drowns not himself; argal, he that is not guilty of his own death shortens not his own life.

2. Clo. But is this law?

1. Clo. Ay, marry, is't; crowner's quest law.

2. Clo. Will you ha' the truth on't? If this had not been a gentlewoman, she should have been buried out o' Christian burial.

1. Clo. Why, there thou say'st; and the more pity that great folk should have countenance in this world to drown or hang themselves, more than their even Christian. Come, my spade. There is no ancient gentlemen but gardeners, ditchers, and grave-makers; they hold up Adam's profession.

2. Clo. Was he a gentleman?

1. Clo. He was the first that ever bore arms.

2. Clo. Why, he had none.

1. Clo. What, art a heathen? How dost thou understand the Scripture? The Scripture says Adam digg'd; could he dig without arms? I'll put another question to thee. If thou answerest me not to the purpose, confess thyself —

2. Clo. Go to.

1. Clo. What is he that builds stronger than either the mason, the shipwright, or the carpenter?

2. Clo. The gallows-maker; for that frame outlives a thousand tenants.

1. Clo. I like thy wit well, in good faith. The gallows does well; but how does it well? It does well to those that do ill. Now, thou dost ill to say the gallows is built stronger than the church, argal, the gallows may do well to thee. To't again, come.

2. Clo. "Who builds stronger than a mason, a shipwright, or a carpenter?"

1. Clo. Ay, tell me that, and unyoke.

2. Clo. Marry, now I can tell.

1. Clo. To't.

2. Clo. Mass, I cannot tell.

Enter HAMLET and HORATIO, afar off.

1. Clo. Cudgel thy brains no more about it, for your dull ass will not mend his pace with beating; and, when you are ask'd this question next, say "a grave-maker"; the houses that he makes lasts till doomsday. Go, get thee to Yaughan; fetch me a stoup of liquor.

[Exit 2. Clown.]

[He digs, and] sings.

"In youth, when I did love, did love,

Methought it was very sweet,

To contract, O, the time for a my behave,

O, methought, there was nothing meet."

Ham. Has this fellow no feeling of his business, that he sings at grave-making?

Hor. Custom hath made it in him a property of easiness.

Ham. 'Tis e'en so. The hand of little employment hath the daintier sense.

1. Clo. (Sings.)

"But age, with his stealing steps,

Hath claw'd me in his clutch,

And hath shipped me intil the land,

As if I had never been such."

[Throws up a skull.]

Ham. That skull had a tongue in it, and could sing once. How the knave jowls it to the ground, as if it were Cain's jaw-bone, that did the first murder! It might be the pate of a politician, which this ass now o'erreaches; one that would circumvent God, might it not?

Hor. It might, my lord.

Ham. Or of a courtier, which could say, "Good morrow, sweet lord! How dost thou, good lord?" This might be my lord such-a-one, that prais'd my lord such-a-one's horse, when he meant to beg it; might it not?

Hor. Ay, my lord.

Ham. Why, e'en so; and now my Lady Worm's; chapless, and knock'd about the mazzard with a sexton's spade. Here's fine revolution, if we had the trick to see't. Did these bones cost no more the breeding, but to play at loggats with 'em? Mine ache to think on't.

1. Clo. (Sings.)

"A pick-axe, and a spade, a spade

For and a shrouding sheet;

O, a pit of clay for to be made

For such a guest is meet."

[Throws up another skull.]

Ham. There's another. Why might not that be the skull of a lawyer? Where be his quiddits now, his quilllets, his cases, his tenures, and his tricks? Why does he suffer this rude knave now to knock him about the sconece with a dirty shovel, and will not tell him of his action of battery? Hum! This fellow might be in 's time a great buyer of land, with his statutes, his recognizances, his fines his double vouchers, his recoveries. Is this the fine of his fines, and the recovery of his recoveries, to have [115] his fine pate full of fine dirt? Will his vouchers vouch him no more of his purchases, and double ones too, than the length and breadth of a pair of indentures? The very conveyances of his lands will hardly lie in this box, and must the inheritor himself have no more, ha? 121

Hor. Not a jot more, my lord.

Ham. Is not parchment made of sheep-skins?

Hor. Ay, my lord, and of calf-skins too.

Ham. They are sheep and calves that seek out assurance in that. I will speak to this fellow. Whose grave's this, sir? 127

1. Clo. Mine, sir.

[Sings.] "O, a pit of clay for to be made
For such a guest is meet."

Ham. I think it be thine indeed, for thou liest in 't. 132

1. Clo. You lie out on 't, sir, and therefore it is not yours. For my part, I do not lie in 't, and yet it is mine.

Ham. Thou dost lie in 't, to be in 't and say 't is thine. 'Tis for the dead, not for the quick, therefore thou liest. 138

1. Clo. 'Tis a quick lie, sir; 't will away again, from me to you.

Ham. What man dost thou dig it for?

1. Clo. For no man, sir.

Ham. What woman, then?

1. Clo. For none, neither.

Ham. Who is to be buried in 't? 145

1. Clo. One that was a woman, sir; but, rest her soul, she's dead.

Ham. How absolute the knave is! We must speak by the card, or equivocation will undo us. By the Lord, Horatio, these three years I have taken note of it; the age is grown so [150] picked that the toe of the peasant comes so near the heels of our courtier, he galls his kibe. How long hast thou been a grave-maker? 154

1. Clo. Of all the days i' the year, I came to 't that day that our last king Hamlet o'er-came Fortinbras.

Ham. How long is that since? 158

1. Clo. Cannot you tell that? Every fool can tell that. It was the very day that young Hamlet was born; he that was mad, and sent into England. 164

Ham. Ay, marry, why was he sent into England?

1. Clo. Why, because 'a was mad. He shall recover his wits there; or, if he do not, it's no great matter there.

Ham. Why?

1. Clo. 'Twill not be seen in him there; there the men are as mad as he. 170

Ham. How came he mad?

1. Clo. Very strangely, they say.

Ham. How "strangely"?

1. Clo. Faith, e'en with losing his wits.

Ham. Upon what ground?

1. Clo. Why, here in Denmark. I have been sexton here, man and boy, thirty years. 175

Ham. How long will a man lie i' the earth ere he rot? 179

1. Clo. I' faith, if he be not rotten before he die — as we have many pocky corpses now-a-days, that will scarce hold the laying in — he will last you some eight year or nine year. A tanner will last you nine year.

Ham. Why he more than another? 185

1. Clo. Why, sir, his hide is so tann'd with his trade that he will keep out water a great while, and your water is a sore decayer of your whoreson dead body. Here's a skull now; this skull has lain in the earth three and twenty years. 191

Ham. Whose was it?

1. Clo. A whoreson mad fellow's it was. Whose do you think it was?

Ham. Nay, I know not. 195

1. Clo. A pestilence on him for a mad rogue! 'A pour'd a flagon of Rhenish on my head once. This same skull, sir, was Yorick's skull, the King's jester.

Ham. This?

1. Clo. E'en that.

Ham. Let me see. [Takes the skull.] Alas, poor Yorick! I knew him, Horatio; a fellow of infinite jest, of most excellent fancy. He hath borne me on his back a thousand times. And now how abhorred in my imagination [205] it is! My gorge rises at it. Here hung those lips that I have kiss'd I know not how oft. Where be your gibes now, your gambols, your songs, your flashes of merriment, that were wont to set the table on a roar? Not one [210] now, to mock your own grinning? Quite chop-fallen? Now get you to my lady's chamber, and tell her, let her paint an inch thick, to this favour she must come. Make her laugh at that. Prithee, Horatio, tell me one thing. 216

Hor. What's that, my lord?

Ham. Dost thou think Alexander look'd o' this fashion i' the earth?

Hor. E'en so. 220

Ham. And smelt so? Pah!

[Puts down the skull.]

Hor. E'en so, my lord.

Ham. To what base uses we may return, Horatio! Why may not imagination trace the noble dust of Alexander, till he find it stopping a bung-hole? 226

Hor. 'T were to consider too curiously, to consider so.

Ham. No, faith, not a jot; but to follow him thither with modesty enough and likelihood to lead it; as thus: Alexander died, Alex- [230] ander was buried, Alexander returneth into dust, the dust is earth, of earth we make loam, and why of that loam whereto he was converted might they not stop a beer-barrel? 235
Imperial Caesar, dead and turn'd to clay,
Might stop a hole to keep the wind away.
O, that that earth, which kept the world in awe,

Should patch a wall to expel the winter's flaw!
But soft! but soft! Aside! Here comes the
King, 240

Enter [PRIESTS, etc., in procession;] KING, QUEEN, LAERTES, and a Coffin, with Lords attendant.

The Queen, the courtiers. Who is that they follow?

And with such maimed rites? This doth be-token

The corpse they follow did with desperate hand
Fordo it own life. 'T was of some estate.

Couch we a while, and mark. 345
[Retiring with Horatio.]

Laer. What ceremony else?

Ham. That is Laertes, a very noble youth.
Mark.

Laer. What ceremony else?

Priest. Her obsequies have been as far enlarg'd

As we have warrantise. Her death was doubtful; 350

And, but that great command o'ersways the order,

She should in ground unsanctified have lodg'd
Till the last trumpet; for charitable prayer, Shards, flints, and pebbles should be thrown on
her.

Yet here she is allowed her virgin rites, 355
Her maiden strewments, and the bringing home
Of bell and burial.

Laer. Must there no more be done?

Priest. No more be done.
We should profane the service of the dead
To sing such requiem and such rest to her 360
As to peace-parted souls.

Laer. Lay her i' the earth,
And from her fair and unpolluted flesh
May violets spring! I tell thee, churlish priest,
A minist'ring angel shall my sister be,
When thou liest howling.

Ham. What, the fair Ophelia!

Queen. Sweets to the sweet; farewell! 365
[Scattering flowers.]

I hop'd thou shouldst have been my Hamlet's wife.

I thought thy bride-bed to have deck'd, sweet
maid,

And not to have strew'd thy grave.

Laer. O, treble woe
Fall ten times treble on that cursed head 370
Whose wicked deed thy most ingenious sense
Depriv'd thee of! Hold off the earth a while,
Till I have caught her once more in mine arms.
[Leaps in the grave.]

Now pile your dust upon the quick and dead,
Till of this flat a mountain you have made 375
To o'ertop old Pelion, or the skyish head
Of blue Olympus.

Ham. [Advancing.] What is he whose grief
Bears such an emphasis, whose phrase of sorrow

Conjures the heaven's stars and makes them
stand

Like wonder-wounded hearers? This is I, 380
Hamlet, the Dane! [Leaps into the grave.]

Laer. The devil take thy soul!

[Grappling with him.]
Ham. Thou pray'st not well.

I prithee, take thy fingers from my throat,
For, though I am not splenitive and rash, 385
Yet have I something in me dangerous,
Which let thy wisdom fear. Away thy hand!

King. Pluck them asunder. Away thy hand!

Queen. Hamlet, Hamlet!

[All. Gentlemen,—
Hor. Good my lord, be quiet.

[The Attendants part them, and they come out of the grave.]

Ham. Why, I will fight with him upon this theme

Until my eyelids will no longer wag. 390

Queen. O my son, what theme?

Ham. I lov'd Ophelia. Forty thousand brothers

Could not, with all their quantity of love,
Make up my sum. What wilt thou do for her?

King. O, he is mad, Laertes. 395

Queen. For love of God, forbear him.

Ham. ['Swords,] show me what thou 'lt do.
Woo 't weep? Woo 't fight? [Woo 't fast?]

Woo 't tear thyself?

Woo 't drink up eisel? Eat a crocodile? 400
I'll do 't. Dost thou come here to whine?

To outface me with leaping in her grave?
Be buried quick with her, and so will I;

And, if thou prate of mountains, let them throw
Millions of acres on us, till our ground,

Singeing his pate against the burning zone, 405
Make Ossa like a wart! Nay, an thou 'lt mouth,
I'll rant as well as thou.

[Queen.] This is mere madness,
And thus a while the fit will work on him.

Anon, as patient as the female dove,
When that her golden couplets are disclos'd, 410
His silence will sit drooping.

Ham. Hear you, sir,
What is the reason that you use me thus?

I lov'd you ever. But it is no matter.
Let Hercules himself do what he may,

The cat will mew and dog will have his day. 415
[Exit.]

King. I pray you, good Horatio, wait upon him. [Exit Horatio.]

[To Laertes.] Strengthen your patience in our last night's speech;

We'll put the matter to the present push.
Good Gertrude, set some watch over your son.

This grave shall have a living monument, 420
An hour of quiet shortly shall we see;

Till then, in patience our proceeding be.
[Exeunt.]

[SCENE II. A hall in the castle.]

Enter HAMLET and HORATIO.

Ham. So much for this, sir; now let me see the other.

You do remember all the circumstance?

Hor. Remember it, my lord!

Ham. Sir, in my heart there was a kind of fighting,

That would not let me sleep. Methought I lay
Worse than the mutines in the bilboes.

Rashly,—
And prais'd be rashness for it; let us know

Our indiscretion sometimes serves us well
When our deep plots do pall; and that should teach us

There's a divinity that shapes our ends, 425
Rough-hew them how we will,—

Hor. That is most certain.

Ham. Up from my cabin,
My sea-gown scarf'd about me, in the dark
Grop'd I to find out them; had my desire;
Finger'd their packet; and in fine withdrew 15
To mine own room again, making so bold,
My fears forgetting manners, to unseal
Their grand commission; where I found, Horatio, —

O royal knavery! — an exact command,
Larded with many several sorts of reason 20
Importing Denmark's health and England's too,
With, ho! such bugs and goblins in my life,
That, on the supervise, no leisure bated,
No, not to stay the grinding of the axe,
My head should be struck off.

Hor. Is 't possible? 25

Ham. Here's the commission; read it at more leisure.

But wilt thou hear me how I did proceed?

Hor. I beseech you.

Ham. Being thus be-netted round with vil-lainies, —

Ere I could make a prologue to my brains, 30
They had begun the play, — I sat me down,
Devis'd a new commission, wrote it fair.
I once did hold it, as our statists do,
A baseness to write fair, and labour'd much
How to forget that learning; but, sir, now 35
It did me yeoman's service. Wilt thou know
The effect of what I wrote?

Hor. Ay, good my lord.

Ham. An earnest conjuration from the King,
As England was his faithful tributary,
As love between them as the palm should flourish, 40

As Peace should still her wheaten garland wear
And stand a comma 'tween their amities,
And many such-like as-es of great charge,
That, on the view and know of these contents,
Without debatement further, more or less, 45
He should the bearers put to sudden death,
Not shrivng time allow'd.

Hor. How was this seal'd?

Ham. Why, even in that was Heaven ordinant.

I had my father's signet in my purse,
Which was the model of that Danish seal; 50
Folded the writ up in form of the other,
Subscrib'd it, gave 't the impression, plac'd it safely,

The changling never known. Now, the next day

Was our sea-fight; and what to this was se-quent

Thou know'st already. 55

Hor. So Guildenstern and Rosencrantz go to 't.

Ham. Why, man, they did make love to this employment;

They are not near my conscience. Their defeat
Doth by their own insinuation grow.

'Tis dangerous when the baser nature comes 60
Between the pass and fell incensed points
Of mighty opposites.

Hor. Why, what a king is this!

Ham. Does it not, thinks 't thee, stand me now upon —

He that hath kill'd my king and whor'd my
mother,

Popp'd in between the election and my hopes, 65
Thrown out his angle for my proper life,
And with such cozenage — is 't not perfect conscience,

To quit him with this arm? And is 't not to be damn'd,

To let this canker of our nature come

In further evil? 70

Hor. It must be shortly known to him from England

What is the issue of the business there.

Ham. It will be short; the interim is mine,
And a man's life's no more than to say "One." 75

But I am very sorry, good Horatio,
That to Laertes I forgot myself;

For, by the image of my cause, I see
The portraiture of his. I'll court his favours.

But, sure, the bravery of his grief did put me
Into a tow'ring passion.

Hor. Peace! who comes here? 80

Enter young OSRIC.

Os. Your lordship is right welcome back to Denmark.

Ham. I humbly thank you, sir. — Dost know this water-fly?

Hor. No, my good lord. 85

Ham. Thy state is the more gracious, for 't is a vice to know him. He hath much land, and fertile; let a beast be lord of beasts, and his crib shall stand at the King's mess. 'T is a chough, but, as I say, spacious in the possession of dirt. 90

Os. Sweet lord, if your lordship were at leisure, I should impart a thing to you from his Majesty.

Ham. I will receive it with all diligence of spirit. Put your bonnet to his right use; 't is for the head. 95

Os. I thank your lordship, 't is very hot.

Ham. No, believe me, 't is very cold; the wind is northerly.

Os. It is indifferent cold, my lord, indeed. 100

Ham. Methinks it is very sultry and hot for my complexion.

Os. Exceedingly, my lord; it is very sultry, — as 't were, — I cannot tell how. But, my lord, his Majesty bade me signify to you that he has laid a great wager on your head. Sir, this is the matter, — 107

Ham. I beseech you, remember —

[Hamlet moves him to put on his hat.]

Os. Nay, in good faith; for mine ease, in good faith. [Sir, here is newly come to court] 110
Laertes, believe me, an absolute gentleman, full of most excellent differences, of very soft society and great showing; indeed, to speak feelingly of him, he is the card or calendar of gentry, for you shall find in him the continent of what part a gentleman would see. 116

Ham. Sir, his definement suffers no perdition in you; though, I know, to divide him invertorially would dizzy the arithmetic of memory, and yet but yaw neither, in respect of his quick sail. But, in the verity of extolment, [120

I take him to be a soul of great article; and his infusion of such dearth and rareness, as, to make true diction of him, his semblable is his mirror; and who else would trace him, his umbrage, nothing more. ¹²⁵

Osr. Your lordship speaks most infallibly of him.

Ham. The concernancy, sir? Why do we wrap the gentleman in our more rawer breath?

Osr. Sir? ¹³⁰

Hor. Is 't not possible to understand in another tongue? You will do 't, sir, really.

Ham. What imports the nomination of this gentleman?

Osr. Of Laertes? ¹³⁵

Hor. His purse is empty already. All's golden words are spent.

Ham. Of him, sir.

Osr. I know you are not ignorant — ¹³⁹

Ham. I would you did, sir; yet, in faith, if you did, it would not much approve me. Well, sir?

Osr. You are not ignorant of what excellence Laertes is — ¹⁴⁴

[Ham. I dare not confess that, lest I should compare with him in excellence; but to know a man well were to know himself.

Osr. I mean, sir, for his weapon; but in the imputation laid on him by them, in his meed he's unfellowed.] ¹⁵⁰

Ham. What's his weapon?

Osr. Rapier and dagger.

Ham. That's two of his weapons; but well.

Osr. The King, sir, has wag'd with him six Barbary horses, against the which he has ¹⁵⁵ impon'd, as I take it, six French rapiers and poniards, with their assigns, as girdle, hanger, or so. Three of the carriages, in faith, are very dear to fancy, very responsive to the hilts, most delicate carriages, and of very liberal conceit. ¹⁶⁰

Ham. What call you the carriages?

[Hor. I knew you must be edified by the margent ere you had done.]

Osr. The carriages, sir, are the hangers. ¹⁶⁴

Ham. The phrase would be more germane to the matter, if we could carry cannon by our sides; I would it might be hangers till then. But, on: six Barbary horses against six French swords, their assigns, and three liberal-conceited carriages; that's the French bet against the Danish. Why is this "impon'd," as you call it? ¹⁷¹

Osr. The King, sir, hath laid that in a dozen passes between you and him, he shall not exceed you three hits; he hath laid on twelve for nine; and that would come to immediate trial, if your lordship would vouchsafe the answer.

Ham. How if I answer no? ¹⁷⁷

Osr. I mean, my lord, the opposition of your person in trial.

Ham. Sir, I will walk here in the hall; if it please his Majesty, 't is the breathing time of day with me. Let the foils be brought, the gentleman willing, and the King hold his purpose, I will win for him if I can; if not, I'll gain nothing but my shame and the odd hits. ¹⁸⁵

Osr. Shall I re-deliver you e'en so?

Ham. To this effect, sir; after what flourish your nature will. ¹⁸⁸

Osr. I commend my duty to your lordship.

Ham. Yours, yours. [Exit Osr.] He does well to commend it himself; there are no tongues else for 's turn.

Hor. This lapwing runs away with the shell on his head. ¹⁹⁴

Ham. He did comply with his dug before he suck'd it. Thus has he, and many more of the same bevy that I know the drossy age dotes on, only got the tune of the time and outward habit of encounter; a kind of yesty collection, which carries them through and through the most fond and winnowed opinions; and ²⁰⁰ do but blow them to their trials, the bubbles are out.

[Enter a LORD.

Lord. My lord, his Majesty commended him to you by young Osrice, who brings back to him, that you attend him in the hall. He sends to know if your pleasure hold to play with Laertes, or that you will take longer time. ²⁰⁷

Ham. I am constant to my purposes; they follow the King's pleasure. If his fitness speaks, mine is ready, now or whensoever, provided I be so able as now. ²¹¹

Lord. The King and Queen and all are coming down.

Ham. In happy time. ²¹⁴

Lord. The Queen desires you to use some gentle entertainment to Laertes before you fall to play.

Ham. She well instructs me.] [Exit Lord.]

Hor. You will lose this wager, my lord. ²¹⁹

Ham. I do not think so; since he went into France, I have been in continual practice. I shall win at the odds. But thou wouldst not think how ill all's here about my heart. But it is no matter.

Hor. Nay, good my lord, — ²²⁴

Ham. It is but foolery; but it is such a kind of gain-giving, as would perhaps trouble a woman.

Hor. If your mind dislike anything, obey it. I will forestall their repair hither, and say you are not fit. ²²⁹

Ham. Not a whit; we defy augury. There's a special providence in the fall of a sparrow. If it be now, 't is not to come; if it be not to come, it will be now; if it be not now, yet it will come; the readiness is all. Since no man has aught of what he leaves, what is 't to leave betimes? [Let be.] ²³⁵

Enter KING, QUEEN, LAERTES, [OSRIC,] Lords, and other Attendants with foils and gauntlets; a table and flagons of wine on it.

King. Come, Hamlet, come, and take this hand from me.

[The King puts Laertes's hand into Hamlet's.]

Ham. Give me your pardon, sir. I've done you wrong, But pardon 't, as you are a gentleman.

This presence knows,
And you must needs have heard, how I am punish'd 240

With sore distraction. What I have done
That might your nature, honour, and exception
Roughly awake, I here proclaim was madness.
Was 't Hamlet wrong'd Laertes? Never Hamlet!

If Hamlet from himself be ta'en away, 245
And when he's not himself does wrong Laertes,
Then Hamlet does it not, Hamlet denies it.
Who does it, then? His madness. If 't be so,
Hamlet is of the faction that is wrong'd;
His madness is poor Hamlet's enemy. 250
Sir, in this audience,

Let my disclaiming from a purpos'd evil
Free me so far in your most generous thoughts,
That I have shot mine arrow o'er the house
And hurt my brother.

Laer. I am satisfied in nature,
Whose motive, in this case, should stir me
most 255

To my revenge; but in my terms of honour
I stand aloof, and will no reconciliation,
Till by some elder masters of known honour
I have a voice and precedent of peace, 260
To keep my name ungor'd. But till that time,
I do receive your offer'd love like love,
And will not wrong it.

Ham. I embrace it freely,
And will this brother's wrath frankly play.
Give us the foils. Come on.

Laer. Come, one for me.
Ham. I'll be your foil, Laertes; in mine ignorance 265

Your skill shall, like a star i' the darkest night,
Stick fiery off indeed.

Laer. You mock me, sir.

Ham. No, by this hand.

King. Give them the foils, young Osric.
Cousin Hamlet, 270

You know the wager?

Ham. Very well, my lord.

Your Grace hath laid the odds o' the weaker side.

King. I do not fear it, I have seen you both;
But since he is better'd, we have therefore odds.

Laer. This is too heavy, let me see another.

Ham. This likes me well. These foils have all a length? [They prepare to play. 275

Os. Ay, my good lord.

King. Set me the stoups of wine upon that table.

If Hamlet give the first or second hit,
Or quit in answer of the third exchange, 280

Let all the battlements their ordnance fire.
The King shall drink to Hamlet's better
breath,

And in the cup an union shall he throw,
Richer than that which four successive kings
In Denmark's crown have worn. Give me the cups, 285

And let the kettle to the trumpets speak,
The trumpet to the cannoneer without,
The cannons to the heavens, the heaven to
earth,

"Now the King drinks to Hamlet." Come,
begin;

And you, the judges, bear a wary eye. 290

Ham. Come on, sir.

Laer. Come, my lord. [They play.

Ham. One.

Laer. No.

Ham. Judgement.

Os. A hit, a very palpable hit.

Laer. Well; again.

King. Stay, give me drink. Hamlet, this pearl is thine;

Here's to thy health! Give him the cup.

[Trumpets sound, and shot goes off
[within].

Ham. I'll play this bout first; set it by a while. 295

Come. [They play.] Another hit; what say
you?

Laer. A touch, a touch, I do confess.

King. Our son shall win. sub. of trumpet

Queen. He's fat, and scant of breath.

Here, Hamlet, take my napkin, rub thy brows.

The Queen carouses to thy fortune, Hamlet. 300

Ham. Good madam!

King. Gertrude, do not drink.

Queen. I will, my lord; I pray you, pardon
me.

King. [Aside.] It is the poison'd cup; it is too late.

Ham. I dare not drink yet, madam; by and by.

Queen. Come, let me wipe thy face. 305

Laer. My lord, I'll hit him now.

King. I do not think 't.

Laer. [Aside.] And yet 'tis almost 'gainst
my conscience.

Ham. Come, for the third, Laertes; you but dally.

I pray you, pass with your best violence.

I am afeard you make a wanton of me. 310

Laer. Say you so? Come on. [They play.

Os. Nothing, neither way.

Laer. Have at you now!

[Laertes wounds Hamlet; then, in scuffling, they change rapiers.

King. Part them; they are incens'd.

Ham. Nay, come, again.

[Hamlet wounds Laertes. The Queen falls.]

Os. Look to the Queen there! Ho!

Hor. They bleed on both sides. How is 't,
my lord! 315

Os. How is 't, Laertes?

Laer. Why, as a woodcock to mine own springe, Osric;

I am justly kill'd with mine own treachery.

Ham. How does the Queen?

King. She swoonds to see them bleed.

Queen. No, no, the drink, the drink,—O my dear Hamlet,— 320

The drink, the drink! I am poison'd. [Dies.]

Ham. O villainy! Ho! let the door be lock'd:

Treachery! Seek it out.

Laer. It is here, Hamlet. Hamlet, thou art slain.

No medicine in the world can do thee good ; 325
In thee there is not half an hour of life.

The treacherous instrument is in thy hand,
Unbated and evenenom'd. The foul practice
Hath turn'd itself on me. Lo, here I lie,
Never to rise again. Thy mother's poison'd. 330
I can no more : — the King, the King's to blame.

Ham. The point evenenom'd too!
Then, venom, to thy work. [Hurts the King.
All. Treason! treason!

King. O, yet defend me, friends; I am but hurt. 336

Ham. Here, thou incestuous, murderous, damned Dane,
Drink off this potion! Is thy union here?

Follow my mother! [King dies.
Laer. He is justly serv'd;

It is a poison temp' red by himself. 339
Exchange forgiveness with me, noble Hamlet.

Mine and my father's death come not upon
thee,
Nor thine on me! [Dies.

Ham. Heaven make thee free of it! I follow
thee.

I am dead, Horatio. Wretched queen, adieu!
You that look pale and tremble at this chance,
That are but mutes or audience to this act, 346
Had I but time — as this fell sergeant, Death,

Is strict in his arrest — O, I could tell you —
But let it be. Horatio, I am dead;

But liv'st. Report me and my cause aright 350
To the unsatisfied.

Hor. Never believe it.
I am more an antique Roman than a Dane;

Here's yet some liquor left.

Ham. As thou'rt a man,
Give me the cup. Let go! By heaven, I'll have't!

O good Horatio, what a wounded name, 355 Things standing thus unknown, shall live behind me!

If thou didst ever hold me in thy heart,
Absent thee from felicity a while

And in this harsh world draw thy breath in pain

To tell my story.

[March afar off, and shot within.
What warlike noise is this?

Osr. Young Fortinbras, with conquest come from Poland, 361

To the ambassadors of England gives
This warlike volley.

Ham. O, I die, Horatio;
The potent poison quite o'er-crows my spirit.

I cannot live to hear the news from England,
But I do prophesy the election lights 366

On Fortinbras; he has my dying voice.
So tell him, with the occurments, more and less,

Which have solicited — The rest is silence. [Dies.

Hor. Now cracks a noble heart. Good-night, sweet prince, 370

And flights of angels sing thee to thy rest!
Why does the drum come hither?

[March within.]

Enter FORTINBRAS and the English AMBASSA-DOR, with drum, colours, and Attendants.

Fort. Where is this sight?
Hor. What is it ye would see?

If aught of woe or wonder, cease your search.
Fort. This quarry cries on havoc. O proud
Death, 375

What feast is toward in thine eternal cell,
That thou so many princes at a shot

So bloodily hast struck?

Amb. The sight is dismal,
And our affairs from England come too late.

The ears are senseless that should give us hearing, 380

To tell him his commandment is fulfill'd,
That Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are dead.

Where should we have our thanks?
Hor. Not from his mouth,

Had it the ability of life to thank you. 384
He never gave commandment for their death.

But since, so jump upon this bloody question,
You from the Polack wars, and you from England,

Are here arrived, give order that these bodies
High on a stage be placed to the view; 389

And let me speak to the yet unknowing world
How these things came about. So shall you hear

Of carnal, bloody, and unnatural acts,
Of accidental judgements, casual slaughters,

Of deaths put on by cunning and forc'd cause,
And, in this upshot, purposes mistook 395

Fallen on the inventors' heads: all this can I Truly deliver.

Fort. Let us haste to hear it,
And call the noblest to the audience.

For me, with sorrow I embrace my fortune.
I have some rights of memory in this kingdom,

Which now to claim, my vantage doth invite
me. 401

Hor. Of that I shall have also cause to speak,
And from his mouth whose voice will draw on
more.

But let this same be presently perform'd
Even while men's minds are wild, lest more mis-chance, 405

On plots and errors, happen.

Fort. Let four captains
Bear Hamlet, like a soldier, to the stage,

For he was likely, had he been put on,
To have prov'd most royally; and, for his passage,

The soldiers' music and the rites of war 410
Speak loudly for him.

Take up the bodies. Such a sight as this Becomes the field, but here shows much amiss.

Go, bid the soldiers shoot.

[Exeunt marching, [bearing off the dead bodies;] after which a peal of ordnance are shot off.]

Comes in and says regard to Ham.

OTHELLO, THE MOOR OF VENICE

OTHELLO is notable among Shakespeare's plays as being the only one published between his death and the appearance of the First Folio. No First Quarto had appeared after 1609 till that of Othello was issued in 1622. The First Folio text, which is much superior to that of the First Quarto and forms the basis of the present edition, was printed from an independent manuscript. The Second Quarto (1630) was printed from a copy of the First, corrected, in part at least, from the First Folio. The First Quarto is shorter by over 160 lines than the later editions, the deficiencies being in some cases due to cuts, in others to accidental omissions, and in still others, perhaps, to later additions to the play.

The statement by Malone that Othello was acted at Hallowmas, 1604, is generally accepted, though the documents from which he drew his information have disappeared. The presence in the First Quarto of numerous oaths that have been removed or toned down in the later copies, points to the inference that the manuscript from which that edition was printed was written before the passing of the act of 1605 against swearing and other abuses on the stage. An earlier limit is afforded by the publication in 1601 of Holland's translation of Pliny, from which Shakespeare derived several figures and allusions. The metrical tests agree with Malone's statement in placing the date of composition about 1604.

The plot of the tragedy is drawn from the seventh novel of the third decade of Giraldi Cinthio's Hecatomithi (1565). This was translated into French in 1588-84, but no English translation seems to have been made before 1795. Desdemona alone is given a name in the Italian; and the outlines of her character, with those of Othello and Iago, are there faintly indicated. Hardly so much can be said of Emilia, Brabantio, and the official persons in Venice and Cyprus; while Roderigo is entirely absent. The threat of a Turkish attack on Cyprus, the separate voyages of Othello and Desdemona, the episode of Cassio's drunkenness, Emilia's part in the stealing of the handkerchief and Bianca's connection with it, are all lacking in Cinthio. The arrangement of the catastrophe is also quite different. In the novel, Iago, carrying out a plan approved by Othello, beats the heroine to death with a stocking filled with sand; and they disguise their guilt by pulling down the ceiling and making it appear that she was killed by a falling beam. Afterwards Othello, brooding on the memory of Desdemona, comes to hate the ancient and discharges him; and he in revenge accuses Othello to Cassio of having cut off the lieutenant's leg and caused Desdemona's death. Othello is tried and tortured, but refuses to confess. He is later slain in banishment by his wife's relatives. Iago dies from the effects of torture inflicted in connection with another charge. The contrast between this sordid and dragged out conclusion and the swiftness and dignity of Shakespeare's terrible close need not be detailed. The tone of the novel may be gathered from a remark made by the heroine: "I fear I shall prove an example to young girls not to marry against the wishes of their parents, and that the Italian ladies may learn from me not to marry a man whom nature, heaven, and manner of life have separated from us."

One or two notable features in the earlier part of the story Shakespeare dispenses with. Thus Cinthio's villain is a disappointed lover of Desdemona's, whose passion has changed to hate. Only a trace of this is left in Iago, and the character of Roderigo is built up on the suggestion it affords. The handkerchief is stolen by Iago himself in the novel, being snatched from Desdemona's girdle when she is playing with his little girl. The captain who in Cinthio represents Cassio is married, and the ocular proof of Desdemona's guilt is given by Iago's bringing Othello to see Cassio's wife sitting at a window making a copy of the lost handkerchief. In the Italian, Cassio is on his way to visit a courtesan when he is attacked by Iago; and it was apparently from this hint that Shakespeare created Bianca to take the place of Cassio's wife; leaving, perhaps by an oversight, one sole allusion to this feature of his source in the line, "A fellow almost damnd in a fair wife." (x. i. 21.)

Thus, as usual, we find that the strength, the complexity, and the delicacy of the character-drawing, with the compactness and impressiveness of the action, are due to Shakespeare, the original tale supplying merely a sordid melodramatic sketch.

OTHELLO, THE MOOR OF VENICE

[DRAMATIS PERSONÆ]

DUKE OF VENICE.

BRABANTIO, [a senator,] father to Desdemona.

[Other] Senators.

GRATIANO, [brother to Brabantio,] } two noble Vene-
LUDOVICO, [kinsman to Brabantio,] } tians.

OTHELLO, the Moor [in the military service of Venice].

CASSIO, an honourable lieutenant.

IAGO, [an ensign,] a villain.

RODERIGO, a gulled gentleman.

MONTANO, governor of Cyprus [before Othello].

CLOWN [servant to Othello].

DESDEMONA, [daughter to Brabantio and] wife to Othello.

EMILIA, wife to Iago.

BIANCA, a courtesan.

Gentlemen of Cyprus, Sailors [Officers, Messenger, Herald, Musicians, and Attendants].

[SCENE: Venice; a sea-port in Cyprus.]

ACT I

SCENE I. [Venice. A street.]

Enter RODERIGO and IAGO.

Rod. Tush! never tell me! I take it much unkindly

That thou, Iago, who hast had my purse
As if the strings were thine, shouldst know of this.

Iago. 'Shblood, but you'll not hear me.
If ever I did dream of such a matter, 5
Abhor me.

Rod. Thou told'st me thou didst hold him in thy hate.

Iago. Despise me, if I do not. Three great ones of the city,

In personal suit to make me his lieutenant,
Off-capp'd to him; and, by the faith of man, 10
I know my price; I am worth no worse a place.

But he, as loving his own pride and purposes,
Evades them with a bombast circumstance

Horribly stuff'd with epithets of war,
[And, in conclusion,] 15

Nonsuits my mediators; for, "Certes," says
he,

"I have already chose my officer."
And what was he?

Forsooth, a great arithmetician,
One Michael Cassio, a Florentine, 20

A fellow almost damn'd in a fair wife;
That never set a squadron in the field,

Nor the division of a battle knows
More than a spinster, unless the bookish the-oric,

Wherein the toged consuls can propose 25
As masterly as he. Mere prattle without practice

Is all his soldiership. But he, sir, had the election;

And I, of whom his eyes had seen the proof
At Rhodes, at Cyprus, and on other grounds

Christen'd and heathen, must be be-lee'd and calm'd

By debtor and creditor; this counter-caster,

He, in good time, must his lieutenant be,
And I—God bless the mark!—his Moorship's ancient.

Rod. By heaven, I rather would have been his hangman.

Iago. Why, there's no remedy. 'Tis the curse of service, 25

Preferment goes by letter and affection,
And not by old gradation, where each second

Stood heir to the first. Now, sir, be judge yourself

Whether I in any just term am affin'd
To love the Moor.

Rod. I would not follow him then.
Iago. O, sir, content you; 31

I follow him to serve my turn upon him.
We cannot all be masters, nor all masters

Cannot be truly follow'd. You shall mark
Many a duteous and knee-crooking knave, 35

That, doting on his own obsequious bondage, Wears out his time, much like his master's ass,

For nought but provender, and when he's old,

cashier'd.

Whip me such honest knaves. Others there are

Who, trimm'd in forms and visages of duty, 40
Keep yet their hearts attending on themselves,
And, throwing but shows of service on their

lords,
Do well thrive by them, and when they have

lin'd their coats
Do themselves homage. These fellows have some soul;

And such a one do I profess myself. For, sir, 45

It is as sure as you are Roderigo,
Were I the Moor, I would not be Iago.

In following him, I follow but myself;
Heaven is my judge, not I for love and duty,

But seeming so, for my peculiar end; 50
For when my outward action doth demonstrate

The native act and figure of my heart
In compliment extern, 'tis not long after

But I will wear my heart upon my sleeve
For daws to peck at. I am not what I am. 55

Rod. What a full fortune does the thick-lips owe,
If he can carry 't thus!

Iago. Call up her father,
Rouse him. Make after him, poison his delight,
Proclaim him in the streets. Incense her kinsmen,

And, though he in a fertile climate dwell, 70
Plague him with flies. Though that his joy be joy,

Yet throw such changes of vexation on 't,
As it may lose some colour.

Rod. Here is her father's house; I'll call aloud.

Iago. Do, with like timorous accent and dire yell 75

As when, by night and negligence, the fire
Is spied in populous cities.

Rod. What, ho, Brabantio! Signior Brabantio, ho!

Iago. Awake! what, ho, Brabantio! thieves! thieves!

Look to your house, your daughter, and your bags! 80

Thieves! thieves!

BRABANTIO [appears] above, at a window.

Bra. What is the reason of this terrible summons?

What is the matter there?

Rod. Signior, is all your family within?

Iago. Are your doors lock'd?

Bra. Why, wherefore ask you this?

Iago. 'Zounds, sir, you're robb'd! For shame, put on your gown. 85

Your heart is burst, you have lost half your soul;

Even now, now, very now, an old black ram

Is tupping your white ewe. Arise, arise!

Awake the snorting citizens with the bell, 90

Or else the devil will make a grandsire of you.
Arise, I say!

Bra. What, have you lost your wits?

Rod. Most reverend signior, do you know my voice?

Bra. Not I. What are you?

Rod. My name is Roderigo.

Bra. The worse welcome;

I have charg'd thee not to haunt about my doors. 95

In honest plainness thou hast heard me say

My daughter is not for thee; and now, in madness,

Being full of supper and distemp'ring draughts,
Upon malicious bravery dost thou come 100

To start my quiet.

Rod. Sir, sir, sir, —

Bra. But thou must needs be sure
My spirits and my place have in their power
To make this bitter to thee.

Rod. Patience, good sir.

Bra. What tell'st thou me of robbing?

This is Venice; 105

My house is not a grange.

Rod. Most grave Brabantio,
In simple and pure soul I come to you.

Iago. 'Zounds, sir, you are one of those that will not serve God, if the devil bid you. Because we come to do you service and you think we are ruffians, you'll have your daughter cover'd with a Barbary horse; you'll have your nephews neigh to you; you'll have coursers for cousins, and gennets for Germans. Swallow

Bra. What profane wretch art thou? his

Iago. I am one, sir, that comes to tell you your daughter and the Moor are now making the beast with two backs.

Bra. Thou art a villain.

Iago. You are — a senator.

Bra. This thou shalt answer; I know thee, 110

Roderigo.

Rod. Sir, I will answer anything. But, I beseech you,

If 't be to your pleasure and most wise consent,
As partly I find it is, that your fair daughter,

At this odd-even and dull watch o' the night,
Transported, with no worse nor better guard, 115

But with a knave of common hire, a gondolier,

To the gross clasps of a lascivious Moor, —
If this be known to you and your allowance,

We then have done you bold and saucy wrongs;
But if you know not this, my manners tell 120

me

We have your wrong rebuke. Do not believe
That, from the sense of all civility,

I thus would play and trifle with your reverence.

Your daughter, if you have not given her leave,

I say again, hath made a gross revolt; 125

Tying her duty, beauty, wit, and fortunes

In an extravagant and wheeling stranger

Of here and everywhere. Straight satisfy yourself.

If she be in her chamber or your house,
Let loose on me the justice of the state 130

For thus deluding you.

Bra. Strike on the tinder, ho!

Give me a taper! Call up all my people!

This accident is not unlike my dream;

Belief of it oppresses me already. 135

Light, I say! light! [Exit above].

Iago. Farewell; for I must leave you.

It seems not meet, nor wholesome to my place,

To be produc'd — as, if I stay, I shall —
Against the Moor; for, I do know, the state,

However this may gall him with some check,
Cannot with safety cast him, for he's embark'd 140

With such loud reason to the Cyprus wars,
Which even now stands in act, that, for their souls,

Another of his fathom they have none,
To lead their business; in which regard,

Though I do hate him as I do hell-pains, 145

Yet, for necessity of present life,
I must show out a flag and sign of love,

Which is indeed but sign. That you shall surely find him,

Lead to the Sagittary the raised search;
And there will I be with him. So, farewell. 150

[Exit.]

Enter [below,] BRABANTIO in his night-gown, and Servants with torches.

Bra. It is too true an evil; gone she is;
And what's to come of my despaired time
Is nought but bitterness. Now, Roderigo,
Where didst thou see her? O unhappy girl!
With the Moor, say'st thou? Who would be a father!¹⁶⁵
How didst thou know 't was she? O, she de-ceives me
Past thought! What said she to you? Get moe tapers;
Raise all my kindred. Are they married, think
you?

Rod. Truly, I think they are.

Bra. O heaven! How got she out? O treason of the blood!¹⁷⁰

Fathers, from hence trust not your daughters'
minds

By what you see them act. Is there not charms
By which the property of youth and maidhood
May be abus'd? Have you not read, Roderigo,
Of some such thing?

Rod. Yes, sir, I have indeed.

Bra. Call up my brother. O, would you had had her!¹⁷⁰

Some one way, some another. Do you know
Where we may apprehend her and the Moor?

Rod. I think I can discover him, if you please
To get good guard and go along with me.¹⁸⁰

Bra. Pray you, lead on. Atevery house I'll
call;

I may command at most. Get weapons, ho!

And raise some special officers of night.

On, good Roderigo; I'll deserve your pains.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. [Another street.]

Enter OTHELLO, IAGO, and Attendants with torches.

Iago. Though in the trade of war I have slain men,

Yet do I hold it very stiff o' the conscience
To do no contriv'd murder. I lack iniquity Sometimes to do me service. Nine or ten times I'd thought to have yerk'd him here under the ribs.⁵

Oth. 'Tis better as it is.

Iago. Nay, but he prated,
And spoke such scurvy and provoking terms
Against your honour

That, with the little godliness I have,
I did full hard forbear him. But, I pray you,
sir,¹⁰

Are you fast married? Be assur'd of this,
That the magnifico is much belov'd,
And hath in his effect a voice potential
As double as the Duke's. He will divorce you;
Or put upon you what restraint or grievance¹⁵
The law, with all his might to enforce it on,
Will give him cable.

Oth. Let him do his spite;
My services which I have done the signiory Shall out-tongue his complaints. 'Tis yet to
know, —

Which, when I know that boasting is an honour,²⁰

I shall promulgate — I fetch my life and being
From men of royal siege, and my demerits
May speak unbounted to as proud a fortune
As this that I have reach'd; for know, Iago,
But that I love the gentle Desdemona,²⁵
I would not my unhoused free condition
Put into circumscription and confine For the sea's worth. But, look! what lights come yond?

Enter CASSIO, with lights, Officers, and torches.

Iago. Those are the raised father and his friends.

You were best go in.

Oth. Not I; I must be found.
My parts, my title, and my perfect soul³¹
Shall manifest me rightly. Is it they?

Iago. By Janus, I think no.

Oth. The servants of the Duke, and my lieutenant.

The goodness of the night upon you, friends!³⁵
What is the news?

Cas. The Duke does greet you, general,
And he requires your haste-post-haste appearance,

Even on the instant.

Oth. What is the matter, think you?

Cas. Something from Cyprus, as I may divine;

It is a business of some heat. The galleys⁴⁰
Have sent a dozen sequent messengers
This very night at one another's heels,
And many of the consuls, rais'd and met,
Are at the Duke's already. You have been hotly call'd for;

When, being not at your lodging to be found,⁴⁵
The Senate hath sent about three several quests
To search you out.

Oth. 'Tis well I am found by you.
I will but spend a word here in the house,
And go with you. [Exit.

Cas. Ancient, what makes he here?

Iago. Faith, he to-night hath boarded a land carack.⁵⁰

If it prove lawful prize, he's made for ever.

Cas. I do not understand.

Iago. He's married.

Cas. To who?

[Re-enter OTHELLO.]

Iago. Marry, to—Come, captain, will you go?

Oth. Have with you.

Cas. Here comes another troop to seek for
you.

Enter BRABANTIO, RODERIGO, and OFFICERS with torches and weapons.

Iago. It is Brabantio. General, be advis'd;⁵⁵
He comes to bad intent.

Oth. Holla! stand there!

Rod. Signior, it is the Moor.

Bra. Down with him, thief!
[They draw on both sides.]

Iago. You, Roderigo! come, sir, I am for
you.

Oth. Keep up your bright swords, for the dew will rust them.
Good signior, you shall more command with years 60

Than with your weapons.

Bra. O thou foul thief, where hast thou stow'd my daughter?

Damn'd as thou art, thou hast enchanted her;
For I'll refer me to all things of sense,
If she in chains of magic were not bound, 65
Whether a maid so tender, fair, and happy,
So opposite to marriage that she shunn'd
The wealthy curled darlings of our nation,
Would ever have, to incur a general mock,
Run from her guardage to the sooty bosom 70
Of such a thing as thou; to fear, not to delight.

Judge me the world, if 't is not gross in sense
That thou hast practis'd on her with foul charms,
Abus'd her delicate youth with drugs or minerals

That weakens motion, I'll have 't disputed on;
'T is probable, and palpable to thinking. 75
I therefore apprehend and do attach thee
For an abuser of the world, a practiser
Of arts inhibited and out of warrant.
Lay hold upon him; if he do resist, 80
Subdue him at his peril.

Oth. Hold your hands,
Both you of my inclining, and the rest.
Were it my cue to fight, I should have known it Without a prompter. Where will you that I go

To answer this your charge?

Bra. To prison, till fit time
Of law and course of direct session 85
Call thee to answer.

Oth. What if I do obey?
How may the Duke be therewith satisfi'd,
Whose messengers are here about my side
Upon some present business of the state 90
To bring me to him?

Off. 'T is true, most worthy signior.
The Duke's in council; and your noble self,
I am sure, is sent for.

Bra. How! the Duke in council!
In this time of the night! Bring him away;
Mine's not an idle cause. The Duke himself, 95
Or any of my brothers of the state,
Cannot but feel this wrong as 't were their own;
For if such actions may have passage free,
Bond-slaves and pagans shall our statesmen be.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. [A council-chamber.]

The DUKE and SENATORS set at a table, with lights; OFFICERS attending.

Duke. There is no composition in these news
That gives them credit.

1. Sen. Indeed, they are disproportioned;
My letters say a hundred and seven galleys.

Duke. And mine, a hundred forty.

2. Sen. And mine, two hundred!
But though they jump not on a just account,—
As in these cases, where the aim reports, 6

'T is oft with difference — yet do they all confirm

A Turkish fleet, and bearing up to Cyprus.

Duke. Nay, it is possible enough to judgement.

I do not so secure me in the error 10

But the main article I do approve

In fearful sense.

Sailor. (Within.) What, ho! what, ho!
what, ho!

Enter a SAILOR.

Off. A messenger from the galleys.

Duke. Now, what's the business?

Sail. The Turkish preparation makes for Rhodes;

So was I bid report here to the state 15

By Signior Angelo.

Duke. How say you by this change?

1. Sen. This cannot be,

By no assay of reason; 't is a pageant,
To keep us in false gaze. When we consider 20

The importancy of Cyprus to the Turk,
And let ourselves again but understand

That, as it more concerns the Turk than Rhodes,

So may he with more facile question bear it,
For that it stands not in such warlike brace,

But altogether lacks the abilities 25
That Rhodes is dress'd in; if we make thought of this,

We must not think the Turk is so unskilful
To leave that latest which concerns him first,

Neglecting an attempt of ease and gain
To wake and wage a danger profitless. 30

Duke. Nay, in all confidence, he's not for Rhodes.

Off. Here is more news.

Enter a MESSENGER.

Mess. The Ottomites, reverend and gracious,
Steering with due course towards the isle of Rhodes,

Have there injointed them with an after fleet.

1. Sen. Ay, so I thought. How many, as you guess? 35

Mess. Of thirty sail; and now they do restem

Their backward course, bearing with frank appearance

Their purposes toward Cyprus. Signior Montano,

Your trusty and most valiant servitor, 40
With his free duty recommends you thus,
And prays you to believe him.

Duke. 'T is certain, then, for Cyprus.

Marcus Lucicos, is not he in town?

1. Sen. He's now in Florence. 45

Duke. Write from us to him; post-post-haste dispatch.

1. Sen. Here comes Brabantio and the valiant Moor.

Enter BRABANTIO, OTHELLO, CASSIO, IAGO, RODERIGO, and Officers.

Duke. Valiant Othello, we must straight employ you

Against the general enemy Ottoman.

[To Brabantio.] I did not see you; welcome, gentle signior; 80

We lack'd your counsel and your help to-night.

Bra. So did I yours. Good your Grace, pardon me;

Neither my place nor aught I heard of business

Hath rais'd me from my bed, nor doth the general care

Take hold on me; for my particular grief 85

Is of so flood-gate and o'erbearing nature

That it engulfs and swallows other sorrows

And it is still itself.

Duke. Why, what's the matter?

Bra. My daughter! O, my daughter!

Sen. Dead?

Bra. Ay, to me;

She is abus'd, stolen from me, and corrupted 90

By spells and medicines bought of mountebanks;

For nature so preposterously to err,

Being not deficient, blind, or lame of sense,

Sans witchcraft could not.

Duke. Whoe'er he be that in this foul proceeding 95

Hath thus beguil'd your daughter of herself

And you of her, the bloody book of law

You shall yourself read in the bitter letter

After your own sense, yea, though our proper 100 stood in your action.

Bra. Humbly I thank your Grace.

Here is the man, — this Moor, whom now, it 105

seems,

Your special mandate for the state affairs

Hath hither brought.

All. We are very sorry for 't.

Duke. [To Othello.] What, in your own part,

can you say to this?

Bra. Nothing, but this is so. 110

Oth. Most potent, grave, and reverend signiors,

My very noble and approv'd good masters,

That I have ta'en away this old man's daughter,

It is most true; true, I have married her:

The very head and front of my offending 115

Hath this extent, no more. Rude am I in my speech,

And little bless'd with the soft phrase of peace;

For since these arms of mine had seven years' 120

pith

Till now, some nine moons wasted, they have us'd

Their dearest action in the tented field, 125

And little of this great world can I speak

More than pertains to feats of broils and battle,

And therefore little shall I grace my cause

In speaking for myself. Yet, by your gracious

patience,

I will a round unvarnish'd tale deliver 130

Of my whole course of love; what drugs, what charms,

What conjuration and what mighty magic,

(For such proceeding I am charg'd withal.)

I won his daughter.

Bra. A maiden never bold;

Of spirit so still and quiet, that her motion 95

Blush'd at herself; and she, in spite of nature,

Of years, of country, credit, everything,

To fall in love with what she fear'd to look on!

It is a judgement main'd and most imperfect

That will confess perfection so could err 100

Against all rules of nature, and must be driven

To find out practices of cunning hell,

Why this should be. I therefore vouch again

That with some mixtures powerful o'er the 105

blood,

Or with some dram conjur'd to this effect,

He wrought upon her.

[Duke.] To vouch this is no proof,

Without more wider and more overt test

Than these thin habits and poor likelihoods

Of modern seeming do prefer against him.

[I.] Sen. But, Othello, speak. 110

Did you by indirect and forced courses

Subdue and poison this young maid's affections?

Or came it by request and such fair question

As soul to soul affordeth?

Oth. I do beseech you,

Send for the lady to the Sagittary, 115

And let her speak of me before her father.

If you do find me foul in her report,

The trust, the office I do hold of you,

Not only take away, but let your sentence

Even fall upon my life.

Duke. Fetch Desdemona hither. 120

[Exeunt two or three.

Oth. Ancient, conduct them; you best know the place. [Exit Iago.] 125

And, till she come, as truly as to heaven

I do confess the vices of my blood,

So justly to your grave ears I'll present

How I did thrive in this fair lady's love, 130

And she in mine.

Duke. Say it, Othello.

Oth. Her father lov'd me; oft invited me;

Still question'd me the story of my life

From year to year, the battles, sieges, fortunes,

That I have pass'd. 135

I ran it through, even from my boyish days,

To the very moment that he bade me tell it;

Wherein I spoke of most disastrous chances,

Of moving accidents by flood and field, 140

Of hair-breadth scapes i' the imminent deadly breach,

Of being taken by the insolent foe

And sold to slavery, of my redemption thence

And portance in my travel's history;

Wherein of antres vast and deserts idle, 145

Rough quarries, rocks, and hills whose heads

touch heaven,

It was my hint to speak, — such was my process, —

And of the Cannibals that each other eat,

The Anthropophagi, and men whose heads

Do grow beneath their shoulders. These to

hear 150

Would Desdemona seriously incline;

But still the house-affairs would draw her

thence,

Which ever as she could with haste dispatch,

She'd come again, and with a greedy ear

Devour up my discourse : which I observing, 150
Took once a pliant hour, and found good means
To draw from her a prayer of earnest heart
That I would all my pilgrimage dilate,
Whereof by parcels she had something heard,
But not intently. I did consent, 155
And often did beguile her of her tears
When I did speak of some distressful stroke
That my youth suffer'd. My story being done,
She gave me for my pains a world of sighs.
She swore, in faith, 't was strange, 't was passing strange, 160

'T was pitiful, 't was wondrous pitiful.
She wish'd she had not heard it ; yet she wish'd That Heaven had made her such a man. She thank'd me.

And bade me, if I had a friend that lov'd her,
I should but teach him how to tell my story,
And that would woo her. Upon this hint I spake : 165

She lov'd me for the dangers I had pass'd,
And I lov'd her that she did pity them.
This only is the witchcraft I have us'd.
Here comes the lady ; let her witness it. 170

Enter DESDEMONA, IAGO, and Attendants.

Duke. I think this tale would win my daughter too.

Good Brabantio,
Take up this mangled matter at the best ;
Men do their broken weapons rather use
Than their bare hands.

Bra. I pray you, hear her speak.
If she confess that she was half the wooer, 175
Destruction on my head, if my bad blame Light on the man ! Come hither, gentle mistress,

Do you perceive in all this noble company
Where most you owe obedience ?

Des. My noble father,
I do perceive here a divided duty. 181
To you I am bound for life and education ;
My life and education both do learn me
How to respect you ; you are the lord of duty ;
I am hitherto your daughter. But here's my husband ; 185

And so much duty as my mother show'd
To you, preferring you before her father,
So much I challenge that I may profess
Due to the Moor, my lord.

Bra. God be with you ! I have done.
Please it your Grace, on to the state-affairs. 190
I had rather to adopt a child than get it.
Come hither, Moor.

I here do give thee that with all my heart
Which, but thou hast already, with all my
heart

I would keep from thee. For your sake, jewel,
I am glad at soul I have no other child ; 195
For thy escape would teach me tyranny,
To hang clogs on them. I have done, my lord.

Duke. Let me speak like yourself, and lay a sentence,

Which, as a grise or step, may help these lovers 200

[Into your favour].

When remedies are past, the griefs are ended

By seeing the worst, which late on hopes dependent.

To mourn a mischief that is past and gone is the next way to draw new mischief on. 205

What cannot be preserv'd when fortune takes,
Patience her injury a mockery makes.

The robb'd that smiles steals something from the thief ;

He robs himself that spends a bootless grief.

Bra. So let the Turk of Cyprus us beguile ;
We lose it not, so long as we can smile. 211

He bears the sentence well that nothing bears
But the free comfort which from thence he hears,

But he bears both the sentence and the sorrow
That, to pay grief, must of poor patience bor-
row. 215

These sentences, to sugar, or to gall,
Being strong on both sides, are equivocal :
But words are words ; I never yet did hear
That the bruised heart was pierced through the ear.

I humbly beseech you, proceed to the affairs of
state. 220

Duke. The Turk with a most mighty preparation makes for Cyprus. Othello, the fortitude of the place is best known to you ; and though we have there a substitute of most allowed sufficiency, yet opinion, a sovereign mistress of effects, throws a more safer voice on you. You must therefore be content to slubber the gloss of your new fortunes with this more stubborn and boisterous expedition. 225

Oth. The tyrant custom, most grave senators,
Hath made the flinty and steel couch of war
My thrice-driven bed of down. I do agnize
A natural and prompt alacrity
I find in hardness, and do undertake
These present wars against the Ottomites. 235
Most humbly therefore bending to your state,
I crave fit disposition for my wife,
Due reference of place and exhibition,
With such accommodation and besort
As levels with her breeding.

Duke. If you please, 240
Be 't at her father's.

Bra. I'll not have it so.

Oth. Nor I.

Des. Nor I ; I would not there reside,
To put my father in impatient thoughts
By being in his eye. Most gracious duke,
To my unfolding lend your prosperous ear ; 245
And let me find a charter in your voice,
To assist my simpleness.

Duke. What would you, Desdemona ?

Des. That I did love the Moor to live with
him,

My downright violence and storm of fortunes
May trumpet to the world. My heart's sub-du'd 251

Even to the very quality of my lord.
I saw Othello's visage in his mind,
And to his honours and his valiant parts
Did I my soul and fortunes consecrate. 255
So that, dear lords, if I be left behind,
A moth of peace, and he go to the war,
The rites for which I love him are bereft me,

And I a heavy interim shall support
By his dear absence. Let me go with him. 260

Oth. Let her have your voice.

Vouch with me, Heaven, I therefore beg it not
To please the palate of my appetite,
Nor to comply with heat, the young affects
In my defunct and proper satisfaction, 265
But to be free and bounteous to her mind;
And Heaven defend your good souls, that you
think

I will your serious and great business scant
When she is with me. No, when light-wing'd toys

Of feather'd Cupid seel with wanton dullness 270
My speculative and offic'd instruments
That my disports corrupt and taint my business,
Let housewives make a skillet of my helm,
And all indign and base adversities
Make head against my estimation! 275

Duke. Be it as you shall privately determine, Either for her stay or going. The affair cries
haste,

And speed must answer it.

I. Sen. You must away to-night.

[Des.] To-night, my lord?

Duke. This night.]

Oth. With all my heart.

Duke. At nine i' the morning here we'll meet again. 280

Othello, leave some officer behind,
And he shall our commission bring to you,
And such things else of quality and respect
As doth import you.

Oth. So please your Grace, my ancient;
A man he is of honesty and trust. 285
To his conveyance I assign my wife,
With what else needful your good Grace shall
think

To be sent after me.

Duke. Let it be so.
Good-night to every one. [To Bra.] And, noble
signior,

If virtue no delighted beauty lack, 290
Your son-in-law is far more fair than black.

I. Sen. Adieu, brave Moor; use Desdemona
well.

Bra. Look to her, Moor, if thou hast eyes to see;

She has deceiv'd her father, and may thee.
[Exeunt [Duke, Senators, Officers, etc.].

Oth. My life upon her faith! Honest Iago,
My Desdemona must I leave to thee. 296

I prithee, let thy wife attend on her;
And bring them after in the best advantage.
Come, Desdemona; I have but an hour
Of love, of worldly matters and direction, 300
To spend with thee. We must obey the time.

[Exeunt Othello and Desdemona.]

Rod. Iago, —

Iago. What say'st thou, noble heart?

Rod. What will I do, think'st thou?

Iago. Why, go to bed, and sleep. 305

Rod. I will incontinently drown myself.

Iago. If thou dost, I shall never love thee after. Why, thou silly gentleman!

Rod. It is silliness to live when to live is torment; and then have we a prescription to die

when Death is our physician. 311

Iago. O villainous! I have look'd upon thee the world for four times seven years; and since I could distinguish betwixt a benefit and an injury, I never found man that knew how to love himself. Ere I would say I would drown myself for the love of a guinea-hen, I would change my humanity with a baboon. 318

Rod. What should I do? I confess it is my shame to be so fond, but it is not in my virtue to amend it. 321

Iago. Virtue! a fig! 'tis in ourselves that we are thus or thus. Our bodies are our gardens, to the which our wills are gardeners; so that if we will plant nettles, or sow lettuce, set hyssop and weed up thyme, supply it with 325 one gender of herbs, or distract it with many,
either to have it sterile with idleness, or manured with industry, why, the power and cor-rigible authority of this lies in our wills. If the balance of our lives had not one scale of rea- 330 son to poise another of sensuality, the blood and baseness of our natures would conduct us to most preposterous conclusions; but we have reason to cool our raging motions, our carnal stings, our unbitted lusts, whereof I take this that you call love to be a sect or scion. 337

Rod. It cannot be.

Iago. It is merely a lust of the blood and a permission of the will. Come, be a man. Drown thyself! drown cats and blind puppies. I have profess'd me thy friend, and I confess me knit to thy deserving with cables of perdurable toughness; I could never better stead thee than now. Put money in thy purse; follow thou the wars; defeat thy favour with an 345 usurp'd beard. I say, put money in thy purse.
It cannot be long that Desdemona should continue her love to the Moor, — put money in thy purse, — nor he his to her. It was a violent commencement in her, and thou shalt see 350 an answerable sequestration. Put but money in thy purse. These Moors are changeable in their wills; — fill thy purse with money; — the food that to him now is as luscious as locusts, shall be to him shortly as bitter as colo- 355 quintida. She must change for youth; when she is sated with his body, she will find the error of her choice; [she must have change, she must:] therefore put money in thy purse.
If thou wilt needs damn thyself, do it a more delicate way than drowning. Make all the 360 money thou canst. If sanctimony and a frail vow betwixt an erring barbarian and a super-subtle Venetian be not too hard for my wits and all the tribe of hell, thou shalt enjoy her;
therefore make money. A pox of drowning 365 thyself! it is clean out of the way. Seek thou rather to be hang'd in compassing thy joy than to be drown'd and go without her.

Rod. Wilt thou be fast to my hopes, if I depend on the issue? 370

Iago. Thou art sure of me. Go, make money.
I had told thee often, and I re-tell thee again and again, I hate the Moor. My cause is hearted; thine hath no less reason. Let us be conjunctive in our revenge against him. If thou canst cuckold him, thou dost thyself a pleasure, me a sport. There are many events in the womb of time which will be delivered. Traverse! go, provide thy money. We will have more of this to-morrow. Adieu.

Rod. Where shall we meet i' the morning?

Iago. At my lodging.

Rod. I'll be with thee betimes.

Iago. Go to; farewell. Do you hear, Rod-
erigo?

[Rod. What say you?]

Iago. No more of drowning, do your hear?

Rod. I am chang'd; I'll go sell all my land.

[Exit.]

Iago. Thus do I ever make my fool my purse;

For I mine own gain'd knowledge should profane

If I would time expend with such a snipe
But for my sport and profit. I hate the Moor;
And it is thought abroad that 'twixt my sheets
He has done my office. I know not if 't be true;

But I, for mere suspicion in that kind,
Will do as if for surety. He holds me well;
The better shall my purpose work on him.
Cassio's a proper man: let me see now:
To get his place and to plume up my will
In double knavery—How, how?—Let
see:—

After some time, to abuse Othello's ear
That he is too familiar with his wife.
He hath a person and a smooth dispose
To be suspected, fram'd to make women false.
The Moor is of a free and open nature,
That thinks men honest that but seem to be so,

And will as tenderly be led by the nose
As asses are.

I have 't. It is engend'ed. Hell and night Must bring this monstrous birth to the world's light.

[Exit.]

ACT II

SCENE I. [A sea-port in Cyprus. An open place near the quay.]

Enter MONTANO and two GENTLEMEN.

Mon. What from the cape can you discern at sea?

1. Gent. Nothing at all; it is a high-wrought flood.

I cannot, 'twixt the heaven and the main,
Descrie a sail.

Mon. Methinks the wind hath spoke aloud
at land;

A fuller blast ne'er shook our battlements.
If it hath ruffian'd so upon the sea,
What ribs of oak, when mountains melt on
them,

Can hold the mortise? What shall we hear of
this?

2. Gent. A segregation of the Turkish fleet.

For do but stand upon the foaming shore,

The chidden billow seems to pelt the clouds;
The wind-shak'd surge, with high and monstrous mane,
Seems to cast water on the burning bear
And quench the guards of the ever-fixed pole.

I never did like molestation view
On the enchafed flood.

Mon. If that the Turkish fleet
Be not enshelter'd and embay'd, they are drown'd;

It is impossible to bear it out.

Enter a third GENTLEMAN.

3. Gent. News, lads! our wars are done.
The desperate tempest hath so bang'd the Turks,
That their designment halts. A noble ship of Venice

Hath seen a grievous wreck and sufferance
On most part of their fleet.

Mon. How! is this true?

3. Gent. The ship is here put in.
A Veronese, Michael Cassio,
Lieutenant to the warlike Moor Othello,
Is come on shore; the Moor himself at sea,
And is in full commission here for Cyprus.

Mon. I am glad on't; 't is a worthy governor.

3. Gent. But this same Cassio, though he speak of comfort
Touching the Turkish loss, yet he looks sadly,
And prays the Moor be safe; for they were parted

With foul and violent tempest.

Mon. Pray heavens he be;
For I have serv'd him, and the man commands
Like a full soldier. Let's to the seaside, ho!
As well to see the vessel that's come in
As to throw out our eyes for brave Othello,
Even till we make the main and the aerial blue
An indistinct regard.

3. Gent. Come, let's do so;
For every minute is expectancy
Of more arrival.

Enter CASSIO.

Cas. Thanks, you the valiant of this warlike isle,
That so approve the Moor! O, let the heavens
Give him defence against the elements,
For I have lost him on a dangerous sea.

Mon. Is he well shipp'd?

Cas. His bark is stoutly timber'd, and his pilot

Of very expert and approv'd allowance;
Therefore my hopes, not surfeited to death,
Stand in bold cure.

[Within, "A sail, a sail, a sail!"]

Enter a [fourth GENTLEMAN].

Cas. What noise?

[4. Gent.] The town is empty; on the brow
o' the sea

Stand ranks of people, and they cry, "A sail!"

Cas. My hopes do shape him for the governor.

[A shot.]

2. Gent. They do discharge their shot of courtesy. 66

Our friends at least.

Cas. I pray you, sir, go forth,
And give us truth who 't is that is arriv'd.

2. Gent. I shall. [Exit.]

Mon. But, good lieutenant, is your general
wiv'd? 69

Cas. Most fortunately. He hath achiev'd a maid

That paragons description and wild fame;
One that excels the quirks of blazoning pens,
And in the essential vesture of creation
Does tire the ingener.

Re-enter second GENTLEMAN.

How now! who has put in?

2. Gent. 'T is one Iago, ancient to the general. 66

Cas. He has had most favourable and happy speed.

Tempests themselves, high seas, and howling
winds,

The gutter'd rocks and congregated sands,
Traitors ensteep'd to clog the guiltless keel, 70
As having sense of beauty do omit
Their mortal natures, letting go safely by
The divine Desdemona.

Mon. What is she?

Cas. She that I spake of, our great captain's captain,

Left in the conduct of the bold Iago, 75
Whose footing here anticipates our thoughts
A se'night's speed. Great Jove, Othello guard,
And swell his sail with thine own powerful
breath,

That he may bless this bay with his tall ship,
Make love's quick pants in Desdemona's arms,
Give renew'd fire to our extincted spirits, 81
[And bring all Cyprus comfort!]

Enter DESDEMONA, EMILIA, IAGO, RODERIGO
[and Attendants].

O, behold,

The riches of the ship is come on shore!
You men of Cyprus, let her have your knees.
Hail to thee, lady! and the grace of heaven,
Before, behind thee, and on every hand, 86
Enwheel thee round!

Des. I thank you, valiant Cassio.
What tidings can you tell me of my lord?

Cas. He is not yet arriv'd; nor know I aught
But that he's well and will be shortly here. 90

Des. O, but I fear — How lost you company?

Cas. The great contention of the sea and skies

Parted our fellowship. — But, hark! a sail.
[Within, "A sail, a sail!" [Guns
heard.]

2. Gent. They give their greeting to the citadel. 95

This likewise is a friend.

Cas. See for the news.
[Exit Gentleman.]

Good ancient, you are welcome. [To Emilia.]
Welcome, mistress.

Let it not gall your patience, good Iago,

That I extend my manners; 't is my breeding
That gives me this bold show of courtesy. 100

[Kissing her.]

Iago. Sir, would she give you so much of her lips

As of her tongue she oft bestows on me,
You 'd have enough.

Des. Alas, she has no speech.

Iago. In faith, too much;

I find it still, when I have list to sleep. 105

Marry, before your ladyship, I grant,

She puts her tongue a little in her heart,
And chides with thinking.

Emil. You have little cause to say so.

Iago. Come on, come on; you are pictures out of doors, 110

Bells in your parlours, wild-cats in your kitchens,

Saints in your injuries, devils being offended,
Players in your housewifery, and housewives

in your beds.

Des. O, fie upon thee, slanderer!

Iago. Nay, it is true, or else I am a Turk.
You rise to play and go to bed to work. 116

Emil. You shall not write my praise.

Iago. No, let me not.

Des. What wouldst thou write of me, if thou shouldst praise me?

Iago. O gentle lady, do not put me to 't;
For I am nothing, if not critical. 120

Des. Come on, assay. — There's one gone to the harbour?

Iago. Ay, madam.

Des. I am not merry; but I do beguile

The thing I am, by seeming otherwise. —
Come, how wouldst thou praise me? 125

Iago. I am about it; but indeed my invention

Comes from my pate as birdlime does from frieze;

It plucks out brains and all. But my Muse labours,

And thus she is deliver'd:

If she be fair and wise, fairness and wit, 130
The one's for use, the other useth it.

Des. Well prais'd! How if she be black and witty?

Iago. If she be black, and thereto have a wit,
She'll find a white that shall her blackness fit.

Des. Worse and worse. 135

Emil. How if fair and foolish?

Iago. She never yet was foolish that was fair;

For even her folly help'd her to an heir.

Des. These are old fond paradoxes to make fools laugh! the alehouse. What miserable praise hast thou for her that's foul and foolish? 141

Iago. There's none so foul and foolish there-unto,

But does foul pranks which fair and wise ones
do.

Des. O heavy ignorance! thou praisest the worst best. But what praise couldst thou bestow on a deserving woman indeed, one that, in the authority of her merit, did justly put on the vouch of very malice itself? 146

Iago. She that was ever fair and never proud,
Had tongue at will and yet was never loud,
Never lack'd gold and yet went never gay,
Fled from her wish and yet said, "Now I may,"
She that being ang'r'd, her revenge being nigh,

Bade her wrong stay and her displeasure fly,
She that in wisdom never was so frail ¹⁵⁵
To change the cod's head for the salmon's tail,
She that could think and ne'er disclose her
mind,

See suitors following and not look behind,
She was a wight, if ever such wights were, —
Des. To do what? ¹⁶⁰

Iago. To suckle fools and chronicle small beer.

Des. O most lame and impotent conclusion!
Do not learn of him, Emilia, though he be thy husband. How say you, Cassio? Is he not a most profane and liberal counsellor? ¹⁶⁵

Cas. He speaks home, madam. You may relish him more in the soldier than in the scholar.

Iago. [Aside.] He takes her by the palm;
ay, well said, whisper. With as little a web as this will I ensnare as great a fly as Cassio. Ay, smile upon her, do; I will gye thee in thine ¹⁷⁰ own courtship. — You say true; 't is so, indeed.
— If such tricks as these strip you out of your lieutenantry, it had been better you had not kiss'd your three fingers so oft, which now again you are most apt to play the sir in. ¹⁷⁵
Very good; well kiss'd! an excellent curtsy!
'T is so, indeed. Yet again your fingers to your lips? Would they were clyster-pipes for your sake! (Trumpet within.) — The Moor! I know his trumpet. ¹⁸⁰

Cas. 'T is truly so.

Des. Let's meet him and receive him.

Cas. Lo, where he comes!

Enter OTHELLO and Attendants.

Oth. O my fair warrior!

Des. My dear Othello!

Oth. It gives me wonder great as my content
To see you here before me. O my soul's joy! ¹⁸⁵
If after every tempest come such calms,
May the winds blow till they have waken'd
death!

And let the labouring bark climb hills of seas
Olympus-high, and duck again as low ¹⁹⁰
As hell's from heaven! If it were now to die,
'T were now to be most happy: for, I fear,
My soul hath her content so absolute
That not another comfort like to this ¹⁹⁴
Succeeds in unknown fate.

Des. The heavens forbid
But that our loves and comforts should increase,

Even as our days do grow!

Oth. Amen to that, sweet powers!
I cannot speak enough of this content;
It stops me here; it is too much of joy.
And this, and this, the greatest discords be ²⁰⁰

That e'er our hearts shall make! [Kissing her.]

Iago. [Aside.] O, you are well tun'd now!

But I'll set down the pegs that make this music,
As honest as I am.

Oth. Come, let us to the castle.
News, friends: our wars are done, the Turks are drown'd.

How does my old acquaintance of this isle? ²⁰⁵
Honey, you shall be well desir'd in Cyprus;
I have found great love amongst them. O my
sweet,

I prattle out of fashion, and I dote
In mine own comforts. I prithee, good Iago,
Go to the bay and disembark my coffers. ²¹⁰
Bring thou the master to the citadel;
He is a good one, and his worthiness
Does challenge much respect. Come, Desdemona,

Once more, well met at Cyprus. ²¹⁴
[Exeunt Othello, Desdemona [and Attendants].]

Iago. Do thou meet me presently at the harbour. Come hither. If thou be'st valiant, — as, they say, base men being in love have then a nobility in their natures more than is native to them, — list me. The lieutenant to-night watches on the court of guard; — first, I must tell thee this: Desdemona is directly in love with him. ²²¹

Rod. With him! why, 't is not possible.

Iago. Lay thy finger thus, and let thy soul be instructed. Mark me with what violence she first lov'd the Moor, but for bragging and telling her fantastical lies. To love him ²²⁵ still for prating, — let not thy discreet heart think it. Her eye must be fed; and what delight shall she have to look on the devil? When the blood is made dull with the act of sport, there should be, again to inflame it, and to ²³⁰ give satiety a fresh appetite, loveliness in favour, sympathy in years, manners, and beauties; all which the Moor is defective in. Now, for want of these requir'd conveniences, her delicate tenderness will find itself abus'd, begin to heave ²³⁵
the gorge, disrelish and abhor the Moor. Very nature will instruct her in it and compel her to some second choice. Now, sir, this granted, — as it is a most pregnant and unforc'd position — who stands so eminent in the degree ²⁴⁰ of this fortune as Cassio does? a knave very vulnerable; no further conscionable than in putting on the mere form of civil and humane seeming, for the better compassing of his salt and most hidden loose affection? Why, none;
why, none; a slipper and subtle knave, a ²⁴⁵ finder of occasion, that has an eye can stamp and counterfeit advantages, though true advantage never present itself; a devilish knave.
Besides, the knave is handsome, young, and hath all those requisites in him that folly ²⁵⁰
and green minds look after; a pestilent complete knave, and the woman hath found him already.

Rod. I cannot believe that in her; she's full of most bless'd condition. ²⁵⁵

Iago. Bless'd fig's-end! The wine she drinks is made of grapes. If she had been bless'd, she would never have lov'd the Moor. Bless'd pudding! Didst thou not see her paddle with the palm of his hand? Didst not mark that? 200

Rod. Yes, that I did; but that was but courtesy.

Iago. Lechery, by this hand; an index and obscure prologue to the history of lust and foul thoughts. They met so near with their lips that their breaths embrac'd together. Vil- [205] lanous thoughts, Roderigo! When these mutualities so marshal the way, hard at hand comes the master and main exercise, the incorporate conclusion. Pish! But, sir, be you rul'd by me; I have brought you from Venice. Watch [270] you to-night; for the command, I'll lay 't upon you. Cassio knows you not. I'll not be far from you. Do you find some occasion to anger Cassio, either by speaking too loud, or tainting his discipline; or from what other course [275] you please, which the time shall more favourably minister.

Rod. Well?

Iago. Sir, he's rash and very sudden in cholour, and haply may strike at you. Provoke him, that he may; for even out of that [280] will I cause these of Cyprus to mutiny, whose qualification shall come into no true taste again but by the displanting of Cassio. So shall you have a shorter journey to your desires by the means I shall then have to prefer them; [285] and the impediment most profitably removed, without the which there were no expectation of our prosperity.

Rod. I will do this, if you can bring it to any opportunity. 290

Iago. I warrant thee. Meet me by and by at the citadel; I must fetch his necessaries ashore. Farewell.

Rod. Adieu.

[Exit.

Iago. That Cassio loves her, I do well believe 't; 295
That she loves him, 't is apt and of great credit;

The Moor, howbeit that I endure him not,
Is of a constant, loving, noble nature,
And I dare think he'll prove to Desdemona
A most dear husband. Now, I do love her 300
too;

Not out of absolute lust, though peradventure

I stand accountant for as great a sin,
But partly led to diet my revenge,
For that I do suspect the lusty Moor
Hath leap'd into my seat; the thought 305 whereof

Doth, like a poisonous mineral, gnaw my in-

wards;
And nothing can or shall content my soul
Till I am even'd with him, wife for wife;
Or failing so, yet that I put the Moor
At least into a jealousy so strong 310
That judgement cannot cure. Which thing to do,

If this poor trash of Venice, whom I trash
For his quick hunting, stand the putting on,
I'll have our Michael Cassio on the hip.
Abuse him to the Moor in the rank garb— 315
For I fear Cassio with my night-cap too—

Make the Moor thank me, love me, and reward me,

For making him egregiously an ass
And practising upon his peace and quiet
Even to madness. 'T is here, but yet con- 320 fus'd;

Knavery's plain face is never seen till us'd. [Exit.

SCENE II. [A street.]

Enter Othello's HERALD, with a proclamation
[People following].

Her. It is Othello's pleasure, our noble and valiant general, that, upon certain tidings now arriv'd importing the mere perdition of the Turkish fleet, every man put himself into triumph; some to dance, some to make bon-fires, each man to what sport and revels his [5] addiction leads him; for, beside these beneficial news, it is the celebration of his nuptial. So much was his pleasure should be proclaimed. All offices are open, and there is full liberty of feasting from this present hour of five till [10] the bell have told eleven. Heaven bless the isle of Cyprus and our noble general Othello!

[Exeunt.

[SCENE III. A hall in the castle.]

Enter OTHELLO, DESDEMONA, CASSIO, and Attendants.

Oth. Good Michael, look you to the guard to-night.

Let's teach ourselves that honourable stop,
Not to outsport discretion.

Cas. Iago hath direction what to do;
But, notwithstanding, with my personal eye
Will I look to 't.

Oth. Iago is most honest.
Michael, good-night; to-morrow with your ear- 3
liest

Let me have speech with you. [To Desdemona.]

Come, my dear love,
The purchase made, the fruits are to ensue; 9
That profit's yet to come 'tween me and you.
Good-night.

[Exeunt [Othello, Desdemona, and Attendants].

Enter IAGO.

Cas. Welcome, Iago; we must to the watch.

Iago. Not this hour, lieutenant; 't is not yet ten o' the clock. Our general cast us thus early for the love of his Desdemona; who let us not therefore blame. He hath not yet made wan- ton the night with her; and she is sport for Jove. 17

Cas. She's a most exquisite lady.

Iago. And, I'll warrant her, full of game.

Cas. Indeed, she's a most fresh and delicate creature. 21

Iago. What an eye she has! Methinks it sounds a parley to provocation.

Cas. An inviting eye; and yet methinks right modest.

Iago. And when she speaks, is it not an alarm to love? 27

Cas. She is indeed perfection.

Iago. Well, happiness to their sheets! Come, lieutenant, I have a stoup of wine; and here without are a brace of Cyprus gallants that would fain have a measure to the health of black Othello. 33

Cas. Not to-night, good Iago. I have very poor and unhappy brains for drinking; I could well wish courtesy would invent some other custom of entertainment.

Iago. O, they are our friends. But one cup; I'll drink for you. 39

Cas. I have drunk but one cup to-night, and that was craftily qualified too, and, behold, what innovation it makes here. I am unfortunate in the infirmity, and dare not task my weakness with any more. 44

Iago. What, man! 't is a night of revels. The gallants desire it.

Cas. Where are they?

Iago. Here at the door; I pray you, call them in.

Cas. I'll do 't; but it dislikes me. [Exit.]

Iago. If I can fasten but one cup upon him, 50
With that which he hath drunk to-night already,

He'll be as full of quarrel and offence
As my young mistress' dog. Now, my sick fool
Roderigo,

Whom love hath turn'd almost the wrong side
out,

To Desdemona hath to-night carous'd 55
Potations pottle-deep; and he's to watch.

Three else of Cyprus, noble swelling spirits
That hold their honours in a wary distance,
The very elements of this warlike isle,
Have I to-night fluster'd with flowing cups, 60
And they watch too. Now, 'mongst this flock of drunkards

Am I to put our Cassio in some action
That may offend the isle. But here they come.

Re-enter CASSIO; with him MONTANO and GENTLEMEN [Servants follow with wine].

If consequence do but approve my dream,
My boat sails freely, both with wind and stream. 65

Cas. 'Fore God, they have given me a rouse
already.

Mon. Good faith, a little one; not past a pint, as I am a soldier.

Iago. Some wine, ho! 70
[Sings.] "And let me the canakin clink, clink;
And let me the canakin clink.

A soldier's a man;

O, man's life 's but a span;

Why, then, let a soldier drink." 75

Some wine, boys!

Cas. 'Fore God, an excellent song.

Iago. I learn'd it in England, where, indeed, they are most potent in potting; your Dane,
your German, and your swag-belli'd Hollander
— Drink, ho! — are nothing to your English. 81

Cas. Is your Englishman so exquisite in his drinking?

Iago. Why, he drinks you, with facility, your Dane dead drunk; he sweats not to overthrow your Almain; he gives your Hollander a vomit ere the next pottle can be fill'd. 87

Cas. To the health of our general!

Mon. I am for it, lieutenant; and I'll do you justice. 90

Iago. O sweet England!

"King Stephen was and a worthy peer,
His breeches cost him but a crown;
He held them sixpence all too dear,
With that he call'd the tailor lown. 95

"He was a wight of high renown,
And thou art but of low degree.

"T is pride that pulls the country down;
And take thy auld cloak about thee."

Some wine, ho! 100

Cas. Why, this is a more exquisite song than the other.

Iago. Will you hear 't again?

Cas. No; for I hold him to be unworthy of his place that does those things. Well, God's above all; and there be souls must be saved, and there be souls must not be saved. 107

Iago. It's true, good lieutenant.

Cas. For mine own part, — no offence to the general, nor any man of quality, — I hope to be saved. 111

Iago. And so do I too, lieutenant.

Cas. Ay, but, by your leave, not before me;
the lieutenant is to be saved before the ancient.
Let's have no more of this; let's to our affairs. — God forgive us our sins! — Gentle- 115 men, let's look to our business. Do not think, gentlemen, I am drunk. This is my ancient;
this is my right hand, and this is my left. I am not drunk now; I can stand well enough, and I speak well enough. 120

Gent. Excellent well.

Cas. Why, very well then; you must not think then that I am drunk. [Exit.]

Mon. To the platform, masters; come, let's set the watch. 125

Iago. You see this fellow that is gone before:
He is a soldier fit to stand by Cæsar
And give direction; and do but see his vice.
'T is to his virtue a just equinox,
The one as long as the other; 't is pity of him.
I fear the trust Othello puts him in,
On some odd time of his infirmity,
Will shake this island. 131

Mon. But is he often thus?

Iago. 'T is evermore his prologue to his sleep.
He'll watch the horologe a double set,
If drink rock not his cradle. 135

Mon. It were well
The general were put in mind of it.

Perhaps he sees it not; or his good nature
Prizes the virtue that appears in Cassio,
And looks not on his evils. Is not this true? 140

Enter RODERIGO.

Iago. [Aside to him.] How now, Roderigo!
I pray you, after the lieutenant; go.

[Exit Roderigo.]

Mon. And 't is great pity that the noble Moor

Should hazard such a place as his own second
With one of an ingraft infirmity. 145
It were an honest action to say
So to the Moor.

Iago. Not I, for this fair island.
I do love Cassio well; and would do much To cure him of this evil. — But, hark! what noise? [Cry within: "Help! help!"]

Re-enter CASSIO, pursuing RODERIGO.

Cas. 'Zounds, you rogue! you rascal!

Mon. What's the matter, lieutenant?

Cas. A knave teach me my duty! 151

I'll beat the knave into a twiggen bottle.

Rod. Beat me!

Cas. Dost thou prate, rogue?

[Striking Roderigo.]

Mon. Nay, good lieutenant;

[Staying him.]

I pray you, sir, hold your hand.

Cas. Let me go, sir,

Or I'll knock you o'er the mazzard.

Mon. Come, come, you're drunk. 155

Cas. Drunk! [They fight.]

Iago. [Aside to Roderigo.] Away, I say; go out, and cry a mutiny. [Exit Roderigo.]

Nay, good lieutenant, — God's will, gentle-
men; —

Help, ho! — Lieutenant, — sir, — Montano, —
sir; —

Help, masters! — Here's a goodly watch indeed! [Bell rings.]

Who's that which rings the bell? — Diablo, ho! 160

The town will rise. God's will, lieutenant,
hold!

You will be sham'd for ever.

Re-enter OTHELLO and Attendants.

Oth. What is the matter here?

Mon. 'Zounds, I bleed still; I am hurt to the death. He dies!

Oth. Hold, for your lives! 165

Iago. Hold, ho! Lieutenant, — sir, — Mon-tano, — gentlemen, —

Have you forgot all sense of place and duty?
Hold! the general speaks to you; hold, for
shame!

Oth. Why, how now, ho! from whence aristeth this?

Are we turn'd Turks, and to ourselves do that
Which Heaven hath forbid the Ottomites? 171
For Christian shame, put by this barbarous brawl.

He that stirs next to carve for his own rage
Holds his soul light; he dies upon his motion.
Silence that dreadful bell; it frights the isle
From her propriety. What is the matter, masters? 176

Honest Iago, that looks dead with grieving, Speak, who began this? On thy love, I charge
thee.

Iago. I do not know. Friends all but now,
even now, 179

In quarter, and in terms like bride and groom
Devesting them for bed; and then, but now —
As if some planet had unwitting men —

Swords out, and tilting one at other's breast,
In opposition bloody. I cannot speak
Any beginning to this peevish odds; 185
And would in action glorious I had lost
Those legs that brought me to a part of it!

Oth. How comes it, Michael, you are thus forgot?

Cas. I pray you, pardon me; I cannot speak.
Oth. Worthy Montano, you were wont to be civil; 190

The gravity and stillness of your youth
The world hath noted, and your name is great
In mouths of wisest censure. What's the matter,

That you unlace your reputation thus,
And spend your rich opinion for the name 195
Of a night-brawler? Give me answer to it.

Mon. Worthy Othello, I am hurt to danger.
Your officer, Iago, can inform you — While I spare speech, which something now offends me —

Of all that I do know; nor know I aught 200
By me that's said or done amiss this night,
Unless self-charity be sometimes a vice,
And to defend ourselves it be a sin
When violence assails us.

Oth. Now, by heaven,
My blood begins my safer guides to rule; 205
And passion, having my best judgement collied,
Assays to lead the way. If I once stir
Or do but lift this arm, the best of you Shall sink in my rebuke. Give me to know
How this foul rout began, who set it on; 210
And he that is approv'd in this offence,
Though he had twinn'd with me, both at a birth,

Shall lose me. What! in a town of war,
Yet wild, the people's hearts brimful of fear,
To manage private and domestic quarrel, 215
In night, and on the court and guard of safety!
'T is monstrous. Iago, who began 't?

Mon. If partially affin'd, or leagu'd in office,
Thou dost deliver more or less than truth,
Thou art no soldier.

Iago. Touch me not so near. 220
I had rather have this tongue cut from my mouth

Than it should do offence to Michael Cassio;
Yet, I persuade myself, to speak the truth
Shall nothing wrong him. Thus it is, general:
Montano and myself being in speech, 225
There comes a fellow crying out for help;
And Cassio following him with determin'd
sword

To execute upon him. Sir, this gentleman
Steps in to Cassio and entreats his pause;
Myself the crying fellow did pursue, 230
Lest by his clamour — as it so fell out —
The town might fall in fright. He, swift of foot,

Outran my purpose; and I return'd the rather
For that I heard the clink and fall of swords,
And Cassio high in oath; which till to-night 235
I ne'er might say before. When I came back —
For this was brief — I found them close together,

At blow and thrust; even as again they were

When you yourself did part them.
More of this matter cannot I report. 240
But men are men; the best sometimes forget.
Though Cassio did some little wrong to him,
As men in rage strike those that wish them
best,

Yet surely Cassio, I believe, receiv'd
From him that fled some strange indignity 245
Which patience could not pass.

Oth. I know, Iago,
Thy honesty and love doth mince this matter,
Making it light to Cassio. Cassio, I love thee;
But never more be officer of mine.

Re-enter DESDEMONA, attended.

Look, if my gentle love be not rais'd up! 250
I'll make thee an example.

Des. What's the matter, dear?

Oth. All's well now, sweeting; come away to bed.
Sir, for your hurts, myself will be your surgeon.—

Lead him off. [To Montano, who is led off.]
Iago, look with care about the town, 255
And silence those whom this vile brawl distracted.

Come, Desdemona; 't is the soldiers' life
To have their balmy slumbers wak'd with strife. [Exeunt all but Iago and Cassio.]

Iago. What, are you hurt, lieutenant?

Cas. Ay, past all surgery. 260

Iago. Marry, God forbid!

Cas. Reputation, reputation, reputation! O,
I have lost my reputation! I have lost the immortal part of myself, and what remains is bestial. My reputation, Iago, my reputation! 265

Iago. As I am an honest man, I thought you had received some bodily wound; there is more sense in that than in reputation. Reputation is an idle and most false imposition; oft got without merit, and lost without deserving. You have lost no reputation at all, unless you re- 270 pute yourself such a loser. What, man! there are more ways to recover the general again.
You are but now cast in his mood, a punishment more in policy than in malice; even so as one would beat his offenceless dog to affright an imperious lion. Sue to him again, and he's yours. 277

Cas. I will rather sue to be despis'd than to deceive so good a commander with so slight, so drunken, and so indiscreet an officer. Drunk?
and speak parrot? and squabble? swagger?
swear? and discourse fustian with one's own shadow? O thou invisible spirit of wine, if thou hast no name to be known by, let us call thee devil! 284

Iago. What was he that you follow'd with your sword? What had he done to you?

Cas. I know not.

Iago. Is't possible? 288

Cas. I remember a mass of things, but nothing distinctly; a quarrel, but nothing wherefore. O God, that men should put an enemy in their mouths to steal away their brains! That we should, with joy, pleasance, revel, and applause, transform ourselves into beasts! 294

Iago. Why, but you are now well enough.
How came you thus recovered?

Cas. It hath pleas'd the devil drunkenness to give place to the devil wrath. One unper-fectness shows me another, to make me frankly despise myself. 300

Iago. Come, you are too severe a moral-er. As the time, the place, and the condition of this country stands, I could heartily wish this had not befallen; but, since it is as it is, mend
it for your own good. 305

Cas. I will ask him for my place again; he shall tell me I am a drunkard! Had I as many mouths as Hydra, such an answer would stop them all. To be now a sensible man, by and by a fool, and presently a beast! O strange!
Every inordinate cup is unblest'd and the ingredient is a devil. 315

Iago. Come, come, good wine is a good familiar creature, if it be well us'd; exclaim no more against it. And, good lieutenant, I think you think I love you. 318

Cas. I have well approved it, sir. I drunk!

Iago. You or any man living may be drunk at a time, man. I'll tell you what you shall do.
Our general's wife is now the general;—I may say so in this respect, for that he hath de- 320 voted and given up himself to the contemplation, mark, and denotement of her parts and graces;—confess yourself freely to her; im-portune her help to put you in your place again.
She is of so free, so kind, so apt, so blessed 325
a disposition, she holds it a vice in her goodness not to do more than she is requested. This broken joint between you and her husband entreat her to splinter; and, my fortunes against any lay worth naming, this crack of your love shall grow stronger than it was before. 331

Cas. You advise me well.

Iago. I protest, in the sincerity of love and honest kindness. 334

Cas. I think it freely; and betimes in the morning I will beseech the virtuous Desdemona to undertake for me. I am desperate of my fortunes if they check me here.

Iago. You are in the right. Good-night, lieutenant; I must to the watch. 340

Cas. Good-night, honest Iago.

Iago. And what's he then that says I play
the villain? [Exit.]

When this advice is free I give and honest,
Probal to thinking and indeed the course
To win the Moor again? For 't is most easy 345
The inclining Desdemona to subdue
In any honest suit; she's fram'd as fruitful
As the free elements. And then for her
To win the Moor, were't to renounce his baptism,

All seals and symbols of redeemed sin, 350
His soul is so enfeet'd to her love,
That she may make, unmake, do what she list,
Even as her appetite shall play the god
With his weak function. How am I then a villain

To counsel Cassio to this parallel course, 355
Directly to his good? Divinity of hell!
When devils will the blackest sins put on,

They do suggest at first with heavenly shows,
 As I do now ; for whiles this honest fool
 Plies Desdemona to repair his fortunes ³⁵⁰
 And she for him pleads strongly to the Moor,
 I'll pour this pestilence into his ear,
 That she repeals him for her body's lust ;
 And by how much she strives to do him good,
 She shall undo her credit with the Moor. ³⁶⁵
 So will I turn her virtue into pitch,
 And out of her own goodness make the net
 That shall enmesh them all.

Re-enter RODERIGO.

Rod. How now, Roderigo !
 I do follow here in the chase, not like a hound that hunts, but one that fills up the cry. My money is almost spent ; I have ³⁷⁰ been to-night exceedingly well cudgell'd ; and I think the issue will be, I shall have so much experience for my pains ; and so, with no money at all and a little more wit, return again to Venice. ³⁷⁵

Iago. How poor are they that have not patience !

What wound did ever heal but by degrees ?
 Thou know'st we work by wit, and not by witchcraft ;

And wit depends on dilatory time.
 Does't not go well ? Cassio hath beaten thee,
 And thou, by that small hurt, hast cashier'd
 Cassio. ³⁸¹

Though other things grow fair against the sun,
 Yet fruits that blossom first will first be ripe.
 Content thyself a while. By the mass, 't is morning ;

Pleasure and action make the hours seem short.
 Retire thee ; go where thou art billeted. ³⁸⁶

Away, I say ; thou shalt know more hereafter.
 Nay, get thee gone. [Exit Roderigo.] Two things are to be done :

My wife must move for Cassio to her mistress ;
 I'll set her on ; ³⁹⁰

Myself the while to draw the Moor apart,
 And bring him jump when he may Cassio find Soliciting his wife. Ay, that's the way ;
 Dull not device by coldness and delay. [Exit.]

ACT III

SCENE I. [Before the castle.]

Enter CASSIO, with MUSICIANS.

Cas. Masters, play here ; I will content your pains ;
 Something that's brief ; and bid " Good morrow, general." [They play.]

Enter CLOWN.

Clo. Why, masters, have your instruments been in Naples, that they speak i' the nose thus ?

1. Mus. How, sir, how ? ⁵

Clo. Are these, I pray you, wind-instruments ?

1. Mus. Ay, marry, are they, sir.

Clo. O, thereby hangs a tail.

1. Mus. Whereby hangs a tale, sir ? ⁹

Clo. Marry, sir, by many a wind-instrument that I know. But, masters, here's money for you ; and the general so likes your music, that he desires you, for love's sake, to make no more noise with it.

1. Mus. Well, sir, we will not. ¹⁵

Clo. If you have any music that may not be heard, to 't again ; but, as they say, to hear music the general does not greatly care.

1. Mus. We have none such, sir.

Clo. Then put up your pipes in your bag, for I'll away. Go, vanish into air, away ! ²¹

[Exeunt Musicians.]

Cas. Dost thou hear, mine honest friend ?

Clo. No, I hear not your honest friend ; I hear you. ²⁴

Cas. Prithee, keep up thy quillets. There's a poor piece of gold for thee. If the gentlewoman that attends the general's wife be stirring, tell her there's one Cassio entreats her a little favour of speech. Wilt thou do this ?

Clo. She is stirring, sir. If she will stir hither, I shall seem to notify unto her. ³¹

Cas. [Do, good my friend.] [Exit Clown.]

Enter IAGO.

In happy time, Iago.

Iago. You have not been a-bed, then ?

Cas. Why, no ; the day had broke
 Before we parted. I have made bold, Iago, ³⁵
 To send in to your wife. My suit to her
 Is, that she will to virtuous Desdemona
 Procure me some access.

Iago. I'll send her to you presently ;
 And I'll devise a mean to draw the Moor
 Out of the way, that your converse and business ⁴⁰

May be more free.

Cas. I humbly thank you for 't. [Exit Iago.]

I never knew

A Florentine more kind and honest.

Enter EMILIA.

Emil. Good morrow, good lieutenant. I am sorry

For your displeasure ; but all will sure be well. ⁴⁵

The general and his wife are talking of it,
 And she speaks for you stoutly. The Moor replies,

That he you hurt is of great fame in Cyprus
 And great affinity, and that in wholesome wisdom

He might not but refuse you ; but he protests
 he loves you, ⁵⁰

And needs no other suitor but his likings
 [To take the safest occasion by the front]
 To bring you in again.

Cas. Yet, I beseech you,
 If you think fit, or that it may be done,
 Give me advantage of some brief discourse ⁵⁵
 With Desdemona alone.

Emil. Pray you, come in.
 I will bestow you where you shall have time
 To speak your bosom freely.

Cas. I am much bound to you.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. [A room in the castle.]Enter OTHELLO, IAGO, and GENTLEMEN.

Oth. These letters give, Iago, to the pilot;
 And by him do my duties to the Senate.
 That done, I will be walking on the works;
 Repair there to me.

Iago. Well, my good lord, I'll do 't.
Oth. This fortification, gentlemen, shall we see 't?

Gent. We'll wait upon your lordship.
 [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. [The garden of the castle.]Enter DESDEMONA, CASSIO, and EMILIA.

Des. Be thou assur'd, good Cassio, I will do
 All my abilities in thy behalf.

Emil. Good madam, do. I warrant it grieves my husband

As if the cause were his.

Des. O, that's an honest fellow. Do not doubt, Cassio,

But I will have my lord and you again
 As friendly as you were.

Cas. Bounteous madam,
 Whatever shall become of Michael Cassio,
 He's never anything but your true servant.

Des. I know 't; I thank you. You do love
 my lord;

You have known him long; and be you well
 assur'd

He shall in strangeness stand no farther off
 Than in a politic distance.

Cas. Ay, but, lady,
 That policy may either last so long,
 Or feed upon such nice and waterish diet,
 Or breed itself so out of circumstances,
 That, I being absent and my place suppli'd,
 My general will forget my love and service.

Des. Do not doubt that; before Emilia here
 I give thee warrant of thy place. Assure thee,
 If I do vow a friendship, I'll perform it
 To the last article. My lord shall never rest;
 I'll watch him tame, and talk him out of patience;

His bed shall seem a school, his board a shrift;
 I'll intermingle everything he does
 With Cassio's suit. Therefore be merry, Cassio;
 For thy solicitor shall rather die
 Than give thy cause away.

Enter OTHELLO and IAGO.

Emil. Madam, here comes my lord.

Cas. Madam, I'll take my leave.

Des. Why, stay, and hear me speak.

Cas. Madam, not now; I am very ill at ease,
 Unfit for mine own purposes.

Des. Well, do your discretion. [Exit Cassio.]

Iago. Ha! I like not that.

Oth. What dost thou say?
Iago. Nothing, my lord; or if — I know not what.

Oth. Was not that Cassio parted from my wife?

Iago. Cassio, my lord! No, sure, I cannot think it,

That he would steal away so guilty-like,
 Seeing your coming.

Oth. I do believe 't was he.

Des. How now, my lord!

I have been talking with a suitor here,
 A man that languishes in your displeasure.

Oth. Who is 't you mean?

Des. Why, your lieutenant, Cassio. Good
 my lord,

If I have any grace or power to move you,
 His present reconciliation take;
 For if he be not one that truly loves you,
 That errs in ignorance and not in cunning,
 I have no judgement in an honest face.
 I prithee, call him back.

Oth. Went he hence now?

Des. Yes, faith; so humbled
 That he hath left part of his grief with me,
 To suffer with him. Good love, call him back.

Oth. Not now, sweet Desdemona; some other
 time.

Des. But shall 't be shortly?

Oth. The sooner, sweet, for you.

Des. Shall 't be to-night at supper?

Oth. No, not to-night.

Des. To-morrow dinner, then?

Oth. I shall not dine at home;

I meet the captains at the citadel.

Des. Why, then, to-morrow night; on Tuesday morn;

On Tuesday noon, or night; on Wednesday
 morn.

I prithee, name the time, but let it not Exceed three days. In faith, he's penitent;

 And yet his trespass, in our common reason —
 Save that, they say, the wars must make example

Out of their best — is not almost a fault

To incur a private check. When shall he come?

Tell me, Othello. I wonder in my soul,
 What you would ask me, that I should deny,

Or stand so mamm'ring on. What! Michael Cassio,

That came a-wooing with you, and so many a
 time,

When I have spoke of you disparagingly,
 Hath ta'en your part, — to have so much to do
 To bring him in! Trust me, I could do
 much, —

Oth. Prithee, no more; let him come when he will

I will deny thee nothing.

Des. Why, this is not a boon.

'Tis as I should entreat you wear your gloves,
 Or feed on nourishing dishes, or keep you warm,
 Or sue to you to do a peculiar profit

To your own person. Nay, when I have a suit
 Wherein I mean to touch your love indeed,

It shall be full of poise and difficult weight
 And fearful to be granted.

Oth. I will deny thee nothing;

Whereon, I do beseech thee, grant me this,
 To leave me but a little to myself.

Des. Shall I deny you? No. Farewell, my
 lord.

Oth. Farewell, my Desdemona; I'll come to thee straight.

Des. Emilia, come. — Be as your fancies teach you;
Whate'er you be, I am obedient.

[Exeunt Desdemona and Emilia.]

Oth. Excellent wretch! Perdition catch my soul,
But I do love thee! and when I love thee not,
Chaos is come again.

Iago. My noble lord, —

Oth. What dost thou say, Iago?

Iago. Did Michael Cassio, when you woo'd my lady,

Know of your love?

Oth. He did, from first to last. Why dost thou ask?

Iago. But for a satisfaction of my thought;
No further harm.

Oth. Why of thy thought, Iago?

Iago. I did not think he had been acquainted with her.

Oth. O, yes; and went between us very oft.

Iago. Indeed!

Oth. Indeed! ay, indeed. Discern'st thou aught in that?

Is he not honest?

Iago. Honest, my lord?

Oth. Honest! ay, honest.

Iago. My lord, for aught I know.

Oth. What dost thou think?

Iago. Think, my lord?

Oth. Think, my lord!

By heaven, he echoes me,

As if there were some monster in his thought

Too hideous to be shown. — Thou dost mean something.

I heard thee say even now, thou lik'st not that,

When Cassio left my wife. What didst not like?

And when I told thee he was of my counsel,

Of my whole course of wooing, thou criedst,

"Indeed!"

And didst contract and purse thy brow together,

As if thou then hadst shut up in thy brain

Some horrible conceit. If thou dost love me,

Show me thy thought.

Iago. My lord, you know I love you.

Oth. I think thou dost;

And, for I know thou'rt full of love and honesty,

And weigh'st thy words before thou giv'st them breath,

Therefore these stops of thine fright me the more;

For such things in a false disloyal knave

Are tricks of custom; but in a man that's just

They're close delations, working from the heart

That passion cannot rule.

Iago. For Michael Cassio,

I dare be sworn I think that he is honest.

Oth. I think so too.

Iago. Men should be what they seem;

Or those that be not, would they might seem none!

Oth. Certain, men should be what they seem.

Iago. Why, then, I think Cassio's an honest man.

Oth. Nay, yet there's more in this.

I prithee, speak to me as to thy thinkings,

As thou dost ruminate, and give thy worst of thoughts

The worst of words.

Iago. Good my lord, pardon me.

Though I am bound to every act of duty,

I am not bound to that all slaves are free to.

Utter my thoughts? Why, say they are vile and false;

As where's that palace whereinto foul things

Sometimes intrude not? Who has a breast so pure

But some uncleanly apprehensions

Keep leets and law-days and in sessions sit

With meditations lawful?

Oth. Thou dost conspire against thy friend,

Iago,

If thou but think'st him wrong'd and mak'st his ear

A stranger to thy thoughts.

Iago. I do beseech you —

Though I perchance am vicious in my guess,

As, I confess, it is my nature's plague

To spy into abuses, and oft my jealousy

Shapes faults that are not — that your wisdom

yet,

From one that so imperfectly conceits,

Would take no notice, nor build yourself a trouble

Out of his scattering and unsure observance.

It were not for your quiet nor your good,

Nor for my manhood, honesty, and wisdom,

To let you know my thoughts.

Oth. What dost thou mean?

Iago. Good name in man and woman, dear my lord,

Is the immediate jewel of their souls.

Who steals my purse steals trash; 'tis something, nothing;

'T was mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;

But he that filches from me my good name

Robs me of that which not enriches him,

And makes me poor indeed.

Oth. [By heaven,] I'll know thy thoughts.

Iago. You cannot, if my heart were in your hand;

Nor shall not, whilst 'tis in my custody.

Oth. Ha!

Iago. O, beware, my lord, of jealousy;

It is the green-ey'd monster which doth mock

The meat it feeds on. That cuckold lives in bliss

Who, certain of his fate, loves not his wronger;

But, O, what damned minutes tells he o'er

Who dotes, yet doubts, suspects, yet soundly loves!

Oth. O misery!

Iago. Poor and content is rich and rich enough,

But riches fineless is as poor as winter

To him that ever fears he shall be poor.

Good heaven, the souls of all my tribe defend

From jealousy!

Oth. Why, why is this? 176
Think'st thou I'd make a life of jealousy,
To follow still the changes of the moon
With fresh suspicions? No! to be once in doubt

Is once to be resolv'd. Exchange me for a goat,
When I shall turn the business of my soul 181
To such exsufficate and blown surmises,
Matching thy inference. 'Tis not to make me jealous

To say my wife is fair, feeds well, loves company,

Is free of speech, sings, plays, and dances well;
Where virtue is, these are more virtuous. 186
Nor from mine own weak merits will I draw
The smallest fear or doubt of her revolt;
For she had eyes, and chose me. No, Iago; 189
I'll see before I doubt; when I doubt, prove;
And on the proof, there is no more but this, —
Away at once with love or jealousy!

Iago. I am glad of this, for now I shall have reason

To show the love and duty that I bear you 194
With franker spirit; therefore, as I am bound,
Receive it from me. I speak not yet of proof.
Look to your wife; observe her well with Cas-sio;

Wear your eyes thus, not jealous nor secure.
I would not have your free and noble nature,
Out of self-bounty, be abus'd; look to 't. 200
I know our country disposition well;

In Venice they do let Heaven see the pranks
They dare not show their husbands. Their best conscience

Is not to leave 't undone, but keep 't unknown.
Oth. Dost thou say so? 205

Iago. She did deceive her father, marrying
you;

And when she seem'd to shake and fear your looks,

She lov'd them most.

Oth. And so she did.

Iago. Why, go to then.
She that, so young, could give out such a seem-
ing,

To seal her father's eyes up close as oak — 210
He thought 't was witchcraft — but I am much to blame.

I humbly do beseech you of your pardon

For too much loving you.

Oth. I am bound to thee for ever.

Iago. I see this hath a little dash'd your spirits.

Oth. Not a jot, not a jot.

Iago. 'T' faith, I fear it has.
I hope you will consider what is spoke 216 Comes from my love. But I do see you're mov'd.

I am to pray you not to strain my speech

To grosser issues nor to larger reach

Than to suspicion. 220

Oth. I will not.

Iago. Should you do so, my lord,
My speech should fall into such vile success Which my thoughts aim'd not at. Cassio's my worthy friend, —

My lord, I see you're mov'd.

Oth. No, not much mov'd.
I do not think but Desdemona's honest. 225

Iago. Long live she so! and long live you to think so!

Oth. And yet, how nature erring from itself, —

Iago. Ay, there's the point; as — to be bold
with you —

Not to affect many proposed matches
Of her own clime, complexion, and degree, 230
Whereto we see in all things nature tends — Foh! one may smell in such, a will most rank,

Foul disproportions, thoughts unnatural.
But pardon me; I do not in position
Distinctly speak of her; though I may fear 235
Her will, recoiling to her better judgement,
May fall to match you with her country forms,
And happily repent.

Oth. Farewell, farewell!

If more thou dost perceive, let me know more;
Set on thy wife to observe. Leave me, Iago.

Iago. [Going.] My lord, I take my leave. 241
Oth. Why did I marry? This honest creature doubtless

Sees and knows more, much more, than he unfolds.

Iago. [Returning.] My lord, I would I might entreat your honour

To scan this thing no farther; leave it to
time. 245

Although 't is fit that Cassio have his place,
For, sure, he fills it up with great ability,
Yet, if you please to hold him off a while,
You shall by that perceive him and his means. 250
Note if your lady strain his entertainment

With any strong or vehement importunity;
Much will be seen in that. In the mean time,
Let me be thought too busy in my fears —

As worthy cause I have to fear I am —

And hold her free, I do beseech your honour.

Oth. Fear not my government. 256

Iago. I once more take my leave. [Exit.]

Oth. This fellow's of exceeding honesty,
And knows all qualities, with a learn'd spirit,
Of human dealings. If I do prove her haggard, 260

Though that her jesses were my dear heartstrings,

I'd whistle her off and let her down the wind
To prey at fortune. Haply, for I am black

And have not those soft parts of conversation
That chamberers have, or for I am declin'd 265

Into the vale of years, — yet that 's not much —
She's gone. I am abus'd; and my relief

Must be to loathe her. O curse of marriage,
That we can call these delicate creatures ours,

And not their appetites! I had rather be a toad 270

And live upon the vapour of a dungeon,
Than keep a corner in the thing I love

For others' uses. Yet, 't is the plague of great ones;

Prerogativ'd are they less than the base.

'T is destiny unshunnable, like death. 275

Even then this forked plague is fated to us
When we do quicken. Look where she comes.

Re-enter DESDEMONA and EMILIA.

If she be false, O, then heaven mocks itself!
I'll not believe 't.

Des. How now, my dear Othello!
Your dinner, and the generous islanders
By you invited, do attend your presence. 280

Oth. I am to blame.

Des. Why do you speak so faintly?
Are you not well?

Oth. I have a pain upon my forehead here.

Des. Faith, that 's with watching; 't will away again. 285

Let me but bind it hard, within this hour
It will be well.

Oth. Your napkin is too little;
[*He puts the handkerchief from him;
and it drops.*]

Let it alone. Come, I'll go in with you.

Des. I am very sorry that you are not well.

[Exeunt [Othello and Desdemona].]

Emil. I am glad I have found this napkin;
This was her first remembrance from the Moor. 291

My wayward husband hath a hundred times Wood'd me to steal it; but she so loves the
token,

For he conjur'd her she should ever keep it,
That she reserves it evermore about her 295

To kiss and talk to. I'll have the work ta'en
out,

And give 't Iago. What he will do with it
Heaven knows, not I;

I nothing but to please his fantasy.

Re-enter IAGO.

Iago. How now! what do you here alone?

Emil. Do not you chide; I have a thing for
you. 301

Iago. A thing for me? It is a common thing—

Emil. Ha!

Iago. To have a foolish wife.

Emil. O, is that all? What will you give me
now 305

For that same handkerchief?

Iago. What handkerchief?

Emil. What handkerchief!

Why, that the Moor first gave to Desdemona;
That which so often you did bid me steal.

Iago. Hast stolen it from her? 310

Emil. No, faith; she let it drop by negligence,

And, to the advantage, I, being here, took 't up.
Look, here it is.

Iago. A good wench; give it me.

Emil. What will you do with 't, that you have been so earnest

To have me filch it?

Iago. [Snatching it.] Why, what is that to
you? 315

Emil. If it be not for some purpose of import,

Give 't me again. Poor lady, she'll run mad
When she shall lack it.

Iago. Be not acknown on 't; I have use for
it.

Go, leave me. [Exit Emilia. 320
I will in Cassio's lodging lose this napkin,
And let him find it. Trifles light as air
Are to the jealous confirmations strong
As proofs of holy writ; this may do something.
The Moor already changes with my poison. 325 Dangerous conceits are, in their natures, poisons,

Which at the first are scarce found to distaste,
But with a little act upon the blood,
Burn like the mines of sulphur. I did say so.

Re-enter OTHELLO.

Look, where he comes! Not poppy, nor mandragora, 330

Nor all the drowsy syrups of the world
Shall ever medicine thee to that sweet sleep
Which thou ow'dst yesterday.

Oth. Ha! ha! false to me?

Iago. Why, how now, general! no more of that.

Oth. Avaunt! be gone! thou hast set me on the rack. 335

I swear 't is better to be much abus'd
Than but to know 't a little.

Iago. How now, my lord!

Oth. What sense had I of her stolen hours of lust?

I saw 't not, thought it not, it harm'd not me.
I slept the next night well, fed well, was free 340

and merry;
I found not Cassio's kisses on her lips.

He that is robb'd, not wanting what is stolen,
Let him not know 't, and he's not robb'd at all.

Iago. I am sorry to hear this.

Oth. I had been happy, if the general camp,
Pioners and all, had tasted her sweet body, 345

So I had nothing known. O, now, for ever Farewell the tranquil mind! farewell content!

Farewell the plumed troop, and the big wars,
That makes ambition virtue! O, farewell! 350

Farewell the neighing steed, and the shrill
trump,

The spirit-stirring drum, the ear-piercing fife,
The royal banner, and all quality,

Pride, pomp, and circumstance of glorious war!
And, O you mortal engines, whose rude throats

The immortal Jove's dread clamours counterfeit, 355

Farewell! Othello's occupation's gone!
Iago. Is 't possible, my lord?

Oth. Villain, be sure thou prove my love a
whore,

Be sure of it; give me the ocular proof; 360

Or, by the worth of mine eternal soul,
Thou hadst been better have been born a dog

Than answer my wak'd wrath!

Iago. Is 't come to this?

Oth. Make me to see 't; or, at the least, so prove it,

That the probation bear no hinge nor loop 365

To hang a doubt on; or woe upon thy life!
Iago. My noble lord,—

Oth. If thou dost slander her and torture me,
Never pray more; abandon all remorse;
On horror's head horrors accumulate; 370

Do deeds to make heaven weep, all earth amaz'd ;

For nothing canst thou to damnation add Greater than that.

Iago. O grace ! O Heaven forgive me !
Are you a man ? Have you a soul or sense ?
God buy you ; take mine office. O wretched fool, 375

That lov'st to make thine honesty a vice !
O monstrous world ! Take note, take note, O world,

To be direct and honest is not safe.
I thank you for this profit ; and from hence
I'll love no friend, sith love breeds such offence. 380

Oth. Nay, stay. Thou shouldst be honest.
Iago. I should be wise, for honesty 's a fool
And loses that it works for.

Oth. By the world,
I think my wife be honest and think she is not ;
I think that thou art just and think thou art not. 385

I'll have some proof. Her name, that was as fresh

As Dian's visage, is now begrim'd and black
As mine own face. If there be cords, or knives,
Poison, or fire, or suffocating streams,
I'll not endure it. Would I were satisfied ! 390

Iago. I see, sir, you are eaten up with passion ;

I do repent me that I put it to you.

You would be satisfied ?

Oth. Would ! nay, I will.
Iago. And may ; but, how ? How satisfied,
my lord ?

Would you, the supervisor, grossly gape on — 395
Behold her topp'd ?

Oth. Death and damnation ! O !

Iago. It were a tedious difficulty, I think,
To bring them to that prospect ; damn them
then,

If ever mortal eyes do see them bolster
More than their own ! What then ? How then ?
What shall I say ? Where 's satisfaction ? 401
It is impossible you should see this,
Were they as prime as goats, as hot as monkeys,

As salt as wolves in pride, and fools as gross
As ignorance made drunk. But yet, I say, 405
If imputation and strong circumstances,
Which lead directly to the door of truth,
Will give you satisfaction, you might have 't.

Oth. Give me a living reason she 's disloyal.

Iago. I do not like the office ; 410

But, sith I am ent'red in this cause so far,
Prick'd to 't by foolish honesty and love,
I will go on. I lay with Cassio lately ;
And, being troubled with a raging tooth,
I could not sleep. 415

There are a kind of men so loose of soul,
That in their sleeps will mutter their affairs ;
One of this kind is Cassio.

In sleep I heard him say, " Sweet Desdemona,
Let us be wary, let us hide our loves ; " 420

And then, sir, would he gripe and wring my hand,

Cry, " O sweet creature ! " then kiss me hard,

As if he pluck'd up kisses by the roots
That grew upon my lips ; then lay his leg
Over my thigh, and sigh, and kiss ; and then
Cry, " Cursed fate that gave thee to the Moor ! " 425

Oth. O monstrous ! monstrous !

Iago. Nay, this was but his dream.

Oth. But this denoted a foregone conclusion.
'T is a shrewd doubt, though it be but a dream.

Iago. And this may help to thicken other proofs 435

That do demonstrate thinly.

Oth. I'll tear her all to pieces.

Iago. Nay, but be wise ; yet we see nothing done.

She may be honest yet. Tell me but this,
Have you not sometimes seen a handkerchief
Spotted with strawberries in your wife's hand ?

Oth. I gave her such a one ; 't was my first gift. 438

Iago. I know not that ; but such a handkerchief —

I am sure it was your wife's — did I to-day
See Cassio wipe his beard with.

Oth. If it be that, —

Iago. If it be that, or any that was hers, 440
It speaks against her with the other proofs.

Oth. O, that the slave had forty thousand lives !

One is too poor, too weak for my revenge.

Now do I see 't is true. Look here, Iago ;

All my fond love thus do I blow to heaven. 445

'T is gone.

Arise, black vengeance, from the hollow hell !

Yield up, O love, thy crown and hearted throne

To tyrannous hate ! Swell, bosom, with thy fraught,

For 't is of aspics' tongues !

Iago. Yet be content.

Oth. O, blood, blood, blood ! 451

Iago. Patience, I say ; your mind [perhaps] may change.

Oth. Never, Iago. Like to the Pontic Sea,
Whose icy current and compulsive course

Ne'er feels retiring ebb, but keeps due on 455

To the Propontic and the Hellespont,

Even so my bloody thoughts, with violent pace,

Shall ne'er look back, ne'er ebb to humble love,

Till that a capable and wide revenge

Swallow them up. Now, by yond marble hea- 460

ven,

In the due reverence of a sacred vow [Kneels.]

I here engage my words.

Iago. Do not rise yet.

Witness, you ever-burning lights above,

You elements that clip us round about, [Kneels.]

Witness that here Iago doth give up 465

The execution of his wit, hands, heart,

To wrong'd Othello's service ! Let him command,

And to obey shall be in me remorse,

What bloody business ever. [They rise.]

Oth. I greet thy love,

Not with vain thanks, but with acceptance

bounteous, 470

And will upon the instant put thee to 't :

Within these three days let me hear thee say
That Cassio's not alive.

Iago. My friend is dead; 't is done at your request.

But let her live.

Oth. Damn her, lewd minx! O, damn her!
damn her! 475

Come, go with me apart; I will withdraw
To furnish me with some swift means of death
For the fair devil. Now art thou my lieutenant.
Iago. I am your own for ever. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. [Before the castle.]

Enter DESDEMONA, EMILIA, and CLOWN.

Des. Do you know, sirrah, where Lieutenant Cassio lies?

Clo. I dare not say he lies anywhere.

Des. Why, man?

Clo. He's a soldier, and for me to say a soldier lies, 't is stabbing. 6

Des. Go to! Where lodges he?

Clo. To tell you where he lodges, is to tell you where I lie.

Des. Can anything be made of this? 10

Clo. I know not where he lodges, and for me to devise a lodging and say he lies here or he lies there, were to lie in mine own throat.

Des. Can you inquire him out, and be edified by report? 15

Clo. I will catechize the world for him; that is, make questions, and by them answer.

Des. Seek him, bid him come hither. Tell him I have mov'd my lord on his behalf, and hope all will be well. 20

Clo. To do this is within the compass of man's wit; and therefore I will attempt the doing it. [Exit.]

Des. Where should I lose the handkerchief,
Emilia?

Emil. I know not, madam.

Des. Believe me, I had rather have lost my purse 25

Full of crusadoes; and, but my noble Moor
Is true of mind and made of no such baseness
As jealous creatures are, it were enough
To put him to ill thinking.

Emil. Is he not jealous?

Des. Who, he? I think the sun where he was born 30

Drew all such humours from him.

Emil. Look, where he comes.

Enter OTHELLO.

Des. I will not leave him now till Cassio
Be call'd to him.—How is 't with you, my
lord?

Oth. Well, my good lady. [Aside.] O, hardness to dissemble!—
How do you, Desdemona?

Des. Well, my good lord.

Oth. Give me your hand. This hand is moist,
my lady. 35

Des. It yet hath felt no age nor known no sorrow.

Oth. This argues fruitfulness and liberal
heart;

Hot, hot, and moist. This hand of yours requires

A sequester from liberty, fasting and prayer, 40
Much castigation, exercise devout;
For here's a young and sweating devil here,
That commonly rebels. 'T is a good hand,
A frank one.

Des. You may, indeed, say so;
For 't was that hand that gave away my heart.

Oth. A liberal hand. The hearts of old gave
hands; 45

But our new heraldry is hands, not hearts.

Des. I cannot speak of this. Come now, your promise.

Oth. What promise, chuck?

Des. I have sent to bid Cassio come speak
with you. 50

Oth. I have a salt and sorry rheum offends
me;

Send me thy handkerchief.

Des. Here, my lord.

Oth. That which I gave you.

Des. I have it not about me.

Oth. Not?

Des. No, indeed, my lord.

Oth. That's a fault. That handkerchief 55

Did an Egyptian to my mother give;

She was a charmer, and could almost read

The thoughts of people. She told her, while she kept it

'T would make her amiable and subdue my
father

Entirely to her love, but if she lost it, 60

Or made a gift of it, my father's eye

Should hold her loathed and his spirits should hunt

After new fancies. She, dying, gave it me;

And bid me, when my fate would have me
wiv'd,

To give it her. I did so; and take heed on 't; 65

Make it a darling like your precious eye.

To lose 't or give 't away were such perdition

As nothing else could match.

Des. Is 't possible?

Oth. 'T is true; there's magic in the web of
it.

A sibyl, that had numb'ed in the world 70

The sun to course two hundred compasses,

In her prophetic fury sew'd the work;

The worms were hallowed that did breed the silk;

And it was dy'd in mummy which the skilful
Conserv'd of maidens' hearts.

Des. Indeed! is 't true?

Oth. Most veritable; therefore look to 't
well. 75

Des. Then would to God that I had never seen 't!

Oth. Ha! wherefore?

Des. Why do you speak so startlingly and rash?

Oth. Is 't lost? Is 't gone? Speak, is 't out o' the way? 80

Des. Heaven bless us!

Oth. Say you?

Des. It is not lost; but what an if it were?

Oth. How?

Des. I say, it is not lost.

Oth. Fetch 't, let me see 't. 35

Des. Why, so I can, sir, but I will not now.

This is a trick to put me from my suit.

Pray you, let Cassio be receiv'd again.

Oth. Fetch me the handkerchief; my mind misgives.

Des. Come, come; 90

You 'll never meet a more sufficient man.

Oth. The handkerchief!

[Des. I pray, talk we of Cassio.

Oth. The handkerchief!]

Des. A man that all his time

Hath founded his good fortunes on your love,
Shar'd dangers with you, — 95

Oth. The handkerchief!

Des. I' faith, you are to blame.

Oth. 'Zounds! [Exit.

Emil. Is not this man jealous?

Des. He's never saw this before. 100

Sure, there's some wonder in this handkerchief;

I am most unhappy in the loss of it.

Emil. 'T is not a year or two shows us a man.
They are all but stomachs, and we all but food;
They eat us hungrily, and when they are full
They belch us.

Enter CASSIO and IAGO.

Look you, Cassio and my husband! 105

Iago. There is no other way, 't is she must do 't;

And, lo, the happiness! Go, and importune her.

Des. How now, good Cassio! what's the news with you?

Cas. Madam, my former suit. I do beseech you 110

That by your virtuous means I may again
Exist, and be a member of his love
Whom I with all the office of my heart
Entirely honour. I would not be delay'd.
If my offence be of such mortal kind 115
That nor my service past, nor present sorrows,
Nor purpos'd merit in futurity
Can ransom me into his love again,
But to know so must be my benefit;
So shall I clothe me in a forc'd content, 120
And shut myself up in some other course,
To fortune's alms.

Des. Alas, thrice-gentle Cassio!

My advocacy is not now in tune.
My lord is not my lord; nor should I know
him

Were he in favour as in humour alter'd. 125
So help me every spirit sanctified
As I have spoken for you all my best
And stood within the blank of his displeasure
For my free speech! You must a while be patient.

What I can do I will; and more I will 130
Than for myself I dare. Let that suffice you.

Iago. Is my lord angry?

Emil. He went hence but now,
And certainly in strange unquietness.

Iago. Can he be angry? I have seen the cannon

When it hath blown his ranks into the air, 135

And, like the devil, from his very arm
Puff'd his own brother: — and is he angry?
Something of moment then. I will go meet
him.

There's matter in 't indeed, if he be angry.

[Exit Iago.

Des. I prithee, do so. Something, sure, of state, 140

Either from Venice, or some unhatch'd practice
Made demonstrable here in Cyprus to him,
Hath puddled his clear spirit; and in such cases
Men's natures wrangle with inferior things,
Though great ones are their object. 'T is even 145

so;
For let our finger ache, and it indues
Our other healthful members even to a sense
Of pain. Nay, we must think men are not gods,
Nor of them look for such observancy
As fit the bridal. Beshrew me much, Emilia, 150
I was, unhandsome warrior as I am,
Arraigning his unkindness with my soul;
But now I find I had suborn'd the witness,
And he's indicted falsely.

Emil. Pray Heaven it be state-matters, as you think, 155

And no conception nor no jealous toy

Concerning you.

Des. Alas the day! I never gave him cause.
Emil. But jealous souls will not be answer'd 160

so;
They are not ever jealous for the cause,
But jealous for they're jealous. It is a monster

Begot upon itself, born on itself.

Des. Heaven keep the monster from Othello's mind!

Emil. Lady, amen.

Des. I will go seek him. Cassio, walk hereabout; 165

If I do find him fit, I'll move your suit

And seek to effect it to my uttermost.

Cas. I humbly thank your ladyship.

[Exeunt [Desdemona and Emilia].

Enter BIANCA.

Bian. Save you, friend Cassio!

Cas. What make you from home?
How is it with you, my most fair Bianca? 170
I' faith, sweet love, I was coming to your house.

Bian. And I was going to your lodging,
Cassio.

What, keep a week away? seven days and nights?

Eightscore eight hours? and lovers' absent
hours,

More tedious than the dial eightscore times?

O weary reck'ning!

Cas. Pardon me, Bianca. 175
I have this while with leaden thoughts been press'd;

But I shall, in a more continueate time,
Strike off this score of absence. Sweet Bianca,

[Giving her Desdemona's handkerchief.

Take me this work out.

Bian. O Cassio, whence came this?
This is some token from a newer friend; 180

To the felt absence now I feel a cause.
Is 't come to this? Well, well.

Cas. Go to, woman!
Throw your vile guesses in the devil's teeth,
From whence you have them. You are jealous
now 185
That this is from some mistress, some remembrance.

No, by my faith, Bianca.

Bian. Why, whose is it?

Cas. I know not, sweet; I found it in my chamber.

I like the work well; ere it be demanded —
As like enough it will — I 'd have it copied. 190
Take it, and do 't; and leave me for this time.

Bian. Leave you! Wherefore?

Cas. I do attend here on the general;
And think it no addition, nor my wish, 194
To have him see me woman'd.

Bian. Why, I pray you?

Cas. Not that I love you not.

Bian. But that you do not love me.
I pray you, bring me on the way a little,
And say if I shall see you soon at night.

Cas. 'T is but a little way that I can bring
you,

For I attend here; but I 'll see you soon. 200

Bian. 'T is very good; I must be circumstanc'd. [Exeunt.]

ACT IV

SCENE I. [Cyprus. Before the castle.]

Enter OTHELLO and IAGO.

Iago. Will you think so?

Oth. Think so, Iago!

Iago. What,

To kiss in private?

Oth. An unauthoriz'd kiss.

Iago. Or to be naked with her friend in bed
An hour or more, not meaning any harm?

Oth. Naked in bed, Iago, and not mean harm! 5

It is hypocrisy against the devil.

They that mean virtuously, and yet do so,
The devil their virtue tempts, and they tempt
heaven.

Iago. If they do nothing, 't is a venial slip;
But if I give my wife a handkerchief, — 10

Oth. What then?

Iago. Why, then, 't is hers, my lord; and,
being hers,

She may, I think, bestow 't on any man.

Oth. She is protectress of her honour too;

May she give that? 15

Iago. Her honour is an essence that 's not seen;

They have it very oft that have it not:

But, for the handkerchief, —

Oth. By heaven, I would most gladly have forgot it.

Thou said'st — O, it comes o'er my memory, 20
As doth the raven o'er the infected house,
Boding to all — he had my handkerchief.

Iago. Ay, what of that?

Oth. That 's not so good now.

Iago.

What
If I had said I had seen him do you wrong?

Or heard him say, — as knaves be such abroad,

Who having, by their own importunate suit, 25

Or voluntary dotage of some mistress,

Convinced or suppli'd them, cannot choose

But they must blab —

Oth.

Hath he said anything?

Iago. He hath, my lord; but be you well
assur'd, 30

No more than he 'll unswear.

Oth.

What hath he said?

Iago. Faith, that he did — I know not what he did.

Oth. What? what?

Iago. Lie —

Oth. With her?

Iago. With her, on her; what you will.

Oth. Lie with her! lie on her! We say lie on her, when they belie her. Lie with her! 35

'Zounds, that 's fulsome! — Handkerchief — confessions — handkerchief! — To confess, and be hang'd for his labour; — first, to be hang'd, and then to confess. — I tremble at it. Nature would not invest herself in such shadowing 40 passion without some instruction. It is not words that shakes me thus. Pish! Noses, ears, and lips. — Is 't possible? — Confess — handkerchief! — O devil! [Falls in a trance.]

Iago. Work on, 45

My medicine, work! Thus credulous fools are caught;

And many worthy and chaste dames even thus,

All guiltless, meet reproach. — What, ho! my

lord!

My lord, I say! Othello!

Enter CASSIO.

How now, Cassio!

Cas. What 's the matter? 50

Iago. My lord is fallen into an epilepsy.

This is his second fit; he had one yesterday.

Cas. Rub him about the temples.

Iago. [No, forbear;]

The lethargy must have his quiet course;

If not, he foams at mouth and by and by 55

Breaks out to savage madness. Look, he stirs.

Do you withdraw yourself a little while,

He will recover straight. When he is gone,

I would on great occasion speak with you,

[Exit Cassio.]

How is it, general? Have you not hurt your head? 60

Oth. Dost thou mock me?

Iago. I mock you not, by heaven.

Would you would bear your fortune like a
man!

Oth. A horned man 's a monster and a beast,

Iago. There 's many a beast then in a populous city,

And many a civil monster. 65

Oth. Did he confess it?

Iago. Good sir, be a man;

Think every bearded fellow that 's but yok'd

May draw with you. There 's millions now alive

That nightly lie in those improper beds

Which they dare swear peculiar; your case is better. ⁷⁰

O, 't is the spite of hell, the fiend's arch-mock,
To lip a wanton in a secure couch,
And to suppose her chaste! No, let me know;
And knowing what I am, I know what she shall be.

Oth. O, thou art wise; 't is certain.

Iago. Stand you a while apart;
Confine yourself but in a patient list. ⁷⁵
Whilst you were here o'erwhelmed with your grief—

A passion most unsuited such a man—
Cassio came hither. I shifted him away,
And laid good 'sense upon your ecstasy; ⁸⁰
Bade him anon return and here speak with
me,

The which he promis'd. Do but encave yourself,

And mark the fleers, the gibes, and notable
scorns,

That dwell in every region of his face;
For I will make him tell the tale anew, ⁸⁵
Where, how, how oft, how long ago, and when
He hath, and is again to cope your wife.
I say, but mark his gesture. Marry, patience;
Or I shall say you're all in all in spleen, ⁸⁹
And nothing of a man.

Oth. Dost thou hear, Iago?
I will be found most cunning in my patience;
But—dost thou hear?—most bloody.

Iago. That's not amiss;
But yet keep time in all. Will you withdraw?
[Othello retires.]

Now will I question Cassio of Bianca,
A housewife that by selling her desires ⁹⁵
Buys herself bread and clothes. It is a creature
That dotes on Cassio;—as 't is the strumpet's plogue

To beguile many and be beguil'd by one;—
He, when he hears of her, cannot refrain
From the excess of laughter. Here he comes:

Re-enter CASSIO.

As he shall smile, Othello shall go mad; ¹⁰¹
And his unbookish jealousy must construe Poor Cassio's smiles, gestures, and light behaviours

Quite in the wrong. How do you, lieutenant?

Cas. The worse that you give me the addition ¹⁰⁵

Whose want even kills me.

Iago. Ply Desdemona well, and you are sure on 't.

[Speaking lower.] Now, if this suit lay in Bian-ca's power,

How quickly should you speed!

Cas. Alas, poor caitiff!

Oth. Look, how he laughs already! ¹¹⁰

Iago. I never knew woman love man so.

Cas. Alas, poor rogue! I think, i' faith, she loves me.

Oth. Now he denies it faintly, and laughs it
out.

Iago. Do you hear, Cassio? ¹¹⁵

Oth. Now he importunes him

To tell it o'er. Go to; well said, well said.

Iago. She gives it out that you shall marry
her.

Do you intend it?

Cas. Ha, ha, ha! ¹²⁰

Oth. Do ye triumph, Roman? Do you triumph?

Cas. I marry her! What? a customer!
Prithee, bear some charity to my wit; do not think it so unwholesome. Ha, ha, ha! ¹²⁵

Oth. So, so, so, so; they laugh that wins.

Iago. Faith, the cry goes that you shall marry
her.

Cas. Prithee, say true.

Iago. I am a very villain else.

Oth. Have you scor'd me? Well. ¹³⁰

Cas. This is the monkey's own giving out.
She is persuaded I will marry her, out of her own love and flattery, not out of my promise.

Oth. Iago beckons me; now he begins the story. ¹³⁵

Cas. She was here even now; she haunts me in every place. I was the other day talking on the sea-bank with certain Venetians; and thither comes the bauble, and, [by this hand, she] falls me thus about my neck— ¹⁴⁰

Oth. Crying, "O dear Cassio!" as it were;
his gesture imports it.

Cas. So hangs, and lolls, and weeps upon me; so shakes and pulls me. Ha, ha, ha! ¹⁴⁴

Oth. Now he tells how she pluck'd him to my chamber. O, I see that nose of yours, but not that dog I shall throw it to.

Cas. Well, I must leave her company.

Iago. Before me! look, where she comes. ¹⁴⁹

Enter BIANCA.

Cas. 'T is such another fitchew! Marry, a perfum'd one.—What do you mean by this haunting of me?

Bian. Let the devil and his dam haunt you!
What did you mean by that same handkerchief you gave me even now? I was a fine fool to take it. I must take out the work?—A [155 likely piece of work, that you should find it in your chamber, and know not who left it there!
This is some minx's token, and I must take out the work? There; give it your hobby-horse.
Wheresoever you had it, I'll take out no work
on 't. ¹⁶¹

Cas. How now, my sweet Bianca! how now!
how now!

Oth. By heaven, that should be my handkerchief! ¹⁶⁵

Bian. If you'll come to supper to-night, you may; if you will not, come when you are next prepar'd for. ^[Exit.]

Iago. After her, after her.

Cas. Faith, I must; she'll rail in the streets else. ¹⁷¹

Iago. Will you sup there?

Cas. Yes, I intend so.

Iago. Well, I may chance to see you; for I would very fain speak with you. ¹⁷⁵

Cas. Prithee, come; will you?

Iago. Go to; say no more. ^[Exit Cassio.]

Oth. [Advancing.] How shall I murder him,
Iago?

Iago. Did you perceive how he laugh'd at his vice? 181

Oth. O Iago!

Iago. And did you see the handkerchief?

Oth. Was that mine?

Iago. Yours, by this hand. And to see how he prizes the foolish woman your wife! She gave it him, and he hath given it his whore. 187

Oth. I would have him nine years a-killing. A fine woman! a fair woman! a sweet woman!

Iago. Nay, you must forget that. 190

Oth. Ay, let her rot, and perish, and be damn'd to-night; for she shall not live. No, my heart is turn'd to stone; I strike it, and it hurts my hand. O, the world hath not a sweeter creature! She might lie by an emperor's side and command him tasks. 196

Iago. Nay, that's not your way.

Oth. Hang her! I do but say what she is. So delicate with her needle! an admirable musician! O! she will sing the savageness out of a bear. Of so high and plenteous wit and invention! 201

Iago. She's the worse for all this.

Oth. O, a thousand thousand times. And then, of so gentle a condition!

Iago. Ay, too gentle. 205

Oth. Nay, that's certain. But yet the pity of it, Iago! O Iago, the pity of it, Iago!

Iago. If you are so fond over her iniquity, give her patent to offend; for, if it touch not you, it comes near nobody. 210

Oth. I will chop her into messes. Cuckold me!

Iago. O, 't is foul in her.

Oth. With mine officer!

Iago. That's fouler. 215

Oth. Get me some poison, Iago; this night. I'll not expostulate with her, lest her body and beauty unprovide my mind again. This night, Iago. 219

Iago. Do it not with poison; strangle her in her bed, even the bed she hath contaminated.

Oth. Good, good; the justice of it pleases; very good.

Iago. And for Cassio, let me be his undertaker. You shall hear more by midnight. 225

[A trumpet.]

Enter LODOVICO, DESDEMONA, and Attendants.

Oth. Excellent good. What trumpet is that same?

Iago. I warrant, something from Venice. 'T is Lodovico, this, comes from the Duke. See, your wife's with him.

Lod. God save the worthy general!

Oth. With all my heart, sir.

Lod. The Duke and senators of Venice greet you. [Gives him a letter.] 230

Oth. I kiss the instrument of their pleasures.

[Opens the letter, and reads.]

Des. And what's the news, good cousin Lodovico?

Iago. I am very glad to see you, signior; Welcome to Cyprus.

Lod. I thank you. How does Lieutenant Cassio?

235

Iago. Lives, sir.

Des. Cousin, there's fallen between him and my lord

An unkind breach; but you shall make all well.

Oth. Are you sure of that?

Des. My lord!

Oth. [Reads.] "This fail you not to do, as you will?" — 240

Lod. He did not call; he's busy in the paper.

Is there division 'twixt my lord and Cassio?

Des. A most unhappy one. I would do much

To atone them, for the love I bear to Cassio.

Oth. Fire and brimstone!

Des. My lord?

Oth. Are you wise? 245

Des. What, is he angry?

Lod. May be the letter mov'd him;

For, as I think, they do command him home, Deputing Cassio in his government.

Des. Trust me, I am glad on 't.

Oth. Indeed!

Des. My lord?

Oth. I am glad to see you mad.

Des. Why, sweet Othello, —

Oth. [Striking her.] Devil! 251

Des. I have not deserv'd this.

Lod. My lord, this would not be believ'd in Venice

Though I should swear I saw 't. 'T is very much.

Make her amends: she weeps.

Oth. O devil, devil!

If that the earth could teem with woman's tears, 255

Each drop she falls would prove a crocodile.

Out of my sight!

Des. I will not stay to offend you. [Going.]

Lod. Truly, an obedient lady:

I do beseech your lordship, call her back. 260

Oth. Mistress!

Des. My lord?

Oth. What would you with her, sir?

Lod. Who, I, my lord?

Oth. Ay; you did wish that I would make her turn.

Sir, she can turn, and turn, and yet go on, And turn again; and she can weep, sir, weep; And she's obedient, as you say, obedient, 265 Very obedient. Proceed you in your tears. Concerning this, sir, — O well-painted passion! —

I am commanded home. — Get you away;

I'll send for you anon. — Sir, I obey the mandate, 270

And will return to Venice. — Hence, avaunt! — [Exit Desdemona.]

Cassio shall have my place. And, sir, to-night, I do entreat that we may sup together.

You are welcome, sir, to Cyprus. — Goats and monkeys! [Exit.]

Lod. Is this the noble Moor whom our full Senate

275

Call all in all sufficient? Is this the nature

Whom passion could not shake? whose solid virtue

The shot of accident nor dart of chance
Could neither graze nor pierce?

Iago. He is much chang'd.
Lod. Are his wits safe? Is he not light of brain? 280

Iago. He's that he is; I may not breathe
my censure

What he might be. If what he might he is
not,

I would to heaven he were!

Lod. What, strike his wife!

Iago. Faith, that was not so well; yet would
I knew

That stroke would prove the worst!

Lod. Is it his use?

Or did the letters work upon his blood, 285

And new-create this fault?

Iago. Alas, alas!

It is not honesty in me to speak

What I have seen and known. You shall observe him,

And his own courses will denote him so 290

That I may save my speech. Do but go after,

And mark how he continues.

Lod. I am sorry that I am deceiv'd in him.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. [A room in the castle.]

Enter OTHELLO and EMILIA.

Oth. You have seen nothing then?

Emil. Nor ever heard, nor ever did suspect.

Oth. Yes, you have seen Cassio and she together.

Emil. But then I saw no harm, and then I heard

Each syllable that breath made up between
them. 5

Oth. What, did they never whisper?

Emil. Never, my lord.

Oth. Nor send you out o' the way?

Emil. Never.

Oth. To fetch her fan, her gloves, her mask, nor nothing?

Emil. Never, my lord. 10

Oth. That's strange.

Emil. I durst, my lord, to wager she is honest,

Lay down my soul at stake. If you think other, Remove your thought; it doth abuse your bosom.

If any wretch have put this in your head, 15

Let Heaven requite it with the serpent's curse!

For, if she be not honest, chaste, and true,
There's no man happy; the purest of their wives

Is foul as slander.

Oth. Bid her come hither; go.
[Exit Emilia.]

She says enough; yet she's a simple bawd 20
That cannot say as much. This is a subtle

whore,

A closet lock and key of villanous secrets;

And yet she'll kneel and pray; I have seen her
do't.

Enter DESDEMONA with EMILIA.

Des. My lord, what is your will?

Oth. Pray, chuck, come hither.

Des. What is your pleasure?

Oth. Let me see your eyes; 25

Look in my face.

Des. What horrible fancy's this?

Oth. [To Emilia.] Some of your nation,
mistress;

Leave procreants alone and shut the door;

Cough, or cry "hem," if anybody come.

Your mystery, your mystery; nay, dispatch. 30

[Exit Emilia.]

Des. Upon my knee, what doth your speech import?

I understand a fury in your words,

[But not the words.]

Oth. Why, what art thou?

Des. Your wife, my lord; your true

And loyal wife.

Oth. Come, swear it, damn thyself,

Lest, being like one of heaven, the devils themselves 35

Should fear to seize thee; therefore be double damn'd,

Swear thou art honest.

Des. Heaven doth truly know it.

Oth. Heaven truly knows that thou art false as hell.

Des. To whom, my lord? With whom?
How am I false? 40

Oth. Ah, Desdemona! Away! away! away!

Des. Alas the heavy day! Why do you weep?

Am I the motive of these tears, my lord?

If haply you my father do suspect

An instrument of this your calling back, 45

Lay not your blame on me. If you have lost him,
Why, I have lost him too.

Oth. Had it pleas'd Heaven

To try me with affliction; had they rain'd
All kind of sores and shames on my bare head,

Steept me in poverty to the very lips, 50

Given to captivity me and my utmost hopes,
I should have found in some place of my soul

A drop of patience; but, alas, to make me
The fixed figure for the time of scorn

To point his slow and moving finger at! 55

Yet could I bear that too, well, very well;

But there, where I have garner'd up my heart,

Where either I must live, or bear no life;

The fountain from the which my current runs,

Or else dries up; to be discarded thence! 60

Or keep it as a cistern for foul toads

To knot and gender in! Turn thy complexion
there,

Patience, thou young and rose-lipp'd cherubin,
Ay, there look grim as hell!

Des. I hope my noble lord esteems me honest. 65

Oth. O, ay; as summer flies are in the shambles,

That quicken even with blowing. O thou weed,
Who art so lovely fair and smell'st so sweet

That the sense aches at thee, would thou hadst ne'er been born!

Des. Alas, what ignorant sin have I committed? ⁷⁰

Oth. Was this fair paper, this most goodly book,

Made to write "whore" upon? What committed!

Committed! O thou public commoner!
I should make very forges of my cheeks,
That would to cinders burn up modesty, ⁷⁵
Did I but speak thy deeds. What committed!
Heaven stops the nose at it, and the moon
winks,

The bawdy wind, that kisses all it meets,
Is hush'd within the hollow mine of earth,
And will not hear it. What committed! ⁸⁰
[Impudent strumpet!]

Des. By heaven, you do me wrong.

Oth. Are not you a strumpet?

Des. No, as I am a Christian.

If to preserve this vessel for my lord
From any other foul unlawful touch
Be not to be a strumpet, I am none. ⁸⁵

Oth. What, not a whore?

Des. No, as I shall be sav'd.

Oth. Is 't possible?

Des. O, Heaven forgive us!

Oth. I cry you mercy, then.
I took you for that cunning whore of Venice That married with Othello. [Raising his voice.]—You, mistress, ⁹⁰

Re-enter EMILIA.

That have the office opposite to Saint Peter,
And keeps the gate of hell! You, you, ay,
you!

We have done our course; there's money for your pains.

I pray you, turn the key and keep our counsel. [Exit.

Emil. Alas, what does this gentleman conceive? ⁹⁵

How do you, madam? How do you, my good lady?

Des. Faith, half asleep.

Emil. Good madam, what's the matter with my lord?

Des. With who?

Emil. Why, with my lord, madam. ¹⁰⁰

Des. Who is thy lord?

Emil. He that is yours, sweet lady.

Des. I have none. Do not talk to me,
Emilia;

I cannot weep, nor answers have I none
But what should go by water. Prithee, tonight ¹⁰⁴

Lay on my bed my wedding sheets, remember;
And call thy husband hither.

Emil. Here's a change indeed! [Exit.

Des. 'T is meet I should be us'd so, very
meet.

How have I been behav'd, that he might stick
The small'st opinion on my least misuse?

Re-enter EMILIA with IAGO.

Iago. What is your pleasure, madam? How is 't with you? ¹¹⁰

Des. I cannot tell. Those that do teach young babes

Do it with gentle means and easy tasks.

He might have chid me so; for, in good faith,
I am a child to chiding.

Iago. What's the matter, lady?

Emil. Alas, Iago, my lord hath so bewhor'd her, ¹¹⁵

Thrown such despite and heavy terms upon her,
That true hearts cannot bear.

Des. Am I that name, Iago?

Iago. What name, fair lady?

Des. Such as she said my lord did say I was.

Emil. He call'd her whore. A beggar in his drink ¹²⁰

Could not have laid such terms upon his callet.

Iago. Why did he do so?

Des. I do not know; I am sure I am none such.

Iago. Do not weep, do not weep. Alas the
day!

Emil. Hath she forsook so many noble matches, ¹²⁵

Her father and her country and her friends,
To be call'd whore? Would it not make one weep?

Des. It is my wretched fortune.

Iago. Beshrew him for 't!

How comes this trick upon him?

Des. Nay, Heaven doth know.

Emil. I will be hang'd, if some eternal villain, ¹³⁰

Some busy and insinuating rogue,
Some cogging, cozening slave, to get some office,
Have not devis'd this slander. I'll be hang'd else.

Iago. Fie, there is no such man; it is impossible.

Des. If any such there be, Heaven pardon him! ¹³⁵

Emil. A halter pardon him! and hell gnaw his bones!

Why should he call her whore? Who keeps her company?

What place? what time? what form? what likelihood?

The Moor's abus'd by some most villanous
knave,

Some base notorious knave, some scurvy fellow.
O heavens, that such companions thou 'dst unfold, ¹⁴¹

And put in every honest hand a whip
To lash the rascals naked through the world
Even from the east to the west!

Iago. Speak within door.

Emil. O, fie upon them! Some such squire
he was ¹⁴⁵

That turn'd your wit the seamy side without,
And made you to suspect me with the Moor.

Iago. You are a fool; go to.

Des. Alas, Iago,

What shall I do to win my lord again?
Good friend, go to him; for, by this light of heaven, ¹⁵⁰

I know not how I lost him. Here I kneel:
If e'er my will did trespass 'gainst his love,
Either in discourse of thought or actual deed,

Or that mine eyes, mine ears, or any sense
Delighted them in any other form; 155
Or that I do not yet, and ever did,
And ever will—though he do shake me off
To beggarly divorcement—love him dearly, Comfort forswear me! Unkindness may do
much;

And his unkindness may defeat my life, 160
But never taint my love. I cannot say "whore."
It does abhor me now I speak the word;
To do the act that might the addition earn
Not the world's mass of vanity could make me.

Iago. I pray you, be content; 'tis but his humour. 165

The business of the state does him offence,
[And he does chide with you.]

Des. If 't were no other,—
Iago. It is but so, I warrant.
[Trumpets within.]

Hark, how these instruments summon to supper!

The messengers of Venice stays the meat. 170
Go in, and weep not; all things shall be well.

[Exeunt Desdemona and Emilia.]

Enter RODERIGO.

How now, Roderigo!

Rod. I do not find that thou deal'st justly with me.

Iago. What in the contrary? 175

Rod. Every day thou daff'st me with some device, Iago; and rather, as it seems to me now, keep'st from me all conveniency than suppliest me with the least advantage of hope. I will indeed no longer endure it, nor am I yet persuaded to put up in peace what already I have foolishly suff'red. 182

Iago. Will you hear me, Roderigo?

Rod. Faith, I have heard too much, for your words and performances are no kin together.

Iago. You charge me most unjustly. 186

Rod. With nought but truth. I have wasted myself out of my means. The jewels you have had from me to deliver Desdemona would half have corrupted a votarist. You have told me she hath receiv'd them and return'd me expectations and comforts of sudden respect and acquaintance, but I find none. 193

Iago. Well; go to; very well.

Rod. Very well! go to! I cannot go to, man; nor 't is not very well. By this hand, I say 't is scurvy, and begin to find myself fobb'd in it.

Iago. Very well. 198

Rod. I tell you 'tis not very well. I will make myself known to Desdemona. If she will return me my jewels, I will give over my suit and repent my unlawful solicitation; if not, assure yourself I will seek satisfaction of you.

Iago. You have said now.

Rod. Ay, and said nothing but what I protest intendment of doing. 204

Iago. Why, now I see there's mettle in thee, and even from this instant do build on thee a better opinion than ever before. Give me thy hand, Roderigo. Thou hast taken against me a most just exception; but yet, I protest, I have dealt most directly in thy affair. 212

Rod. It hath not appear'd.

Iago. I grant indeed it hath not appear'd,
and your suspicion is not without wit and judgement.
But, Roderigo, if thou hast that in thee indeed, which I have greater reason to believe now than ever, I mean purpose, courage, and valour, this night show it. If thou the next night following enjoy not Desdemona, take me from this world with treachery and devise engines for my life. 222

Rod. Well, what is it? Is it within reason and compass?

Iago. Sir, there is especial commission come from Venice to depute Cassio in Othello's place.

Rod. Is that true? Why, then Othello and Desdemona return again to Venice. 228

Iago. O, no; he goes into Mauritania and taketh away with him the fair Desdemona, unless his abode be ling'ring here by some accident;
wherein none can be so determinate as the removing of Cassio. 238

Rod. How do you mean, removing him?

Iago. Why, by making him incapable of Othello's place; knocking out his brains.

Rod. And that you would have me to do? 237

Iago. Ay, if you dare do yourself a profit and a right. He sups to-night with a harlotry, and thither will I go to him; he knows not yet of his honourable fortune. If you will watch his going thence, which I will fashion to fall out between twelve and one, you may take him at your pleasure. I will be near to second your attempt, and he shall fall between us. Come, stand not amaz'd at it, but go along with me;
I will show you such a necessity in his death that you shall think yourself bound to put it on him. It is now high supper-time, and the night grows to waste. About it. 250

Rod. I will hear further reason for this.

Iago. And you shall be satisfi'd. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. [Another room in the castle.]

Enter OTHELLO, LODOVICO, DESDEMONA,
EMILIA, and Attendants.

Lod. I do beseech you, sir, trouble yourself
no further.

Oth. O, pardon me; 't will do me good to walk.

Lod. Madam, good-night; I humbly thank your ladyship.

Des. Your honour is most welcome.

Oth. Will you walk, sir?

O, — Desdemona, —

Des. My lord?

Oth. Get you to bed on the instant; I will be return'd forthwith. Dismiss your attendant there. Look 't be done.

Des. I will, my lord. 10

[Exeunt [Othello, Lodovico, and Attendants].

Emil. How goes it now? He looks gentler than he did.

Des. He says he will return incontinent;
And hath commanded me to go to bed,
And bade me to dismiss you.

Emil. Dismiss me!

Des. It was his bidding; therefore, good Emilia,¹⁵

Give me my nightly wearing, and adieu.

We must not now displease him.

Emil. I would you had never seen him!

Des. So would not I. My love doth so approve him,

That even his stubbornness, his checks, his frowns, —²⁰

Prithee, unpin me, — have grace and favour [in them].

Emil. I have laid those sheets you bade me on the bed.

Des. All's one. Good faith, how foolish are our minds!

If I do die before, prithee, shroud me —²⁴
In one of those same sheets.

Emil. Come, come, you talk.

Des. My mother had a maid call'd Barbara; She was in love, and he she lov'd prov'd mad

And did forsake her. She had a song of "willow";

An old thing 't was, but it express'd her fortune,

And she died singing it. That song to-night³⁰
Will not go from my mind; I have much to do

But to go hang my head all at one side
And sing it like poor Barbara. Prithee, dispatch.

Emil. Shall I go fetch your night-gown?
Des. No, unpin me here.³⁵

This Lodovico is a proper man.
Emil. A very handsome man.

Des. He speaks well.
Emil. I know a lady in Venice would have walk'd barefoot to Palestine for a touch of his nether lip.⁴⁰

Des. [Singing.]
"The poor soul sat sighing by a sycamore tree,

Sing all a green willow;
Her hand on her bosom, her head on her knee,

Sing willow, willow, willow.
The fresh streams ran by her, and murmur'd

her moans;
Sing willow, willow, willow;⁴⁵

Her salt tears fell from her, and soft'ned the stones;

Sing willow, willow, willow; "
Lay by these; —

[Singing.] "Willow, willow; " —
Prithee, hie thee; he 'll come anon; —⁵⁰

[Singing.]
"Sing all a green willow must be my garland.

Let nobody blame him, his scorn I approve," — Nay, that's not next. — Hark! who is 't that knocks?

Emil. It's the wind.

Des. [Singing.]
"I call'd my love false love; but what said

he then?⁵⁵
Sing willow, willow, willow.

If I court moe women, you 'll couch with moe men." —

So, get these gone; good-night. Mine eyes do itch;

Doth that bode weeping?

Emil. 'T is neither here nor there.

Des. I have heard it said so. O, these men, these men!⁶⁰

Dost thou in conscience think, — tell me, Emilia, —

That there be women do abuse their husbands in such gross kind?

Emil. There be some such, no question.
Des. Wouldst thou do such a deed for all the world?⁶⁴

Emil. Why, would not you?
Des. No, by this heavenly light!

Emil. Nor I neither by this heavenly light; I might do 't as well i' the dark.

Des. Wouldst thou do such a deed for all the world?

Emil. The world 's a huge thing; it is a great price⁶⁹

For a small vice.
Des. In troth, I think thou wouldst not.

Emil. In troth, I think I should; and undo 't when I had done. Marry, I would not do such a thing for a joint-ring, nor for measures of lawn, nor for gowns, petticoats, nor caps, nor any petty exhibition; but, for all the whole world, — 'ud's pity, who would not make⁷⁵ her husband a cuckold to make him a monarch? I should venture purgatory for 't.

Des. Beshrew me, if I would do such a wrong

For the whole world.⁷⁹
Emil. Why, the wrong is but a wrong i' the world; and having the world for your labour, 't is a wrong in your own world, and you might quickly make it right.

Des. I do not think there is any such woman.⁸⁴

Emil. Yes, a dozen; and as many to the vantage as would store the world they play'd for.

But I do think it is their husbands' faults If wives do fall. Say that they slack their duties

And pour our treasures into foreign laps,

Or else break out in peevish jealousies,⁹⁰
Throwing restraint upon us; or say they strike

us,
Or scant our former having in despite;

Why, we have galls, and though we have some grace,

Yet have we some revenge. Let husbands know

Their wives have sense like them; they see and smell⁹⁵

And have their palates both for sweet and sour

As husbands have. What is it that they do When they change us for others? Is it sport?

I think it is. And doth affection breed it? I think it doth. Is 't frailty that thus errs?¹⁰⁰

It is so too. And have not we affections, Desires for sport, and frailty, as men have?

Then let them use us well; else let them know, The ills we do, their ills instruct us so.

Des. Good-night, good-night. Heaven me such uses send,¹⁰⁶

Not to pick bad from bad, but by bad mend.

[Exeunt.]

ACT V

SCENE I. [Cyprus. A street.]Enter IAGO and RODERIGO.

Iago. Here, stand behind this bulk; straight will he come.
Wear thy good rapier bare, and put it home.
Quick, quick; fear nothing; I'll be at thy elbow.

It makes us, or it mars us; think on that,
And fix most firm thy resolution.

Rod. Be near at hand; I may miscarry in't.

Iago. Here, at thy hand; be bold, and take thy stand. [Retires.]

Rod. I have no great devotion to the deed,
And yet he hath given me satisfying reasons.
'Tis but a man gone. Forth, my sword: he dies.

Iago. I have rubb'd this young quat almost to the sense,

And he grows angry. Now, whether he kill Cassio,

Or Cassio him, or each do kill the other,
Every way makes my gain. Live Roderigo,
He calls me to a restitution large

Of gold and jewels that I bobb'd from him,
As gifts to Desdemona;

It must not be. If Cassio do remain,
He hath a daily beauty in his life
That makes me ugly; and, besides, the Moor
May unfold me to him; there stand I in much peril.

No, he must die. But so; I heard him coming.

Enter CASSIO.

Rod. I know his gait, 'tis he. — Villain, thou diest! [Makes a pass at Cassio.]

Cas. That thrust had been mine enemy indeed,

But that my coat is better than thou know'st.
I will make proof of thine.

[Draws, and wounds Roderigo.]

Rod. O, I am slain.

[Iago from behind wounds Cassio in the leg, and exit.]

Cas. I am maim'd for ever. Help, ho! murder! murder! [Falls.]

Enter OTHELLO.

Oth. The voice of Cassio! Iago keeps his word.

Rod. O, villain that I am!

Oth. It is even so.

Cas. O, help, ho! light! a surgeon!

Oth. 'Tis he! — O brave Iago, honest and just,

That hast such noble sense of thy friend's wrong!

Thou teachest me. Minion, your dear lies dead,
And your unblest fate hies; strumpet, I come.

Forth of my heart those charms, thine eyes,
are blotted;

Thy bed, lust-stain'd, shall with lust's blood be spotted.

[Exit.]Enter LODOVICO and GRATIANO.

Cas. What, ho! no watch? no passage?
Murder! murder!

Gra. 'Tis some mischance; the voice is very direful.

Cas. O, help!

Lod. Hark!

Rod. O wretched villain!

Lod. Two or three groan. 'Tis a heavy night,
These may be counterfeits; let's think 't unsafe

To come in to the cry without more help.

Rod. Nobody come? Then shall I bleed to death.

Re-enter IAGO, with a light.

Lod. Hark!

Gra. Here's one comes in his shirt, with light and weapons.

Iago. Who's there? Whose noise is this that cries on murder?

Lod. We do not know.

Iago. Do not you hear a cry?

Cas. Here, here! for Heaven's sake, help me!

Iago. What's the matter?

Gra. This is Othello's ancient, as I take it.

Lod. The same indeed; a very valiant fellow.

Iago. What are you here that cry so grievously?

Cas. Iago? O, I am spoil'd, undone by villains!

Give me some help.

Iago. O me, lieutenant! what villains have done this?

Cas. I think that one of them is hereabout, And cannot make away.

Iago. O treacherous villains! What are you there? — Come in, and give some help. [To Lodovico and Gratiano.]

Rod. O, help me there!

Cas. That's one of them.

Iago. O murderous slave! O villain!

Rod. O damn'd Iago! O inhuman dog!

Iago. Kill men i' the dark! — Where be these bloody thieves? —

How silent is this town! — Ho! murder! murder! —

What may you be? Are you of good or evil?

Lod. As you shall prove us, praise us.

Iago. Signior Lodovico?

Lod. He, sir.

Iago. I cry you mercy. Here's Cassio hurt by villains.

Gra. Cassio!

Iago. How is't, brother!

Cas. My leg is cut in two.

Iago. Marry, heaven forbid! Light, gentlemen! I'll bind it with my shirt.

Enter BIANCA.

Bian. What is the matter, ho? Who is't that cried?

Iago. Who is't that cried!

Bian. O my dear Cassio! my sweet Cassio!
O Cassio, Cassio, Cassio!

Iago. O notable strumpet! Cassio, may you suspect
Who they should be that have thus mangled you?

Cas. No. 80

Gra. I am sorry to find you thus; I have been to seek you.

Iago. Lend me a garter. So. O, for a chair,
To bear him easily hence!

Bian. Alas, he faints! O Cassio, Cassio,
Cassio!

Iago. Gentlemen all, I do suspect this trash
To be a party in this injury. 85

Patience a while, good Cassio. Come, come;
Lend me a light. Know we this face or no?

Alas, my friend and my dear countryman Roderigo! No:—yes, sure:—O heaven! Rod- 90
erigo.

Gra. What, of Venice?

Iago. Even he, sir; did you know him?

Gra. Know him! ay.

Iago. Signior Gratiano? I cry your gentle pardon;

These bloody accidents must excuse my manners,

That so neglected you.

Gra. I am glad to see you.

Iago. How do you, Cassio? O, a chair, a chair! 95

Gra. Roderigo!

Iago. He, he, 't is he. [A chair brought in.]
O, that 's well said; the chair.

Some good man bear him carefully from hence;
I'll fetch the general's surgeon. [To Bianca.]

For you, mistress, 100

Save you your labour. He that lies slain here,
Cassio,

Was my dear friend. What malice was between you?

Cas. None in the world; nor do I know the man.

Iago. [To Bian.] What, look you pale? O, bear him out o' the air.

[Cassio and Roderigo are borne off.]

Stay you, good gentlemen. Look you pale,
mistress? 105

Do you perceive the gastness of her eye?
Nay, if you stare, we shall hear more anon.

Behold her well; I pray you, look upon her.
Do you see, gentlemen? Nay, guiltiness will
speak,

Though tongues were out of use. 110

Enter EMILIA.

Emil. Alas, what 's the matter? What 's
the matter, husband?

Iago. Cassio hath here been set on in the dark
By Roderigo and fellows that are scap'd.

He 's almost slain, and Roderigo quite dead.

Emil. Alas, good gentleman! alas, good
Cassio! 115

Iago. This is the fruits of whoring. Prithee,
Emilia,

Go know of Cassio where he supp'd to-night.
[To Bianca.] What, do you shake at that?

Bian. He supp'd at my house; but I therefore shake not.

Iago. O, did he so? I charge you, go with
me. 120

Emil. Oh, fie upon thee, strumpet!

Bian. I am no strumpet, but of life as honest
As you that thus abuse me.

Emil. As I? Fie upon thee!

Iago. Kind gentlemen, let's go see poor
Cassio dress'd.

Come, mistress, you must tell 's another tale.
Emilia, run you to the citadel, 125

And tell my lord and lady what hath happ'd.
Will you go on afore? [Aside.] This is the
night

That either makes me or fordoes me quite.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. [A bedchamber in the castle.] DES-DEMONA in bed [asleep].

Enter OTHELLO with a light.

Oth. It is the cause, it is the cause, my soul,—

Let me not name it to you, you chaste stars!—
It is the cause. Yet I'll not shed her blood,

Nor scar that whiter skin of hers than snow,
And smooth as monumental alabaster. 5

Yet she must die, else she'll betray more men.
Put out the light, and then put out the light.

If I quench thee, thou flaming minister,
I can again thy former light restore;

Should I repent me; but once put out thy
light, 10

Thou cunning'st pattern of excelling nature,
I know not where 's that Promethean heat

That can thy light relume. When I have pluck'd the rose

I cannot give it vital growth again,
It needs must wither; I'll smell it on the tree. [Kisses her. 15

Oh, balmy breath, that dost almost persuade Justice to break her sword! One more, one
more.

Be thus when thou art dead, and I will kill
thee

And love thee after. One more, and that 's the last;

So sweet was ne'er so fatal. I must weep, 20
But they are cruel tears. This sorrow 's heavenly;

It strikes where it doth love. She wakes.
Des. Who 's there? Othello?

Oth. Ay, Desdemona.

Des. Will you come to bed, my lord?

Oth. Have you pray'd to-night, Desdemona?

Des. Ay, my lord.

Oth. If you bethink yourself of any crime 25
Unreconcil'd as yet to Heaven and grace,
Solicit for it straight.

Des. Alack, my lord, what may you mean by that?

Oth. Well, do it, and be brief; I will walk
by. 30

I would not kill thy unprepared spirit;
No; heavens forbid! I would not kill thy soul.

Des. Talk you of killing?

Oth. Ay, I do.
Des. Then Heaven
 Have mercy on me!

Oth. Amen, with all my heart!

Des. If you say so, I hope you will not kill me.

Oth. Hum!

Des. And yet I fear you; for you're fatal then

When your eyes roll so. Why I should fear I know not, Since guiltiness I know not; but yet I feel I fear.

Oth. Think on thy sins.

Des. They are loves I bear to you.

Oth. Ay, and for that thou diest.

Des. That death's unnatural that kills for loving.

Alas, why gnaw you so your nether lip?
 Some bloody passion shakes your very frame.
 These are portents; but yet I hope, I hope, they do not point on me.

Oth. Peace, and be still!

Des. I will so. What's the matter?

Oth. That handkerchief which I so lov'd and gave thee

Thou gav'st to Cassio.

Des. No, by my life and soul!
 Send for the man, and ask him.

Oth. Sweet soul, take heed,
 Take heed of perjury; thou art on thy death-bed.

Des. Ay, but not yet to die.

Oth. Yes, presently:
 Therefore confess thee freely of thy sin;
 For to deny each article with oath
 Cannot remove nor choke the strong conception
 That I do groan withal. Thou art to die.

Des. O, Heaven, have mercy on me!

Oth. I say, amen.

Des. And have you mercy too! I never did
 Offend you in my life; never lov'd Cassio
 But with such general warranty of heaven
 As I might love; I never gave him token.

Oth. By heaven, I saw my handkerchief in 's hand.

O perjur'd woman! thou dost stone my heart,
 And makes me call what I intend to do
 A murder, which I thought a sacrifice.
 I saw the handkerchief.

Des. He found it then;
 I never gave it him. Send for him hither;
 Let him confess a truth.

Oth. He hath confess'd.

Des. What, my lord?

Oth. That he hath us'd thee.

Des. How? unlawfully?

Oth. Ay.

Des. He will not say so.

Oth. No, his mouth is stopp'd;
 Honest Iago hath ta'en order for't.

Des. O! my fear interprets. What, is he dead?

Oth. Had all his hairs been lives, my great revenge

Had stomach for them all.

Des. Alas! he is betray'd and I undone.

Oth. Out, strumpet! weep'st thou for him to my face?

Des. O, banish me, my lord, but kill me not!

Oth. Down, strumpet!

Des. Kill me to-morrow; let me live to-night!

Oth. Nay, if you strive, —

Des. But half an hour!

Oth. Being done, there is no pause.

Des. But while I say one prayer!

Oth. It is too late.
[He smothers her.]

Emil. (At the door.) My lord, my lord!

What, ho! my lord, my lord!

Oth. What noise is this? Not dead? not yet quite dead?

I that am cruel am yet merciful;
 I would not have thee linger in thy pain.

So, so.

Emil. (Within.) What, ho! my lord, my lord!

Oth. Who's there?

Emil. [Within.] O, good my lord, I would speak a word with you!

Oth. Yes: — 't is Emilia. — By and by. — She's dead.

'T is like she comes to speak of Cassio's death.
 The noise was high. Ha! no more moving?
 Still as the grave. Shall she come in? Were't good? —

I think she stirs again: — no. What's best to do?

If she come in, she'll sure speak to my wife.
 My wife! my wife! what wife? I have no wife.

O, insupportable! O heavy hour!
 Methinks it should be now a huge eclipse
 Of sun and moon, and that the affrighted globe
 Did yawn at alteration.

Emil. [Within.] I do beseech you

That I may speak with you, O, good my lord!

Oth. I had forgot thee. O, come in, Emilia.
 Soft; by and by. — Let me the curtains draw. —
 Where art thou? [Unlocks the door.]

Enter EMILIA.

What's the matter with thee now?

Emil. O, my good lord, yonder's foul murderers done!

Oth. What, now?

Emil. But now, my lord.

Oth. It is the very error of the moon;
 She comes more nearer earth than she was wont,

And makes men mad.

Emil. Cassio, my lord, hath kill'd a young Venetian

Call'd Roderigo.

Oth. Roderigo kill'd!

And Cassio kill'd!

Emil. No, Cassio is not kill'd.

Oth. Not Cassio kill'd! Then murder's out of tune,

And sweet revenge grows harsh.

Des. O, falsely, falsely murder'd!

Emil. O Lord, what cry is that?

Oth. That! what?

Emil. Out, and alas! that was my lady's voice. 119

Help! help, ho! help! O lady, speak again!
Sweet Desdemona! O sweet mistress, speak!

Des. A guiltless death I die.

Emil. O, who hath done this deed?

Des. Nobody; I myself. Farewell!

Commend me to my kind lord. O, farewell! 125

[Dies.]

Oth. Why, how should she be murd'ered?

Emil. Alas, who knows?

Oth. You hear her say herself, it was not I.

Emil. She said so; I must needs report the truth.

Oth. She's, like a liar, gone to burning hell.

'T was I that kill'd her.

Emil. O, the more angel she,
And you the blacker devil! 131

Oth. She turn'd to folly, and she was a whore.

Emil. Thou dost belie her, and thou art a devil.

Oth. She was false as water.

Emil. Thou art rash as fire, to say

That she was false: O, she was heavenly true!

Oth. Cassio did top her; ask thy husband else. 136

O, I were damn'd beneath all depth in hell

But that I did proceed upon just grounds

To this extremity. Thy husband knew it all.

Emil. My husband! 140

Oth. Thy husband.

Emil. That she was false to wedlock?

Oth. Ay, with Cassio. Nay, had she been true,

If Heaven would make me such another world

Of one entire and perfect chrysolite, 146

I'd not have sold her for it.

Emil. My husband!

Oth. Ay, 't was he that told me on her first.

An honest man he is, and hates the slime

That sticks on filthy deeds.

Emil. My husband!

Oth. What needs this iterance, woman? I say thy husband. 150

Emil. O mistress, villainy hath made mocks with love!

My husband say that she was false!

Oth. He, woman;

I say thy husband; dost understand the word?

My friend, thy husband, honest, honest Iago.

Emil. If he say so, may his pernicious soul

Rot half a grain a day! He lies to the heart. 156

She was too fond of her most filthy bargain.

Oth. Ha!

Emil. Do thy worst!

This deed of thine is no more worthy heaven 159

Than thou wast worthy her.

Oth. Peace, you were best.

Emil. Thou hast not half that power to do me harm

As I have to be hurt. O gull! O dolt!

As ignorant as dirt! Thou hast done a deed — I care not for thy sword; I'll make thee

known, 166

Though I lost twenty lives. — Help! help, ho! help!

The Moor hath kill'd my mistress! Murder! murder!

Enter MONTANO, GRATIANO, IAGO, and others.

Mon. What is the matter? How now, general!

Emil. O, are you come, Iago? You have done well,

That men must lay their murders on your neck.

Gra. What is the matter? 171

Emil. Disprove this villain, if thou be'st a man.

He says thou told'st him that his wife was false.

I know thou didst not, thou 'rt not such a villain.

Speak, for my heart is full. 175

Iago. I told him what I thought, and told no more Than what he found himself was apt and true.

Emil. But did you ever tell him she was false?

Iago. I did.

Emil. You told a lie, an odious, damned lie; Upon my soul, a lie, a wicked lie. 181

She false with Cassio! — did you say with Cassio?

Iago. With Cassio, mistress; Go to, charm your tongue.

Emil. I will not charm my tongue; I am bound to speak.

My mistress here lies murdered in her bed, — 186

All. O heavens forbend!

Emil. And your reports have set the murderer on.

Oth. Nay, stare not, masters; it is true, indeed.

Gra. 'T is a strange truth.

Mon. O monstrous act!

Emil. Villainy, villainy, villainy! I think upon 't, — I think I smell 't, — O villainy! 191

I thought so then, — I'll kill myself for grief — O villainy, villainy!

Iago. What, are you mad? I charge you, get you home.

Emil. Good gentlemen, let me have leave to speak; 196

'T is proper I obey him, but not now.

Perchance, Iago, I will ne'er go home.

Oth. O! O! O! [He falls on the bed.]

Emil. Nay, lay thee down and roar; For thou hast kill'd the sweetest innocent

That e'er did lift up eye.

Oth. [Rising.] O, she was foul! 200

I scarce did know you, uncle; there lies your niece,

Whose breath, indeed, these hands have newly stopp'd.

I know this act shows horrible and grim.

Gra. Poor Desdemona! I am glad thy father's dead. 204

Thy match was mortal to him, and pure grief Shore his old thread in twain. Did he live now,

This sight would make him do a desperate turn, Yea, curse his better angel from his side,

And fall to reprobance.

Oth. 'T is pitiful; but yet Iago knows 210
That she with Cassio hath the act of shame

A thousand times committed. Cassio confess'd it;

And she did gratify his amorous works
With that recognizance and pledge of love
Which I first gave her. I saw it in his hand; ²¹⁵
It was a handkerchief, an antique token
My father gave my mother.

Emil. O Heaven! O heavenly powers!

Iago. 'Zounds, hold your peace.

Emil. 'T will out, 't will out! I peace!
No, I will speak as liberal as the north. ²²⁰

Let Heaven and men and devils, let them all,
All, all, cry shame against me, yet I'll speak.

Iago. Be wise, and get you home.

Emil. I will not.

[Iago offers to stab Emilia.]

Gra.

Your sword upon a woman?

Emil. O thou dull Moor! that handkerchief thou speak'st of ²²⁵

I found by fortune and did give my husband;

For often, with a solemn earnestness,
More than indeed belong'd to such a trifle,
He begg'd of me to steal it.

Iago. Villanous whore!

Emil. She give it Cassio! No, alas! I found it, ²³⁰

And I did give 't my husband.

Iago. Filth, thou liest!

Emil. By heaven, I do not, I do not, gentle-
men.

O murderous coxcomb! what should such a fool

Do with so good a wife?

Oth. Are there no stones in heaven

But what serves for the thunder?—Precious villain! ²³⁵

[He runs at Iago: Iago kills Emilia.]

Gra. The woman falls; sure, he hath kill'd his wife.

Emil. Ay, ay! O, lay me by my mistress' side. [Exit Iago.]

Gra. He's gone, but his wife's kill'd.

Mon. 'T is a notorious villain. Take you this weapon

Which I have here recover'd from the Moor. ²⁴⁰

Come, guard the door without; let him not pass,

But kill him rather. I'll after that same villain,

For 't is a damned slave.

[Exeunt Montano and Gratiano.]

Oth. I am not valiant neither,

But every puny whipster gets my sword.

But why should honour outlive honesty? ²⁴⁵
Let it go all.

Emil. What did thy song bode, lady?

Hark, canst thou hear me? I will play the swan,

And die in music. [Singing.] "Willow, willow, willow!"—

Moor, she was chaste; she lov'd thee, cruel
Moor;

So come my soul to bliss, as I speak true; ²⁵⁰
So speaking as I think, alas, I die. [Dies.]

Oth. I have another weapon in this chamber;

It was a sword of Spain, the ice-brook's temper,—

O, here it is. Uncle, I must come forth.

Gra. (Within.) If thou attempt it, it will cost thee dear: ²⁵⁵

Thou hast no weapon, and perforce must suffer.

Oth. Look in upon me then and speak with
me,

Or, naked as I am, I will assault thee.

[Re-enter GRATIANO.]

Gra. What is the matter?

Oth. Behold, I have a weapon;

A better never did itself sustain ²⁶⁰

Upon a soldier's thigh. I have seen the day

That, with this little arm and this good sword,

I have made my way through more impediments

Than twenty times your stop. But, O vain boast!

Who can control his fate? 't is not so now. ²⁶⁵

Be not afraid though you do see me weapon'd;

Here is my journey's end, here is my butt

And very sea-mark of my utmost sail.

Do you go back dismay'd? 'T is a lost fear;

Man but a rush against Othello's breast ²⁷⁰

And he retires. Where should Othello go?

Now, how dost thou look now? O ill-starr'd wench!

Pale as thy smock! when we shall meet at
compt,

This look of thine will hurl my soul from heaven,

And fiends will snatch at it. Cold, cold, my girl!

Even like thy chastity. O cursed, cursed slave! ²⁷⁵

Whip me, ye devils,

From the possession of this heavenly sight!

Blow me about in winds! roast me in sulphur!

Wash me in steep-down gulfs of liquid fire! ²⁸⁰

O Desdemon! dead, Desdemon! dead!

Oh! Oh!

Enter LODOVICO, MONTANO, CASSIO carried in a chair, and Officers, with IAGO [prisoner].

Lod. Where is this rash and most unfortunate man?

Oth. That's he that was Othello; here I am.

Lod. Where is that viper? Bring the villain forth. ²⁸⁵

Oth. I look down towards his feet; but that's a fable.

If that thou be'st a devil, I cannot kill thee.

[Wounds Iago.]

Lod. Wrench his sword from him.

Iago. I bleed, sir; but not kill'd.

Oth. I am not sorry neither. I'd have thee
live;

For, in my sense, 't is happiness to die. ²⁹⁰

Lod. O thou Othello, that wert once so good,

Fallen in the practice of a cursed slave,

What shall be said to thee?

Oth. Why, anything.

An honourable murderer, if you will;

For nought I did in hate, but all in honour. ²⁹⁵

Lod. This wretch hath part confess'd his villainy.

Did you and he consent in Cassio's death?

Oth. Ay.

Cas. Dear general, I never gave you cause.

Oth. I do believe it, and I ask your pardon.

Will you, I pray, demand that demi-devil ³⁰¹

Why he hath thus ensnar'd my soul and body ?

Iago. Demand me nothing ; what you know, you know.

From this time forth I never will speak word.

Lod. What, not to pray ?

Gra. Torments will ope your lips. ³⁰⁶

Oth. Well, thou dost best.

Lod. Sir, you shall understand what hath befallen, ³⁰⁶

Which, as I think, you know not. Here is a letter

Found in the pocket of the slain Roderigo,

And here another. The one of them imports

The death of Cassio to be undertook ³¹¹

By Roderigo.

Oth. O villain !

Cas. Most heathenish and most gross !

Lod. Now here 's another discontented paper,

Found in his pocket too ; and this, it seems, ³¹⁵

Roderigo meant to have sent this damned villain ;

But that belike Iago in the interim

Came in and satisfi'd him.

Oth. O thou pernicious caitiff ! --

How came you, Cassio, by that handkerchief

That was my wife's ?

Cas. I found it in my chamber ;

And he himself confess'd but even now ³²¹

That there he dropp'd it for a special purpose

Which wrought to his desire.

Oth. O fool ! fool ! fool !

Cas. There is besides in Roderigo's letter,

How he upbraids Iago, that he made him ³²⁵

Brave me upon the watch, whereon it came

That I was cast ; and even but now he spake,

After long seeming dead, Iago hurt him,

Iago set him on.

Lod. You must forsake this room, and go with us. ³³⁰

Your power and your command is taken off,

And Cassio rules in Cyprus. For this slave,

If there be any cunning cruelty

That can torment him much and hold him long,

It shall be his. You shall close prisoner rest, Till that the nature of your fault be known ³³⁶ To the Venetian state. Come, bring away.

Oth. Soft you ; a word or two before you go. I have done the state some service, and they know 't.

No more of that. I pray you, in your letters, When you shall these unlucky deeds relate, ³⁴¹ Speak of me as I am ; nothing extenuate, Nor set down aught in malice. Then must you speak

Of one that lov'd not wisely but too well ; ³⁴⁴

Of one not easily jealous, but being wrought

Perplex'd in the extreme ; of one whose hand,

Like the base Indian, threw a pearl away

Richer than all his tribe ; of one whose subdu'd eyes,

Albeit unused to the melting mood,

Drops tears as fast as the Arabian trees ³⁵⁰

Their medicinal gum. Set you down this ;

And say besides, that in Aleppo once,

Where a malignant and a turban'd Turk

Beat a Venetian and traduc'd the state,

I took by the throat the circumcised dog, -- ³⁵⁵

And smote him, thus. [Stabs himself.]

Lod. O bloody period !

Gra. All that 's spoke is marr'd.

Oth. I kiss'd thee ere I kill'd thee : no way but this,

Killing myself, to die upon a kiss.

[Falls on the bed, and dies.]

Cas. This did I fear, but thought he had no weapon ; ³⁶⁰

For he was great of heart.

Lod. [To Iago.] O Spartan dog,

More fell than anguish, hunger, or the sea !

Look on the tragic loading of this bed ;

This is thy work. The object poisons sight ;

Let it be hid. Gratiano, keep the house, ³⁶⁵

And seize upon the fortunes of the Moor,

For they succeed on you. To you, lord governor,

Remains the censure of this hellish villain ;

The time, the place, the torture. O, enforce it !

Myself will straight aboard ; and to the state

This heavy act with heavy heart relate. ³⁷¹

[Exeunt.]

THE TRAGEDY OF KING LEAR

THE later limit for the date of King Lear is fixed by an entry in the Stationers' Register, which states that the play was performed at Whitehall at Christmas, 1606. An earlier limit is found in the date of Harsnett's Declaration of Egregious Popish Impostures, entered March 16, 1603, from which Shakespeare took such details as the names of the devils in the pretended ravings of Edgar. The chief attempt to find a more exact date is based on the opinion that a (probably) pirated edition of the old King Leir, entered May 8, 1605, was issued to take advantage of the interest revived by the production of Shakespeare's play. Though this cannot be demonstrated, the date of composition pointed to, 1604-5, fits well the internal evidences of the relation of King Lear to Othello and Timon. But several good authorities prefer 1606.

King Lear first appeared in print in 1608, when two quarto editions were issued, the earlier of which, known as the "Pide Bull" Quarto, exists in a variety of states, due to the fact that corrections were made while the work was being printed, corrected and uncorrected sheets being bound up together in a variety of combinations. The Second Quarto has no independent authority. Both Quartos vary widely from the Folio text. They are full of corruptions, and their chief value lies in their containing nearly 300 lines absent from the Folio. The Folio, in turn, has over 100 lines not found in the Quartos, and the text is much more accurate. It is accordingly used as the basis of the present edition. The omissions in both versions seem to be, at least in part, cuts made for acting purposes. Apart from the usual allowance of printers' and copyists' mistakes, many of the variations in the Quarto text seem to be such as may be accounted for by regarding the text as derived from a short-hand writer's report of a performance in which the actors were by no means perfect in their parts. This does not exclude the possibility that the play had been revised and enlarged before the performance reported in the Quarto.

The germ of the story is found, usually as a variant of the Cinderella tale, in the folk-lore of many ages and countries. Attached to the name of Lear, the legend assumes pseudo-historical form with Geoffrey of Monmouth, is handed down through the long line of Latin and English chroniclers, appears also in collections of tales such as the Gesta Romanorum, finds a place in The Faerie Queene, and is dramatized in The True Chronicle History of King Leir and his Three Daughters, an anonymous play probably identical with one performed April 6, 1594. The chief sources used by Shakespeare seem to have been Geoffrey of Monmouth, The Mirror for Magistrates, Holinshed, The Faerie Queene, and, most important of all, the old play. To Shakespeare himself is due the tragic catastrophe which takes the place of the traditional fortunate ending, according to which the French forces are victorious, and Lear is restored to his kingdom. He first makes Lear go mad; invents the banishment of Kent and his subsequent disguise; creates the Fool and Burgundy; and, finally, connects with Lear the whole story of Gloucester and his sons.

This skilfully interwoven underplot is taken from the incident of the blind king of Paphlagonia in Sidney's Arcadia. This story tells of a king turned against his legitimate son by the slanders of his bastard, the usurpation of the kingdom and the blinding of the king by the bastard, the rescue of the father by the good son whom he had sought to murder, and the foiling of the father's attempt to throw himself over a rock. The pretended madness of Edgar is purely an invention of Shakespeare's; and the important elements both in plot and character which depend on the love of the wicked daughters for Edmund are all first found in the present play.

But these details are not the only means by which this improbable legend is converted into the most tremendous of tragedies. This is done chiefly by the elevation and intensity with which the characters are conceived: the imperiousness and intellectual grasp of Lear, the force and subtlety of Edmund, the venom of the wicked daughters, the tenderness of Cordelia, the impassioned loyalty of Kent, the unselfishness of Edgar, and the poignant candor of the faithful Fool.

ACT I

SCENE I. [King Lear's palace.]

Enter KENT, GLOUCESTER, and EDMUND.

Kent. I thought the King had more affected the Duke of Albany than Cornwall.

Glou. It did always seem so to us; but now, in the division of the kingdom, it appears not which of the Dukes he values most; for qualities are so weigh'd, that curiosity in neither can make choice of either's moiety. 7

Kent. Is not this your son, my lord?

Glou. His breeding, sir, hath been at my charge. I have so often blush'd to acknowledge him, that now I am braz'd to 't. 11

Kent. I cannot conceive you.

Glou. Sir, this young fellow's mother could; whereupon she grew round-womb'd, and had, indeed, sir, a son for her cradle ere she had a husband for her bed. Do you smell a fault?

Kent. I cannot wish the fault undone, the issue of it being so proper. 18

Glou. But I have a son, sir, by order of law, some year elder than this, who yet is no dearer in my account. Though this knave came something saucily into the world before he was sent for, yet was his mother fair; there was good sport at his making, and the whoreson must be acknowledged. Do you know this noble gentleman, Edmund?

Edm. No, my lord. 25

Glou. My Lord of Kent. Remember him hereafter as my honourable friend.

Edm. My services to your lordship.

Kent. I must love you, and sue to know you better. 31

Edm. Sir, I shall study deserving.

Glou. He hath been out nine years, and away he shall again. The King is coming.

Sennet. Enter one bearing a coronet, then KING LEAR, then the DUKES OF ALBANY and CORNWALL, next GONERIL, REGAN, CORDELIA, with followers.

Lear. Attend the lords of France and Burgundy, Gloucester. 38

Glou. I shall, my lord.

[Exeunt [Gloucester and Edmund].]

Lear. Meantime we shall express our darker purpose.

Give me the map there. Know that we have divided

In three our kingdom; and 't is our fast intent To shake all cares and business from our age, 40 Conferring them on younger strengths, while we

Unburden'd crawl toward death. Our son of Cornwall,

And you, our no less loving son of Albany, We have this hour a constant will to publish Our daughters' several dowers, that future 45 strife

May be prevented now. The Princes, France and Burgundy,

Great rivals in our youngest daughter's love, Long in our court have made their amorous sojourn,

And here are to be answer'd. Tell me, my daughters,—

Since now we will divest us both of rule, 50 Interest of territory, cares of state,—

Which of you shall we say doth love us most, That we our largest bounty may extend

Where nature doth with merit challenge? Goneril,

Our eldest-born, speak first. 55

Gon. Sir, I love you more than word can wield the matter;

Dearer than eye-sight, space, and liberty:

Beyond what can be valued, rich or rare;

No less than life, with grace, health, beauty,
honour;
As much as child e'er lov'd, or father found; 60
A love that makes breath poor, and speech unable:

Beyond all manner of so much I love you.

Cor. [Aside.] What shall Cordelia speak?
Love and be silent.

Lear. Of all these bounds, even from this line to this,

With shadowy forests and with champains
rich'd, 65

With plenteous rivers and wide-skirted meads,
We make thee lady. To thine and Albany's issues

Be this perpetual. What says our second daughter,

Our dearest Regan, wife of Cornwall? Speak.

Reg. I am made of that self metal as my sister, 71

And prize me at her worth. In my true heart
I find she names my very deed of love;

Only she comes too short, that I profess
Myself an enemy to all other joys 75

Which the most precious quare of sense possesses;

And find I am alone felicitate

In your dear Highness's love.

Cor. [Aside.] Then poor Cordelia!
And yet not so; since, I am sure, my love's
More ponderous than my tongue. 80

Lear. To thee and thine hereditary ever Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom;
No less in space, validity, and pleasure,
Than that conferr'd on Goneril. Now, our joy,
Although our last and least, to whose young
love 85

The vines of France and milk of Burgundy Strive to be interest'd, what can you say to draw

A third more opulent than your sisters? Speak.

Cor. Nothing, my lord.

Lear. Nothing! 90

Cor. Nothing.

Lear. Nothing will come of nothing. Speak
again.

Cor. Unhappy that I am, I cannot heave
My heart into my mouth. I love your Majesty
According to my bond; no more nor less. 95

Lear. How, how, Cordelia! Mend your speech a little,

Lest you may mar your fortunes.

Cor. Good my lord,

You have begot me, bred me, lov'd me: I
Return those duties back as are right fit;

Obey you, love you, and most honour you. 100
Why have my sisters husbands, if they say
They love you all? Haply, when I shall wed,
That lord whose hand must take my plight shall carry

Half my love with him, half my care and duty.
Sure, I shall never marry like my sisters 105

[To love my father all].

Lear. But goes thy heart with this?

Cor. Ay, my good lord.

Lear. So young, and so untender?

Cor. So young, my lord, and true.

Lear. Let it be so; thy truth, then, be thy dower! 10 + 10 = 20 110

For, by the sacred radiance of the sun,
The mysteries of Hecate, and the night;
By all the operation of the orbs

From whom we do exist, and cease to be;
Here I disclaim all my paternal care, 115

Propinquity and property of blood,
And as a stranger to my heart and me

Hold thee, from this, for ever. The barbarous Scythian,

Or he that makes his generation messes
To gorge his appetite, shall to my bosom 120

Be as well neighbour'd, piti'd, and relief'd,
As thou my sometime daughter.

Kent. Good my liege, —

Lear. Peace, Kent!

Come not between the dragon and his wrath.
I lov'd her most, and thought to set my rest 125

On her kind nursery. [To Cor.] Hence, and avoid my sight! —

So be my grave my peace, as here I give Her father's heart from her! Call France. —

Who stirs?

Call Burgundy. Cornwall and Albany,
With my two daughters' dowers digest the 130

third;
Let pride, which she calls plainness, marry her.

I do invest you jointly with my power,
Pre-eminence, and all the large effects

That troop with majesty. Ourself, by monthly course,

With reservation of an hundred knights, 135
By you to be sustain'd, shall our abode

Make with you by due turn. Only we shall retain

The name, and all the addition to a king;
The sway, revenue, execution of the rest,

Beloved sons, be yours; which to confirm, 140
This coronet part between you.

Kent. Royal Lear,

Whom I have ever honour'd as my king,
Lov'd as my father, as my master follow'd

As my great patron thought on in my prayers, —
Lear. The bow is bent and drawn; make 145 from the shaft.

Kent. Let it fall rather, though the fork invade

The region of my heart: be Kent unmannerly
When Lear is mad. What wouldst thou do, old man?

Thinkst thou that duty shall have dread to
speak.

When power to flattery bows? To plainness
honour's bound, 150

When majesty falls to folly. Reserve thy state;
And, in thy best consideration, check

This hideous rashness. Answer my life my judgement,

Thy youngest daughter does not love thee least;
Nor are those empty-hearted whose low sounds

Reverb no hollowness.

Lear. Kent, on thy life, no more. 155

Kent. My life I never held but as a pawn
To wage against thy enemies, ne'er fear to lose
it,

Thy safety being motive.

Kent is very much willing.
Lear. Out of my sight!
Kent. See better, Lear; and let me still remain 190

The true blank of thine eye.

Lear. Now, by Apollo, —

Kent. Now, by Apollo, king,
 Thou swear'st thy gods in vain.

Lear. O, vassal! miscreant!
[Laying his hand on his sword.]

Alb. } Dear sir, forbear. 164
Corn. }

Kent. Kill thy physician, and thy fee bestow
 Upon the foul disease. Revoke thy gift;
 Or, whilst I can vent clamour from my throat,
 I'll tell thee thou dost evil.

Lear. Hear me, recreant!
 On thine allegiance, hear me! 170
 That thou hast sought to make us break our vows,

Which we durst never yet, and with strain'd pride

To come betwixt our sentences and our power,
 Which nor our nature nor our place can bear,
 Our potency made good, take thy reward. 175

Five days we do allot thee, for provision
 To shield thee from disasters of the world;
 And on the sixth to turn thy hated back Upon our kingdom. If, on the tenth day following, 179

Thy banish'd trunk be found in our dominions,
 The moment is thy death. Away! By Jupiter,
 This shall not be revok'd.

Kent. Fare thee well, king! Sith thus thou wilt appear,

Freedom lives hence, and banishment is here.
[To Cordelia.] The gods to their dear shelter take thee, maid, 185

That justly think'st, and hast most rightly said! [Right speech is just thought.]

[To Regan and Goneril.] And your large speeches may your deeds approve,
 That good effects may spring from words of
 love.

Thus Kent, O princes, bids you all adieu;
 He'll shape his old course in a country new. 190

[Exit.]

Flourish. Re-enter GLOUCESTER, with FRANCE, BURGUNDY, and Attendants.

Glou. Here's France and Burgundy, my noble lord.

Lear. My Lord of Burgundy,
 We first address toward you, who with this
 king

Hath rival'd for our daughter. What, in the least,

Will you require in present dower with her, 195
 Or cease your quest of love?

Bur. Most royal Majesty,
 I crave no more than what your Highness
 offer'd,

Nor will you tender less.

Lear. Right noble Burgundy,
 When she was dear to us, we did hold her so;
 But now her price is fallen. Sir, there she stands: 200

If aught within that little-seeming substance,

Or all of it, with our displeasure piec'd,
 And nothing more, may fitly like your Grace,
 She's there, and she is yours.

Bur. I know no answer.

Lear. Will you, with those infirmities she owes, 205

Unfriended, new-adapted to our hate, Dower'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath,

Take her, or leave her?

Bur. Pardon me, royal sir;
 Election makes not up in such conditions.

Lear. Then leave her, sir; for, by the power that made me, 210

I tell you all her wealth. [To France.] For you,
 great king,

I would not from your love make such a stray,
 To match you where I hate; therefore beseech
 you

To avert your liking a more worthier way
 Than on a wretch whom Nature is asham'd 215

Almost to acknowledge hers.

France. This is most strange,
 That she, whom even but now was your best object,

The argument of your praise, balm of your age,
 The best, the dearest, should in this trice of
 time

Commit a thing so monstrous, to dismantle 220
 So many folds of favour. Sure, her offence

Must be of such unnatural degree,
 That monsters it, or your fore-vouch'd affection

Fallen into taint; which to believe of her,
 Must be a faith that reason without miracle 225
 Should never plant in me.

Cor. I yet beseech your Majesty, —
 If for I want that glib and oily art,

To speak and purpose not; since what I well intend,

I'll do 't before I speak, — that you make known

It is no vicious blot, murder, or foulness, 230
 No unchaste action, or dishonoured step,

That hath depriv'd me of your grace and favour;

But even for want of that for which I am richer,

A still-soliciting eye, and such a tongue
 That I am glad I have not, though not to have
 it 235

Hath lost me in your liking.

Lear. Better thou
 Hadst not been born than not to have pleas'd me better.

France. Is it but this, — a tardiness in nature which often leaves the history unspoke 239

That it intends to do? My Lord of Burgundy,
 What say you to the lady? Love's not love

When it is mingled with regards that stands Aloof from the entire point. Will you have her?

She is herself a dowry.

Bur. Royal king,
 Give but that portion which yourself propos'd,

And here I take Cordelia by the hand,
 Duchess of Burgundy. 240

Lear. Nothing. I have sworn; I am firm.

Bur. I am sorry, then, you have so lost a father

That you must lose a husband.

Cor. Peace be with Burgundy!
Since that respect and fortunes are his love, 261
I shall not be his wife.

France. Fairest Cordelia, that art most rich being poor,

Most choice forsaken, and most lov'd despis'd!

Thee and thy virtues here I seize upon, 265

Be it lawful I take up what 's cast away.

Gods, gods! 't is strange that from their cold'st neglect

My love should kindle to inflam'd respect.

Thy dowerless daughter, king, thrown to my
chance,

Is queen of us, of ours, and our fair France, 269

Not all the dukes of waterish Burgundy

Can buy this unpriz'd precious maid of me.

Bid them farewell, Cordelia, though unkind;

Thou lovest here, a better where to find.

Lear. Thou hast her, France. Let her be thine; for we 265

Have no such daughter, nor shall ever see

That face of hers again.—[To Cor.] Therefore be gone

Without our grace, our love, our benison.—

Come, noble Burgundy.

[*Flourish. Exeunt [all but France,
Goneril, Regan, and Cordelia].*]

France. Bid farewell to your sisters. 270

Cor. The jewels of our father, with wash'd
eyes

Cordelia leaves you. I know you what you are;

And like a sister am most loath to call

Your faults as they are named. Love well our
father,

To your profess'd bosoms I commit him; 275

But yet, alas, stood I within his grace,

I would prefer him to a better place.

So, farewell to you both.

Reg. Prescribe not us our duty.

Gon. Let your study 279

Be to content your lord, who hath receiv'd you

At fortune's alms. You have obedience scanted,

And well are worth the want that you have wanted.

Cor. Time shall unfold what plighted cunning hides;

Who covers faults, at last shame them derides.

Well may you prosper!

France. Come, my fair Cordelia. 285

[Exeunt [France and Cordelia].]

Gon. Sister, it is not little I have to say of what most nearly appertains to us both. I think our father will hence to-night.

Reg. That 's most certain, and with you;
next month with us. 290

Gon. You see how full of changes his age is;
the observation we have made of it hath not been little. He always lov'd our sister most;
and with what poor judgement he hath now cast her off appears too grossly.

Reg. 'T is the infirmity of his age; yet he hath ever but slenderly known himself. 297

Gon. The best and soundest of his time hath been but rash; then must we look from his age to receive not alone the imperfections of long-engrafted condition, but therewithal the unruly yearwardness that infirm and choleric years bring with them. 303

Reg. Such unconstant starts are we like to have from him as this of Kent's banishment.

Gon. There is further compliment of leave-taking between France and him. Pray you, let us hit together; if our father carry authority with such disposition as he bears, this last surrender of his will but offend us. 310

Reg. We shall further think of it.

Gon. We must do something, and i' the heat.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. [The Earl of Gloucester's castle.]

Enter Bastard [EDMUND with a letter].

Edm. Thou, Nature, art my goddess; to thy law

My services are bound. Wherefore should I Stand in the plague of custom, and permit

The curiosity of nations to deprive me,
For that I am some twelve or fourteen moon-shines 5

Lag of a brother? Why bastard? Wherefore base?

When my dimensions are as well compact,
My mind as generous, and my shape as true,
As honest madam's issue? Why brand they us
With base? with baseness? bastardy? base,
base? 10

Who, in the lusty stealth of nature, take
More composition and fierce quality

Than doth, within a dull, stale, tired bed,
Go to the creating a whole tribe of fops,

Got 'tween asleep and wake? Well, then, 15

Legitimate Edgar, I must have your land.

Our father's love is to the bastard Edmund

As to the legitimate. Fine word, "legiti-mate"!

Well, my legitimate, if this letter speed
And my invention thrive, Edmund the base 20

Shall top the legitimate. I grow; I prosper.

Now, gods, stand up for bastards!

Enter GLOUCESTER.

Glou. Kent banish'd thus! and France in choler parted!

And the King gone to-night! subscrib'd his power!

Confin'd to exhibition! All this done 25

Upon the gad! Edmund, how now! what news?

Edm. So please your lordship, none.

[Putting up the letter.]

Glou. Why so earnestly seek you to put up that letter?

Edm. I know no news, my lord.

Glou. What paper were you reading? 30

Edm. Nothing, my lord.

Glou. No? What needed, then, that terrible dispatch of it into your pocket? The quality of nothing hath not such need to hide itself.
Let 's see. Come, if it be nothing, I shall not need spectacles. 35

Edm. I beseech you, sir, pardon me. It is a letter from my brother, that I have not all o'er-read; and for so much as I have perus'd, I find it not fit for your o'er-looking.

Glou. Give me the letter, sir.

Edm. I shall offend, either to detain or give it. The contents, as in part I understand them, are to blame.

Glou. Let's see, let's see.

Edm. I hope, for my brother's justification, he wrote this but as an essay or taste of my virtue.

Glou. (Reads.) "This policy and reverence of age makes the world bitter to the best of our times; keeps our fortunes from us till our oldness cannot relish them. I begin to find an idle and fond bondage in the oppression of aged tyranny; who sways, not as it hath power, but as it is suffer'd. Come to me, that of this I may speak more. If our father would sleep till I wak'd him, you should enjoy half his revenue for ever, and live the beloved of your brother,"

EDGAR.

Hum — conspiracy! — "Sleep till I wake him, you should enjoy half his revenue!" — My son Edgar! Had he a hand to write this? a heart and brain to breed it in? — When came this to you? Who brought it?

Edm. It was not brought me, my lord; there's the cunning of it. I found it thrown in at the casement of my closet.

Glou. You know the character to be your brother's?

Edm. If the matter were good, my lord, I durst swear it were his; but, in respect of that, I would fain think it were not.

Glou. It is his.

Edm. It is his hand, my lord; but I hope his heart is not in the contents.

Glou. Has he never before sounded you in this business?

Edm. Never, my lord; but I have heard him oft maintain it to be fit that, sons at perfect age, and fathers declin'd, the father should be as ward to the son, and the son manage his revenue.

Glou. O villain, villain! His very opinion in the letter! Abhorred villain! Unnatural, detested, brutish villain! worse than brutish! Go, sirrah, seek him; I'll apprehend him. Abominable villain! Where is he?

Edm. I do not well know, my lord. If it shall please you to suspend your indignation against my brother till you can derive from him better testimony of his intent, you should run a certain course; where, if you violently proceed against him, mistaking his purpose, it would make a great gap in your own honour, and shake in pieces the heart of his obedience. I dare pawn down my life for him, that he hath writ this to feel my affection to your honour, and to no other pretence of danger.

Glou. Think you so?

Edm. If your honour judge it meet, I will place you where you shall hear us confer of this, and by an articular assurance have your satisfaction; and that without any further delay than this very evening.

Glou. He cannot be such a monster —

[Edm. Nor is not, sure.

Glou. To his father, that so tenderly and entirely loves him. Heaven and earth! Edmund, seek him out; wind me into him, I pray you. Frame the business after your own wisdom. I would unstate myself, to be in a due resolution.

Edm. I will seek him, sir, presently; convey the business as I shall find means, and acquaint you withal.

Glou. These late eclipses in the sun and moon portend no good to us. Though the wisdom of nature can reason it thus and thus, yet nature finds itself scourg'd by the sequent effects. Love cools, friendship falls off, brothers divide: in cities, mutinies; in countries, discord; in palaces, treason; and the bond crack'd 'twixt son and father. This villain of mine comes under the prediction; there's son against father: the King falls from bias of nature; there's father against child. We have seen the best of our time; machinations, hollownness, treachery, and all ruinous disorders, follow us disquietly to our graves. Find out this villain, Edmund; it shall lose thee nothing; do it carefully. And the noble and true-hearted Kent banish'd! his offence, honesty! 'T is strange.

[Exit.

Edm. This is the excellent foppery of the world, that, when we are sick in fortune, — often the surfeits of our own behaviour, — we make guilty of our disasters the sun, the moon, and the stars, as if we were villains on necessity, fools by heavenly compulsion, knaves, thieves, and treachers by spherical predominance, drunkards, liars, and adulterers by an enforce'd obedience of planetary influence, and all that we are evil in, by a divine thrusting on. An admirable evasion of whoremaster man, to lay his goatish disposition on the charge of a star! My father compounded with my mother under the dragon's tail; and my nativity was under Ursa major; so that it follows, I am rough and lecherous. Fut, I should have been that I am, had the maidenliest star in the firmament twinkled on my bas-tardizing. Edgar — and pat he comes like the catastrophe of the old comedy. My cue is villainous melancholy, with a sigh like Tom o' Bedlam. — O, these eclipses do portend these divisions! fa, sol, la, mi.

Enter EDGAR.

Edg. How now, brother Edmund! what serious contemplation are you in?

Edm. I am thinking, brother, of a prediction I read this other day, what should follow these eclipses.

Edg. Do you busy yourself with that?

Edm. I promise you, the effects he writes of succeed unhappily; [as of unnaturalness between the child and the parent; death, dearth, dissolutions of ancient amities; divisions in state, menaces and maledictions against king and nobles; needless diffidences, banishment of friends, dissipation of cohorts, nuptial breaches, and I know not what. 103

Edg. How long have you been a sectary astronomical? 103

Edm. Come, come:] when saw you my father last? 103

Edg. [Why,] the night gone by. 103

Edm. Spake you with him? 103

Edg. Ay, two hours together. 103

Edm. Parted you in good terms? Found you no displeasure in him by word nor countenance? 103

Edg. None at all. 173

Edm. Bethink yourself wherein you may have offended him; and at my entreaty forbear his presence until some little time hath qualified the heat of his displeasure, which at this instant so rageth in him, that with the mischief of your person it would scarcely allay. 173

Edg. Some villain hath done me wrong. 180

Edm. That's my fear. I pray you, have a continent forbearance till the speed of his rage goes slower; and, as I say, retire with me to my lodging, from whence I will fitly bring you to hear my lord speak. Pray ye, go; there's my key. If you do stir abroad, go arm'd. 186

Edg. Arm'd, brother! 186

Edm. Brother, I advise you to the best;
I am no honest man if there be any good meaning toward you. I have told you what I have seen and heard; but faintly, nothing like the image and horror of it. Pray you, away. 192

Edg. Shall I hear from you anon? 192

Edm. I do serve you in this business. 192

[Exit Edg.]

A credulous father, and a brother noble,
Whose nature is so far from doing harms 196
That he suspects none; on whose foolish honesty

My practices ride easy. I see the business.
Let me, if not by birth, have lands by wit:
All with me's meet that I can fashion fit. 200

[Exit.]

SCENE III. [The Duke of Albany's palace.]

Enter GONERIL, and [OSWALD, her] Steward.

Gon. Did my father strike my gentleman for chiding of his Fool? 200

Osw. Ay, madam. 200

Gon. By day and night he wrongs me; every hour 200

He flashes into one gross crime or other
That sets us all at odds. I'll not endure it. 200
His knights grow riotous, and himself upbraids
us 200

On every trifle. When he returns from hunting,
I will not speak with him; say I am sick. 200

If you come slack of former services,
You shall do well; the fault of it I'll answer. 200

Osw. He's coming, madam; I hear him. 200

[Horns within.]

Gon. Put on what weary negligence you
please, 200

You and your fellows; I'd have it come to question. 200

If he distaste it, let him to my sister,

Whose mind and mine, I know, in that are one, 15

[Not to be over-rul'd. Idle old man,
That still would manage those authorities
That he hath given away! Now, by my life,
Old fools are babes again, and must be us'd
With checks as flatteries, when they are seen abus'd.] 20

Remember what I have said. 20

Osw. Well, madam. 20

Gon. And let his knights have colder looks among you; 20

What grows of it, no matter. Advise your fellows so. 20

[I would breed from hence occasions, and I shall, 20

That I may speak.] I'll write straight to my sister, 25

To hold my [very] course. Prepare for dinner.
[Exit.] 25

SCENE IV. [A hall in the same.]

Enter KENT [disguised].

Kent. If but as well I other accents bor-
row, 25

That can my speech defuse, my good intent
May carry through itself to that full issue 25

For which I raz'd my likeness. Now, banish'd
Kent, 25

If thou canst serve where thou dost stand condemn'd, 30

So may it come, thy master, whom thou lov'st,
Shall find thee full of labours. 30

Horns within. Enter LEAR, [KNIGHTS] and Attendants. 30

Lear. Let me not stay a jot for dinner; go get it ready. [Exit an attendant.] How now! 35
what art thou? 35

Kent. A man, sir. 35

Lear. What dost thou profess? What wouldst thou with us? 35

Kent. I do profess to be no less than I seem;
to serve him truly that will put me in trust;
to love him that is honest; to converse with him that is wise and says little; to fear judgement; to fight when I cannot choose; and to eat no fish. 35

Lear. What art thou? 35

Kent. A very honest-hearted fellow, and as poor as the King. 35

Lear. If thou be'st as poor for a subject as he's for a king, thou art poor enough. What wouldst thou? 35

Kent. Service. 35

Lear. Who wouldst thou serve? 35

Kent. You. 35

Lear. Dost thou know me, fellow? 35

Kent. No, sir; but you have that in your countenance which I would fain call master. 35

Lear. What's that? 35

Kent. Authority. 35

Lear. What services canst thou do? 35

Kent. I can keep honest counsel, ride, run, mar a curious tale in telling it, and deliver a plain message bluntly. That which ordinary characters judge themselves. 35 men are fit for, I am qualified in; and the best of me is diligence. 55

Lear. How old art thou?

Kent. Not so young, sir, to love a woman for singing, nor so old to dote on her for anything. I have years on my back forty-eight. 42

Lear. Follow me; thou shalt serve me. If I like thee no worse after dinner, I will not part from thee yet. Dinner, ho, dinner! Where's my knave? my Fool? Go you, and call my Fool hither. [Exit an attendant.] 47

Enter Steward [OSWALD].

You, you, sirrah, where's my daughter?

Osw. So please you, — [Exit.]

Lear. What says the fellow there? Call the clotpoll back. [Exit a knight.] Where's my Fool, ho? I think the world's asleep. 52

[Re-enter KNIGHT.]

How now! where's that mongrel?

Knight. He says, my lord, your daughter is not well. 55

Lear. Why came not the slave back to me when I call'd him?

Knight. Sir, he answered me in the roundest manner, he would not.

Lear. He would not! 60

Knight. My lord, I know not what the matter is; but, to my judgement, your Highness is not entertain'd with that ceremonious affection as you were wont. There's a great abatement of kindness appears as well in the general dependants as in the Duke himself also and your daughter. 67

Lear. Ha! say'st thou so?

Knight. I beseech you, pardon me, my lord, if I be mistaken; for my duty cannot be silent when I think your Highness wrong'd. 71

Lear. Thou but rememb'rest me of mine own conception. I have perceived a most faint neglect of late, which I have rather blamed as mine own jealous curiosity than as a very pretence and purpose of unkindness. I will look further into 't. But where's my Fool? I have not seen him this two days. 75

Knight. Since my young lady's going into France, sir, the Fool hath much pined away.

Lear. No more of that; I have noted it well. Go you, and tell my daughter I would speak with her. [Exit an attendant.] Go you, call hither my Fool. [Exit an attendant.] 84

Re-enter Steward [OSWALD].

O, you sir, you, come you hither, sir. Who am I, sir?

Osw. My lady's father.

Lear. "My lady's father"! My lord's knave! You whoreson dog! you slave! you cur! 89

Osw. I am none of these, my lord; I beseech your pardon.

Lear. Do you bandy looks with me, you rascal? [Striking him.]

Osw. I'll not be stricken, my lord. 94

Kent. Nor tripp'd neither, you base foot-ball player. [Tripping up his heels.]

Lear. I thank thee, fellow. Thou serv'st me, and I'll love thee. 98

Kent. Come, sir, arise, away! I'll teach you differences. Away, away! If you will measure your lubber's length again, tarry; but away! go to. Have you wisdom? So. [Pushes Oswald out.]

Lear. Now, my friendly knave, I thank thee. There's earnest of thy service. 104

[Giving Kent money.]

Enter FOOL.

Fool. Let me hire him too; here's my coxcomb. [Offering Kent his cap.]

Lear. How now, my pretty knave! how dost thou?

Fool. Sirrah, you were best take my coxcomb.

[Kent. Why, Fool?] 110

Fool. Why? For taking one's part that's out of favour. Nay, an thou canst not smile as the wind sits, thou'lt catch cold shortly. There, take my coxcomb. Why, this fellow has banish'd two on 's daughters, and did the third a blessing against his will; if thou follow him, thou must needs wear my coxcomb. — How now, nuncle! Would I had two coxcombs and two daughters! 118

Lear. Why, my boy?

Fool. If I gave them all my living, I'd keep my coxcombs myself. There's mine; beg another of thy daughters.

Lear. Take heed, sirrah; the whip. 123

Fool. Truth's a dog must to kennel; he must be whipp'd out, when Lady the brach may stand by the fire and skin.

Lear. A pestilent gall to me! — about truth

Fool. Sirrah, I'll teach thee a speech.

Lear. Do.

Fool. Mark it, nuncle: values is values to know as much as you know. 130

1. Have more than thou showest,

2. Speak less than thou knowest,

3. Lend less than thou owest,

4. Ride more than thou goest, further

5. Learn more than thou trowest, 135

6. Set less than thou throwest;

7. Leave thy drink and thy whore,

8. And keep in-a-door,

9. And thou shalt have more

10. Than two tens to a score. 10 + 10 = 20 = 0 140

Kent. This is nothing, Fool.

Fool. Then 'tis like the breath of an unfee'd lawyer; you gave me nothing for 't. Can you make no use of nothing, nuncle?

Lear. Why, no, boy; nothing can be made out of nothing. 146

Fool. [To Kent.] Prithee, tell him so much the rent of his land comes to. He will not believe a Fool.

Lear. A bitter fool! 150

Fool. Dost thou know the difference, my boy, between a bitter fool and a sweet one?

Lear. No, lad; teach me.

[Fool.] "That lord that counsell'd thee

To give away thy land, 155

Come place him here by me,

Do thou for him stand:

The sweet and bitter fool
 Will presently appear;
 The one in motley here,
 The other found out there."

Lear. Dost thou call me fool, boy?

Fool. All thy other titles thou hast given away; that thou wast born with.

Kent. This is not altogether fool, my lord.

Fool. No, faith, lords and great men will not let me; if I had a monopoly out, they would have part on't. And ladies, too, they will not let me have all the fool to myself; they'll be snatching. Nuncle, give me an egg, and I'll give thee two crowns.

Lear. What two crowns shall they be?

Fool. Why, after I have cut the egg i' the middle, and eat up the meat, the two crowns of the egg. When thou clovest thy crown i' the middle, and gav'st away both parts, thou bor'st thine ass on thy back o'er the dirt. Thou hadst little wit in thy bald crown, when thou gav'st thy golden one away. If I speak like myself in this, let him be whipp'd that first finds it so.

"Fools had ne'er less grace in a year;

For wise men are grown foppish,

And know not how their wits to wear,

Their manners are so apish."

Lear. When were you wont to be so full of songs, sirrah?

Fool. I have used it, nuncle, e'er since thou mad'st thy daughters thy mothers; for when thou gav'st them the rod, and puttest down thine own breeches,

"Then they for sudden joy did weep,

And I for sorrow sung,

That such a king should play bo-peep,

And go the fools among."

Prithee, nuncle, keep a schoolmaster that can teach thy Fool to lie. I would fain learn to lie.

Lear. An you lie, sirrah, we'll have you whipp'd.

Fool. I marvel what kin thou and thy daughters are. They'll have me whipp'd for speaking true, thou'lt have me whipp'd for lying; and sometimes I am whipp'd for holding my peace. I had rather be any kind o' thing than a Fool; and yet I would not be thee, nuncle; thou hast pared thy wit o' both sides, and left nothing i' the middle. Here comes one o' the parings.

Enter GONERIL.

Lear. How now, daughter! what makes that frontlet on? [Methinks] you are too much of late i' the frown.

Fool. Thou wast a pretty fellow when thou hadst no need to care for her frowning; now thou art an O without a figure. I am better than thou art now; I am a Fool, thou art nothing. [To Gon.] Yes, forsooth, I will hold my tongue; so your face bids me, though you say nothing. Mum, mum,

"He that keeps nor crust nor crumb, Wearry of all, shall want some."

[Pointing to Lear.] That's a sheal'd peascod.

Gon. Not only, sir, this your all-licens'd

Fool,

But other of your insolent retinue
 Do hourly carp and quarrel, breaking forth
 In rank and not-to-be-endured riots. Sir,
 I had thought, by making this well known unto you,

To have found a safe redress; but now grow fearful,

By what yourself, too, late have spoke and done,
 That you protect this course, and put it on
 By your allowance; which if you should, the fault

Would not scape censure, nor the redresses sleep,

Which, in the tender of a wholesome weal,
 Might in their working do you that offence,

Which else were shame, that then necessity

Will call discreet proceeding.

Fool. For, you know, nuncle,

"The hedge-sparrow fed the cuckoo so long,
 That it had it head bit off by it young."

So, out went the candle, and we were left dark-ling.

Lear. Are you our daughter?

Gon. [Come, sir,]

I would you would make use of your good wisdom,

Whereof I know you are fraught, and put away
 These dispositions, which of late transport you
 From what you rightly are.

Fool. May not an ass know when the cart draws the horse? "Whoop, Jug! I love thee."

Lear. Doth any here know me? This is not Lear.

Doth Lear walk thus? speak thus? Where are his eyes?

Either his notion weakens, his discernings
 Are lethargied — Ha! waking? 'Tis not so.

Who is it that can tell me who I am?

Fool. Lear's shadow.

[Lear. I would learn that; for, by the marks of sovereignty, knowledge, and reason, I should be false persuaded I had daughters.

Fool. Which they will make an obedient father.]

Lear. Your name, fair gentlewoman?

Gon. This admiration, sir, is much o' the savour

Of other your new pranks. I do beseech you
 To understand my purposes aright.

As you are old and reverend, you should be wise.

Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires;

Men so disorder'd, so debosh'd and bold,
 That this our court, infected with their man-ners,

Shows like a riotous inn. Epicurism and lust
 Makes it more like a tavern or a brothel

Than a grac'd palace. The shame itself doth speak

For instant remedy. Be then desir'd
 By her, that else will take the thing she begs,

A little to disquantity your train;

And the remainders, that shall still depend,
 To be such men as may besort your age,

Which know themselves and you.

Lear. Darkness and devils!

one of the great scenes of Shakespeare's art

Saddle my horses; call my train together!
 Degenerate bastard! I'll not trouble thee; 275
 Yet have I left a daughter.

Gon. You strike my people; and your disorder'd rabble
 Make servants of their betters.

Enter ALBANY.

Lear. Woe, that too late repents! — [O, sir, are you come?]
 Is it your will? Speak, sir. — Prepare my horses. — 280

Ingratitude, thou marble-hearted fiend,
 More hideous when thou show'st thee in a child
 Than the sea-monster!

Alb. Pray, sir, be patient.
Lear. [To Gon.] Detested kite! thou liest.
 My train are men of choice and rarest parts, 285
 That all particulars of duty know,
 And in the most exact regard support
 The worships of their name. O most small fault,

How ugly didst thou in Cordelia show!
 Which, like an engine, wrench'd my frame of nature 290
 From the fix'd place; drew from my heart all love,

And added to the gall. O Lear, Lear, Lear!
 Beat at this gate, that let thy folly in,
 [Striking his head.]
 And thy dear judgement out! Go, go, my people.

Alb. My lord, I am guiltless as I am ignorant 295
 Of what hath moved you.

Lear. It may be so, my lord.
 Hear, Nature! hear, dear goddess, hear!
 Suspend thy purpose, if thou didst intend
 To make this creature fruitful!
 Into her womb convey sterility! 300
 Dry up in her the organs of increase,
 And from her derogate body never spring
 A babe to honour her! If she must teem,
 Create her child of spleen, that it may live
 And be a thwart disnatur'd torment to her! 305
 Let it stamp wrinkles in her brow of youth,
 With cadent tears fret channels in her cheeks,
 Turn all her mother's pains and benefits
 To laughter and contempt, that she may feel
 How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is 310
 To have a thankless child! — Away, away!

[Exit.]
Alb. Now, gods that we adore, whereof comes this?

Gon. Never afflict yourself to know more of it;
 But let his disposition have that scope
 As dotage gives it. 315

Re-enter LEAR.

Lear. What, fifty of my followers at a clap!
 Within a fortnight!

Alb. What's the matter, sir?
Lear. I'll tell thee. [To Gon.] Life and death! I am asham'd
 That thou hast power to shake my manhood
 thus;

That these hot tears, which break from me
 perforce, 320
 Should make thee worth them. Blasts and fogs upon thee!

The untented woundings of a father's curse
 Pierce every sense about thee! Old fond eyes,
 Beweep this cause again, I'll pluck ye out,
 And cast you, with the waters that you loose,
 To temper clay. Ha! [is it come to this?] 325
 Let it be so: I have another daughter,
 Who, I am sure, is kind and comfortable.
 When she shall hear this of thee, with her nails
 She'll flay thy wolfish visage. Thou shalt find
 That I'll resume the shape which thou dost think 331

I have cast off for ever. [Thou shalt, I warrant thee.]

[Exeunt Lear, Kent, and attendants].

Gon. Do you mark that?

Alb. I cannot be so partial, Goneril,
 To the great love I bear you, — 335

Gon. Pray you, content. — What, Oswald, ho!

[To the Fool.] You, sir, more knave than fool,
 after your master.

Fool. Nuncle Lear, nuncle Lear, tarry! Take the Fool with thee.

A fox, when one has caught her, 340

And such a daughter,

Should sure to the slaughter,

If my cap would buy a halter.

So the Fool follows after. [Exit.]

Gon. This man hath had good counsel, — a hundred knights! 345

'Tis politic and safe to let him keep
 At point a hundred knights; yes, that, on every dream,

Each buzz, each fancy, each complaint, dislike,
 He may enguard his dotage with their powers,
 And hold our lives in mercy. Oswald, I say! 350

Alb. Well, you may fear too far.

Gon. Safer than trust too far.

Let me still take away the harms I fear,
 Not fear still to be taken. I know his heart.

What he hath utter'd I have writ my sister.

If she sustain him and his hundred knights, 355

When I have show'd the unfitness, —

Re-enter Steward [OSWALD].

How now, Oswald!
 What, have you writ that letter to my sister?

Osw. Ay, madam.

Gon. Take you some company, and away to horse.

Inform her full of my particular fear; 360

And thereto add such reasons of your own

As may compact it more. Get you gone;

And hasten your return. [Exit Oswald.] No, no, my lord,

This milky gentleness and course of yours

Though I condemn not, yet, under pardon, 365

You are much more at task for want of wisdom

Than prais'd for harmful mildness.

Alb. How far your eyes may pierce I cannot tell.

Striving to better, oft we mar what's well.

Gon. Nay, then—
Alb. Well, well; the event.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V. [Court before the same.]

Enter LEAR, KENT, and FOOL.

Lear. Go you before to Gloucester with these letters. Acquaint my daughter no further with anything you know than comes from her demand out of the letter. If your diligence be not speedy, I shall be there afore you.

Kent. I will not sleep, my lord, till I have delivered your letter. [Exit.]

Fool. If a man's brains were in 's heels, were 't not in danger of kibes?

Lear. Ay, boy.

Fool. Then, I prithee, be merry; thy wit shall not go slipshod.

Lear. Ha, ha, ha!

Fool. Shalt see thy other daughter will use thee kindly; for though she 's as like this as a crab 's like an apple, yet I can tell what I can tell.

Lear. What canst tell, boy?

Fool. She will taste as like this as a crab does to a crab. Thou canst tell why one's nose stands i' the middle on 's face?

Lear. No.

Fool. Why, to keep one's eyes of either side 's nose, that what a man cannot smell out, he may spy into.

Lear. I did her wrong—

Fool. Canst tell how an oyster makes his shell?

Lear. No.

Fool. Nor I neither; but I can tell why a snail has a house.

Lear. Why?

Fool. Why, to put 's head in; not to give it away to his daughters, and leave his horns without a case.

Lear. I will forget my nature. So kind a father! Be my horses ready?

Fool. Thy asses are gone about 'em. The reason why the seven stars are no more than seven is a pretty reason.

Lear. Because they are not eight?

Fool. Yes, indeed. Thou wouldst make a good Fool.

Lear. To take 't again perforce! Monster in gratitude!

Fool. If thou wert my Fool, nuncle, I'd have thee beaten for being old before thy time.

Lear. How 's that?

Fool. Thou shouldst not have been old till thou hadst been wise.

Lear. O, let me not be mad, not mad, sweet heaven!

Keep me in temper; I would not be mad!

[Enter GENTLEMAN.]

How now! are the horses ready?

Gent. Ready, my lord.

Lear. Come, boy.

Fool. She that 's a maid now, and laughs at my departure,

Shall not be a maid long, unless things be cut shorter.

[Exeunt.]

ACT II

SCENE I. [The Earl of Gloucester's castle.]

Enter BASTARD [EDMUND] and CURAN, severally.

Edm. Save thee, Curan.

Cur. And you, sir. I have been with your father, and given him notice that the Duke of Cornwall and Regan his duchess will be here with him this night.

Edm. How comes that?

Cur. Nay, I know not. You have heard of the news abroad; I mean the whisper'd ones, for they are yet but ear-kissing arguments?

Edm. Not I. Pray you, what are they?

Cur. Have you heard of no likely wars toward, 'twixt the Dukes of Cornwall and Albany?

Edm. Not a word.

Cur. You may do, then, in time. Fare you well, sir.

Edm. The Duke be here to-night? The better! best!

This weaves itself perforce into my business. My father hath set guard to take my brother; And I have one thing, of a queasy question, Which I must act. Briefness and fortune, work!

Enter EDGAR.

Brother, a word; descend. Brother, I say! My father watches; O sir, fly this place; Intelligence is given where you are hid; You have now the good advantage of the night. Have you not spoken 'gainst the Duke of Cornwall?

He 's coming hither, now, i' the night, i' the haste,

And Regan with him. Have you nothing said Upon his party 'gainst the Duke of Albany? Advise yourself.

Edg.

I am sure on 't, not a word.

Edm. I hear my father coming. Pardon me,

In cunning I must draw my sword upon you. Draw; seem to defend yourself; now quit you well.

Yield! Come before my father. Light, ho, here!

Fly, brother.—Torches, torches!—So, farewell.

Some blood drawn on me would beget opinion

[Exit Edgar.]

[Wounds his arm.]

Of my more fierce endeavour. I have seen drunkards

Do more than this in sport.—Father, father!—Stop, stop!—No help?

Enter GLOUCESTER, and Servants with torches.

Glou. Now, Edmund, where 's the villain?

Edm. Here stood he in the dark, his sharp sword out,

Mumbling of wicked charms, conjuring the moon

To stand auspicious mistress,— Glou. But where is he?

Edm. Look, sir, I bleed.

Glou. Where is the villain, Edmund?

Edm. Fled this way, sir. When by no means he could —

Glou. Pursue him, ho! Go after. [Exeunt some Servants.] By no means what? ⁴⁵

Edm. Persuade me to the murder of your lordship;

But that I told him, the revenging gods
'Gainst parricides did all the thunder bend;
Spoke, with how manifold and strong a bond
The child was bound to the father; sir, in fine, ⁵⁰

Seeing how loathly opposite I stood
To his unnatural purpose, in fell motion,
With his prepared sword, he charges home
My unprovided body, latch'd mine arm;
And when he saw my best alarm'd spirits, ⁵⁵
Bold in the quarrel's right, rous'd to the encounter,

Or whether gasted by the noise I made,
Full suddenly he fled.

Glou. Let him fly far.
Not in this land shall he remain uncaught;
And found, — dispatch. The noble Duke my master, ⁶⁰

My worthy arch and patron, comes to-night.
By his authority I will proclaim it,
That he which finds him shall deserve our thanks,

Bringing the murderous coward to the stake;
He that conceals him, death. ⁶⁵

Edm. When I dissuaded him from his intent,

And found him pight to do it, with curst speech
I threaten'd to discover him; he replied,
"Thou unpossessing bastard! dost thou think,
If I would stand against thee, would the re-
posal ⁷⁰

Of any trust, virtue, or worth in thee Make thy words faith'd? No! what I should deny, —

As this I would; ay, though thou didst produce
My very character, — I'd turn it all
To thy suggestion, plot, and damned practice;
And thou must make a dillard of the world ⁷⁵
If they not thought the profits of my death
Were very pregnant and potential spurs
To make thee seek it."

Glou. O strange and fast'ned villain!
Would he deny his letter? [I never got him.] ⁸⁰

[Tucket within.]
Hark, the Duke's trumpets! I know not why he comes.

All ports I'll bar, the villain shall not scape;
The Duke must grant me that. Besides, his picture

I will send far and near, that all the kingdom
May have due note of him; and of my land, ⁸⁵
Loyal and natural boy, I'll work the means
To make thee capable.

Enter CORNWALL, REGAN, and Attendants.

Corn. How now, my noble friend! since I came hither,
Which I can call but now, I have heard strange news.

Reg. If it be true, all vengeance comes too short ⁹⁰

Which can pursue the offender. How dost, my lord?

Glou. O, madam, my old heart is crack'd,
it's crack'd!

Reg. What, did my father's godson seek your life?

He whom my father nam'd? your Edgar?

Glou. O, lady, lady, shame would have it hid! ⁹⁵

Reg. Was he not companion with the riotous knights

That tended upon my father?

Glou. I know not, madam. 'Tis too bad, too bad.

Edm. Yes, madam, he was of that consort.

Reg. No marvel, then, though he were ill affected: ¹⁰⁰

'Tis they have put him on the old man's death,
To have the expense and waste of his revenues.

I have this present evening from my sister
Been well inform'd of them; and with such cautions,

That if they come to sojourn at my house, ¹⁰⁵
I'll not be there.

Corn. Nor I, assure thee, Regan.

Edmund, I hear that you have shown your
father

A child-like office.

Edm. 'T was my duty, sir.

Glou. He did bewray his practice; and re-ceiv'd

This hurt you see, striving to apprehend him.

Corn. Is he pursued?

Glou. Ay, my good lord. ¹¹⁰

Corn. If he be taken, he shall never more
Be fear'd of doing harm. Make your own purpose,

How in my strength you please. For you, Edmund,

Whose virtue and obedience doth this instant
So much commend itself, you shall be ours. ¹¹⁵
Natures of such deep trust we shall much need;
You we first seize on.

Edm. I shall serve you, sir,
Truly, however else.

Glou. For him I thank your Grace.

Corn. You know not why we came to visit you, — ¹²⁰

Reg. Thus out of season, threading darkey'd night?

Occasions, noble Gloucester, of some poise,
Wherein we must have use of your advice.
Our father he hath writ, so hath our sister,
Of differences, which I best thought it fit ¹²⁵
To answer from our home; the several messengers

From hence attend dispatch. Our good old friend,

Lay comforts to your bosom; and bestow
Your needful counsel to our businesses,
Which craves the instant use.

Glou. I serve you, madam.
Your Graces are right welcome. ¹³¹

[Exeunt. Flourish.]

SCENE II. [Before Gloucester's castle.]

Enter KENT and Steward [OSWALD], severally.
Osw. Good dawning to thee, friend. Art of this house?

Kent. Ay.

Osw. Where may we set our horses?

Kent. I' the mire.

Osw. Prithce, if thou lov'st me, tell me.

Kent. I love thee not.

Osw. Why, then, I care not for thee.

Kent. If I had thee in Lipsbury pinfold, I would make thee care for me.

Osw. Why dost thou use me thus? I know thee not.

Kent. Fellow, I know thee.

Osw. What dost thou know me for?

Kent. A knave; a rascal; an eater of broken meats; a base, proud, shallow, beggarly, three-suited, hundred-pound, filthy, worsted-stocking knave; a lily-livered, action-taking, whoreson, glass-gazing, superserviceable, fimalgic rogue; one-trunk-inheriting slave; one that wouldst be a bawd, in way of good service, and art nothing but the composition of a knave; beggar, coward, pandar, and the son and heir of a mongrel bitch; one whom I will beat into clamorous whining, if thou deni'st the least syllable of thy addition.

Osw. Why, what a monstrous fellow art thou, thus to rail on one that is neither known of thee nor knows thee!

Kent. What a brazen-fac'd varlet art thou, to deny thou knowest me! Is it two days since I tripp'd up thy heels, and beat thee before the King? Draw, you rogue; for, though it be night, yet the moon shines. I'll make a sop o' the moonshine of you, you whoreson cullionly barber-monger! Draw! [Drawing his sword.]

Osw. Away! I have nothing to do with thee.

Kent. Draw, you rascal! You come with letters against the King; and take Vanity the puppet's part against the royalty of her father. Draw, you rogue, or I'll so carbonado your shanks, — draw, you rascal! Come your ways.

Osw. Help, ho! murder! help!

Kent. Strike, you slave! Stand, rogue, stand! You neat slave, strike.

Osw. Help, ho! murder! murder!

Enter Bastard [EDMUND] with his rapier drawn, CORNWALL, REGAN, GLOUCESTER, and Servants.

Edm. How now! What's the matter? Part.

Kent. With you, goodman boy, if you please. Come, I'll flesh ye; come on, young master.

Glou. Weapons! arms! What's the matter here?

Corn. Keep peace, upon your lives!

He dies that strikes again. What is the matter?

Reg. The messengers from our sister and the King.

Corn. What is your difference? Speak.

Osw. I am scarce in breath, my lord.

Kent. No marvel, you have so bestir'd your valour. You cowardly rascal, Nature disclaims in thee. A tailor made thee.

Corn. Thou art a strange fellow. A tailor make a man?

Kent. A tailor, sir. A stone-cutter or a painter could not have made him so ill, though they had been but two years o' the trade.

Corn. Speak yet, how grew your quarrel?

Osw. This ancient ruffian, sir, whose life I have spar'd at suit of his grey beard, —

Kent. Thou whoreson zed! thou unnecessary letter! My lord, if you will give me leave, I will tread this unbolted villain into mortar, and daub the wall of a jakes with him. Spare my grey beard, you wagtail?

Corn. Peace, sirrah!

You beastly knave, know you no reverence?

Kent. Yes, sir; but anger hath a privilege.

Corn. Why art thou angry?

Kent. That such a slave as this should wear a sword,

Who wears no honesty. Such smiling rogues as these,

Like rats, oft bite the holy cords a-twain

Which are too intrinsic to unloose; smooth every passion

That in the natures of their lords rebel;
 Bring oil to fire, snow to their colder moods;
 Renege, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks
 With every gale and vary of their masters,

Knowing nought, like dogs, but following.

A plague upon your epileptic visage!

Smile you my speeches, as I were a fool?

Goose, if I had you upon Sarum Plain,

I'd drive ye cackling home to Camelot.

Corn. What, art thou mad, old fellow?

Glou. How fell you out? Say that.

Kent. No contraries hold more antipathy Than I and such a knave.

Corn. Why dost thou call him knave? What is his fault?

Kent. His countenance likes me not.

Corn. No more, perchance, does mine, nor his, nor hers.

Kent. Sir, 't is my occupation to be plain; I have seen better faces in my time

Than stands on any shoulder that I see Before me at this instant.

Corn. This is some fellow Who, having been prais'd for bluntness, doth affect

A saucy roughness, and constrains the garb Quite from his nature. He cannot flatter, he;

An honest mind and plain, he must speak truth!

An they will take it, so; if not, he's plain. These kind of knaves I know, which in this plainness

Harbour more craft and more corrupter ends Than twenty silly ducking observants

That stretch their duties nicely.

Kent. Sir, in good sooth, in sincere verity, Under the allowance of your great aspect, Whose influence, like the wreath of radiant fire On flickering Phœbus' front, —

Corn. What mean'st by this?

Kent. To go out of my dialect, which you discommend so much. I know, sir, I am no flatterer. He that beguill'd you in a plain accent was a plain knave; which for my part I will not be, though I should win your displeasure to entreat me to 't.

Corn. What was the offence you gave him?

Osw. I never gave him any.

It pleas'd the King his master very late To strike at me, upon his misconstruction; When he, compact, and flattering his displeasure,

Tripp'd me behind; being down, insulted, rail'd,

And put upon him such a deal of man That 't worthied him, got praises of the King For him attempting who was self-subdued; And, in the fleshment of this dread exploit, Drew on me here again.

Kent. None of these rogues and cowards But Ajax is their fool.

Corn. Fetch forth the stocks! You stubborn ancient knave, you reverend braggart, We'll teach you—

Kent. Sir, I am too old to learn. Call not your stocks for me; I serve the King,

On whose employment I was sent to you. You shall do small respects, show too bold malice

Against the grace and person of my master, Stocking his messenger.

Corn. Fetch forth the stocks! As I have life and honour, There shall he sit till noon.

Reg. Till noon! Till night, my lord; and all night too.

Kent. Why, madam, if I were your father's dog,

You should not use me so. Reg. Sir, being his knave, I will.

Corn. This is a fellow of the self-same colour Our sister speaks of. Come, bring away the stocks!

Glou. Let me beseech your Grace not to do so. [His fault is much, and the good King his master

Will check him for 't. Your purpos'd low correction

Is such as basest and contemn'd'st wretches For pilferings and most common trespasses Are punish'd with.] The King must take it ill That he's so slightly valued in his messenger, Should have him thus restrained.

Corn. I'll answer that. Reg. My sister may receive it much more worse

To have her gentleman abus'd, assaulted, [For following her affairs. Put in his legs.]

[Kent is put in the stocks.] Come, my good lord, away.

[Exeunt [all but Gloucester and Kent].]

Glou. I am sorry for thee, friend; 't is the Duke's pleasure,

Whose disposition, all the world well knows, Will not be rubb'd nor stopp'd. I'll entreat for thee.

Kent. Pray, do not, sir. I have watch'd and travell'd hard;

Some time I shall sleep out, the rest I'll whistle.

A good man's fortune may grow out at heels. Give you good morrow!

Glou. The Duke's to blame in this; 't will be ill taken. [Exit.]

Kent. Good King, that must approve the common saw,

Thou out of heaven's benediction com'st To the warm sun!

Approach, thou beacon to this under globe, That by thy comfortable beams I may Peruse this letter! Nothing almost sees miracles But misery. I know 't is from Cordelia,

Who hath most fortunately been inform'd Of my obscured course; [reads] "—and shall find time From this enormous state—seeking to give Losses their remedies."—All weary and o'er-watch'd,

Take vantage, heavy eyes, not to behold This shameful lodging.

Fortune, good-night! Smile once more; turn thy wheel!

[SCENE III. The same.]

Enter EDGAR.

Edg. I heard myself proclaim'd; And by the happy hollow of a tree

Escap'd the hunt. No port is free; no place That guard and most unusual vigilance

Does not attend my taking. Whiles I may scape

I will preserve myself, and am bethought To take the basest and most poorest shape

That ever penury, in contempt of man, Brought near to beast. My face I'll grime with filth, Blanket my loins, elf all my hairs in knots, And with presented nakedness out-face

The winds and persecutions of the sky. The country gives me proof and precedent

Of Bedlam beggars, who, with roaring voices, Strike in their numb'd and mortified arms

Pins, wooden pricks, nails, sprigs of rosemary; And with this horrible object, from low farms,

Poor pelling villages, sheep-cotes, and mills, Sometimes with lunatic bans, sometimes with prayers, Enforce their charity. Poor Turlygod! poor Tom!

That's something yet. Edgar I nothing am. [Exit.]

[SCENE IV. The same.]

Enter LEAR, FOOL, and GENTLEMAN. [KENT in the stocks.]

Lear. 'T is strange that they should so depart from home,

And not send back my messengers. Gent. As I learn'd,

The night before there was no purpose in them Of this remove.

Lear must be disguised

Kent. Hail to thee, noble master!

Lear. Ha!

in stocks. Mak'st thou this shame thy pastime?

Kent. No, my lord.

Fool. Ha, ha! he wears cruel garters. Horses are tied by the heads, dogs and bears by the neck, monkeys by the loins, and men by the legs. When a man's over-lusty at legs, then he wears wooden nether-stocks.

Lear. What's he that hath so much thy place mistook

To set thee here?

Kent. It is both he and she;

Your son and daughter.

Lear. No.

Kent. Yes.

Lear. No, I say.

Kent. I say, yea.

[Lear. No, no, they would not.

Kent. Yes, they have.]

Lear. By Jupiter, I swear, no.

Kent. By Juno, I swear, ay.

Lear. They durst not do 't;

They could not, would not do 't. 'Tis worse than murder,

To do upon respect such violent outrage.

Resolve me, with all modest haste, which way Thou mightst deserve, or they impose, this usage,

Coming from us.

Kent. My lord, when at their home I did commend your Highness' letters to them, Ere I was risen from the place that show'd My duty kneeling, came there a reeking post, Stew'd in his haste, half breathless, panting forth

From Goneril his mistress salutations; Deliver'd letters, spite of intermission, Which presently they read. On those contents, They summon'd up their meiny, straight took horse;

Commanded me to follow, and attend The leisure of their answer; gave me cold looks:

And meeting here the other messenger, Whose welcome, I perceiv'd, had poison'd mine, —

Being the very fellow which of late Display'd so saucily against your Highness, — Having more man than wit about me, drew. He rais'd the house with loud and coward cries. Your son and daughter found this trespass worth

The shame which here it suffers.

Fool. Winter's not gone yet, if the wild geese fly that way.

"Fathers that wear rags

Do make their children blind;

But fathers that bear bags

Shall see their children kind.

Fortune, that arrant whore,

Ne'er turns the key to the poor."

But, for all this, thou shalt have as many do-lours for thy daughters as thou canst tell in a year.

Lear. O, how this mother swells up toward my heart!

a perhaps, mother in vinegar

Hysterica passio, down, thou climbing sorrow, Thy element 's below! — Where is this daughter?

Kent. With the Earl, sir, here within.

Lear. Follow me not; Stay here.

Gent. Made you no more offence but what you speak of?

Kent. None.

How chance the King comes with so small a number?

Fool. An thou hadst been set i' the stocks for that question, thou 'dst well deserv'd it.

Kent. Why, Fool?

Fool. We 'll set thee to school to an ant, to teach thee there's no labouring i' the winter. All that follow their noses are led by their eyes but blind men; and there's not a nose among twenty but can smell him that's stinking. Let go thy hold when a great wheel runs down a hill, lest it break thy neck with following; but the great one that goes upward, let him draw thee after. When a wise man gives thee better counsel, give me mine again; I would have none but knaves follow it, since a fool gives it.

"That sir which serves and seeks for gain,

And follows but for form,

Will pack when it begins to rain,

And leave thee in the storm.

But I will tarry; the Fool will stay,

And let the wise man fly.

The knave turns fool that runs away;

The Fool no knave, perdy."

Re-enter LEAR and GLOUCESTER.

Kent. Where learn'd you this, Fool?

Fool. Not i' the stocks, fool.

Lear. Deny to speak with me? They are sick? They are weary?

They have travell'd all the night? Mere fetches;

The images of revolt and flying off.

Fetch me a better answer.

Glou. My dear lord,

You know the fiery quality of the Duke;

How unremovable and fix'd he is

In his own course.

Lear. Vengeance! plague! death! confusion!

"Fiery"? What "quality"? Why, Gloucester, Gloucester,

I'd speak with the Duke of Cornwall and his wife.

Glou. Well, my good lord, I have inform'd them so.

Lear. "Inform'd" them! Dost thou understand me, man?

Glou. Ay, my good lord.

Lear. The King would speak with Cornwall; the dear father

Would with his daughter speak, commands her service.

Are they "inform'd" of this? My breath and blood!

"Fiery"? The fiery duke? Tell the hot duke that —

No, but not yet; may be he is not well.
Infirmity doth still neglect all office
Whereto our health is bound; we are not ourselves

When nature, being oppress'd, commands the
mind

To suffer with the body. I'll forbear; 110
And am fallen out with my more headier will,
To take the indispos'd and sickly fit

For the sound man.—Death on my state!
wherefore [Looking on Kent.]

Should he sit here? This act persuades me
That this remotion of the Duke and her 115

Is practice only. Give me my servant forth.
Go tell the Duke and 's wife I'd speak with
them,

Now, presently. Bid them come forth and hear
me,

Or at their chamber-door I'll beat the drum
Till it cry sleep to death. 120

Glou. I would have all well betwixt you.
[Exit.]

Lear. O me, my heart, my rising heart! But,
down!

Fool. Cry to it, nuncle, as the cockney did to the eels when she put 'em i' the paste alive; she knapp'd 'em o' the coxcombs with a stick, and cried, "Down, wantons, down!"

'T was her brother that, in pure kindness to his horse, buttered his hay. 128

Enter CORNWALL, REGAN, GLOUCESTER, and Servants.

Lear. Good morrow to you both.
Corn. Hail to your Grace!

[Kent is set at liberty.]
Reg. I am glad to see your Highness.

Lear. Regan, I think you are; I know what reason

I have to think so. If thou shouldst not be glad, 132

I would divorce me from thy mother's tomb, Sepulchring an adulteress. [To Kent.] O, are you free?

Some other time for that. Beloved Regan,
Thy sister 's naught. y O Regan, she hath tied Sharp-tooth'd unkindness, like a vulture, here.

[Points to his heart.]
I can scarce speak to thee; thou 'lt not believe
With how depriv'd a quality—O Regan! 138

Reg. I pray you, sir, take patience. I have hope

You less know how to value her desert
Than she to scant her duty.

Lear. Say, how is that?
Reg. I cannot think my sister in the least
Would fail her obligation. If, sir, perchance
She have restrain'd the riots of your followers,
'T is on such ground, and to such wholesome end, 146

As clears her from all blame.
Lear. My curses on her!

Reg. O, sir, you are old;
Nature in you stands on the very verge
Of her confine. You should be rul'd and led 150
By some discretion that discerns your state
Better than you yourself. Therefore, I pray you,

That to our sister you do make return;
Say you have wrong'd her, sir.

Lear. Ask her forgiveness?
Do you but mark how this becomes the house:
"Dear daughter, I confess that I am old; 156

[Kneeling.]
Age is unnecessary. On my knees I beg That you'll vouchsafe me raiment, bed, and food."

Reg. Good sir, no more; these are unsightly tricks.

Return you to my sister.
Lear. [Rising.] Never, Regan: 160

She hath abated me of half my train;
Look'd black upon me; struck me with her
tongue,

Most serpent-like, upon the very heart.
All the stor'd vengeance of heaven fall 164

On her ingrateful top! Strike her young bones,
You taking airs, with lameness!

Corn. Fie, sir, fie!
Lear. You nimble lightnings, dart your blinding flames

Into her scornful eyes! Infect her beauty,
You fen-suck'd fogs, drawn by the powerful
sun,

To fall and blast her pride! 170
Reg. O the blest gods! so will you wish on
me,

When the rash mood is on.
Lear. No, Regan, thou shalt never have my curse.

Thy tender-hefted nature shall not give Thee o'er to harshness. Her eyes are fierce;
but thine 176

Do comfort and not burn. 'T is not in thee
To grudge my pleasures, to cut off my train,
To bandy hasty words, to scant my sizes,
And in conclusion to oppose the bolt
Against my coming in. Thou better know'st 180

The offices of nature, bond of childhood,
Effects of courtesy, dues of gratitude.

Thy half o' the kingdom hast thou not forgot,
Wherein I thee endow'd.

Reg. Good sir, to the purpose.
[Tucket within.]

Lear. Who put my man i' the stocks?
Enter Steward [OSWALD].

Corn. What trumpet 's that?
Reg. I know't; my sister's. This approves her letter, 186

That she would soon be here. [To Oswald.] Is your lady come?

Lear. This is a slave whose easy-borrowed pride

Dwells in the fickle grace of her he follows.
Out, varlet, from my sight!

Corn. What means your Grace? 190
Enter GONERIL.

Lear. Who stock'd my servant? Regan, I have good hope

Thou didst not know on't. Who comes here?
O heavens,

If you do love old men, if your sweet sway
Allow obedience, if you yourselves are old,

Make it your cause; send down, and take my part!

[To Gon.] Art not asham'd to look upon this beard?

O Regan, will you take her by the hand?

Gon. Why not by the hand, sir? How have
I offended?

All's not offence that indiscretion finds

And dotage terms so.

Lear. O sides, you are too tough;
Will you yet hold? How came my man i' the stocks?

Corn. I set him there, sir; but his own disorders

Deserv'd much less advancement.

Lear. You! did you?

Reg. I pray you, father, being weak, seem so.
If, till the expiration of your month,

You will return and sojourn with my sister,
Dismissing half your train, come then to me.

I am now from home, and out of that provision
Which shall be needful for your entertainment.

Lear. Return to her, and fifty men dismiss'd!

No, rather I abjure all roofs, and choose

To wage against the enmity o' the air;
To be a comrade with the wolf and owl, —

Necessity's sharp pinch. Return with her?
Why, the hot-blooded France, that dowerless

took

Our youngest born, I could as well be brought To kneel his throne, and, squire-like, pension

beg

To keep base life afoot. Return with her?
Persuade me rather to be slave and sumpter

To this detested groom. [Pointing at Oswald.]
Gon. At your choice, sir.

Lear. I prithee, daughter, do not make me
mad;

I will not trouble thee, my child; farewell!
We'll no more meet, no more see one another.

But yet thou art my flesh, my blood, my
daughter;

Or rather a disease that 's in my flesh,

Which I must needs call mine; thou art a boil,
A plague-sore, an embossed carbuncle,

In my corrupted blood. But I'll not chide
thee;

Let shame come when it will, I do not call it.
I do not bid the thunder-bearer shoot,

Nor tell tales of thee to high-judging Jove.
Mend when thou canst; be better at thy leisure.

I can be patient; I can stay with Regan,
I and my hundred knights.

Reg. Not altogether so;
I look'd not for you yet, nor am provided

For your fit welcome. Give ear, sir, to my sister;

For those that mingle reason with your passion
Must be content to think you old, and so —

But she knows what she does.
Lear. Is this well spoken?

Reg. I dare avouch it, sir. What, fifty followers!

Is it not well? What should you need of more?
Yea, or so many, sith that both charge and danger.

Speak 'gainst so great a number? How, in one house,

Should many people, under two commands,
Hold amity? 'T is hard; almost impossible.

Gon. Why might not you, my lord, receive attendance

From those that she calls servants or from mine?

Reg. Why not, my lord? If then they chanc'd to slack ye,

We could control them. If you will come too
me, —

For now I spy a danger — I entreat you
To bring but five and twenty; to no more

Will I give place or notice.

Lear. I gave you all.
Reg. And in good time you gave it.

Lear. Made you my guardians, my deposi-taries;

But kept a reservation to be followed
With such a number. What, must I come too

you

With five and twenty, Regan? Said you so?
Reg. And speak 't again, my lord; no more
with me.

Lear. Those wicked creatures yet do look well-favour'd

When others are more wicked; not being the worst

Stands in some rank of praise. [To Gon.] I'll go with thee.

Thy fifty yet doth double five and twenty,
And thou art twice her love.

Gon. Hear me, my lord:
What need you five and twenty, ten, or five,

To follow in a house where twice so many
Have a command to tend you?

Reg. What need one?
Lear. O, reason not the need! Our basest

beggars

Are in the poorest thing superfluous.
Allow not nature more than nature needs,

Man's life is cheap as beast's. Thou art a
lady;

If only to go warm were gorgeous,
Why, nature needs not what thou gorgeous wear'st,

Which scarcely keeps thee warm. But, for true need, —

You heavens, give me that patience, patience I need!

You see me here, you gods, a poor old man,
As full of grief as age; wretched in both!

If it be you that stir these daughters' hearts
Against their father, fool me not so much

To bear it tamely; touch me with noble anger,
And let not women's weapons, water-drops,

Stain my man's cheeks! No, you unnatural hags,

I will have such revenges on you both
That all the world shall — I will do such

things, —

What they are, yet I know not; but they shall
be

The terrors of the earth. You think I'll weep:

No, I'll not weep.

I have full cause of weeping; but this heart
 Shall break into a hundred thousand flaws,
 Or ere I'll weep. O, Fool! I shall go mad!
[Exeunt Lear, Gloucester, Kent, and Fool.]

Corn. Let us withdraw; 't will be a storm. ²⁹⁰
Reg. This house is little; the old man and 's
 people

Cannot be well bestow'd.
Gon. 'T is his own blame; hath put himself
 from rest,
 And must needs taste his folly.

Reg. For his particular, I'll receive him gladly, ²⁹⁵
 But not one follower.

Gon. So am I purpos'd.
 Where is my Lord of Gloucester?

Re-enter GLOUCESTER.

Corn. Followed the old man forth. He is re-
 turn'd.

Glow. The King is in high rage.

Corn. Whither is he going?

Glow. He calls to horse; but will I know not whither. ³⁰⁰

Corn. 'T is best to give him way; he leads himself.

Gon. My lord, entreat him by no means to stay.

Glow. Alack, the night comes on, and the high winds

Do sorely ruffle; for many miles about
 There's scarce a bush.

Reg. O, sir, to wilful men,
 The injuries that they themselves procure ³⁰⁵ Must be their schoolmasters. Shut up your doors.

He is attended with a desperate train;
 And what they may incense him to, being apt

To have his ear abus'd, wisdom bids fear. ³¹⁰

Corn. Shut up your doors, my lord; 't is a wild night:

My Regan counsels well. Come out o' the storm.
[Exeunt.]

ACT III (Glinax)

SCENE I. [The open country near Gloucester's castle.]

Storm still. Enter KENT and a GENTLEMAN, severally.

Kent. Who's there, besides foul weather?
Gent. One minded like the weather, most unquietly.

Kent. I know you. Where's the King?

Gent. Contending with the fretful elements;
 Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea, ⁵
 Or swell the curled waters 'bove the main,
 That things might change or cease; [tears his white hair,

Which the impetuous blasts, with eyeless rage,
 Catch in their fury, and make nothing of;
 Strives in his little world of man to out-scorn ¹⁰
 The to-and-fro-conflicting wind and rain.

This night, wherein the cub-drawn bear would couch,

The lion and the belly-pinched wolf
 Keep their fur dry, unbonneted he runs,
 And bids what will take all.]

Kent. But who is with him?

Gent. None but the Fool; who labours to outjest ¹⁵

His heart-struck injuries.

Kent. Sir, I do know you;
 And dare, upon the warrant of my note,
 Commend a dear thing to you. There is division,

Although as yet the face of it is cover'd ²⁰
 With mutual cunning, 'twixt Albany and Cornwall;

Who have—as who have not, that their great stars

Thron'd and set high?—servants, who seem no less,

Which are to France the spies and speculations
 Intelligent of our state; what hath been seen,
 Either in snuffs and packings of the Dukes, ²⁵
 Or the hard rein which both of them have borne
 Against the old kind king, or something deeper,
 Whereof perchance these are but furnishings;
 [But, true it is, from France there comes a power ³⁰

Into this scattered kingdom; who already,
 Wise in our negligence, have secret feet
 In some of our best ports, and are at point
 To show their open banner. Now to you:
 If on my credit you dare build so far ³⁵
 To make your speed to Dover, you shall find
 Some that will thank you, making just report
 Of how unnatural and bemaiddening sorrow
 The King hath cause to plain.

I am a gentleman of blood and breeding; ⁴⁰
 And, from some knowledge and assurance, offer
 This office to you.]

Gent. I will talk further with you.

Kent. No, do not.
 For confirmation that I am much more
 Than my out-wall, open this purse, and take ⁴⁵
 What it contains. If you shall see Cordelia,—
 As fear not but you shall,—show her this ring;
 And she will tell you who that fellow is
 That yet you do not know. Fie on this storm!
 I will go seek the King. ⁵⁰

Gent. Give me your hand. Have you no more to say?

Kent. Few words, but, to effect, more than all yet;

That, when we have found the King,—in which your pain

That way, I'll this,—he that first lights on
 him

Holla the other. [Exeunt [severally].] ⁵⁵

SCENE II. [The same.] Storm still.

Enter LEAR and FOOL.

Lear. Blow, winds, and crack your cheeks!
 Rage! Blow!

You cataracts and hurricanoes, spout
 Till you have drench'd our steeples, drown'd the cocks!

*All forms of c. & h. - overwhell'd
 3 steeples, 7 cocks -
 7 cataracts, 8 hurricanoes, 10*

future life is to be overthrown by the thing that don't mean much to us.

988

KING LEAR

III. iii.

You sulphurous and thought-executing fires,
Vaunt-couriers of oak-cleaving thunderbolts, 5 Singe my white head! And thou, all-shaking thunder,

Strike flat the thick rotundity o' the world!
Crack nature's moulds, all germens spill at
once,

That makes ingrateful man! 9

Fool. O nuncle, court holy-water in a dry house is better than this rain-water out o' door.
Good nuncle, in; ask thy daughters' blessing.
Here's a night pities neither wise men nor
fools.

Lear. Rumble thy bellyful! Spit, fire!
Spout, rain!

Nor rain, wind, thunder, fire, are my daughters. 15

I tax not you, you elements, with unkindness;
I never gave you kingdom, call'd you children;
You owe me no subscription. Then let fall Your horrible pleasure. Here I stand, your slave,

A poor, infirm, weak, and despis'd old man; 20
But yet I call you servile ministers,
That will with two pernicious daughters join
Your high engender'd battles 'gainst a head
So old and white as this. Oh! 'tis foul!

Fool. He that has a house to put 's head in has a good head-piece. 25

"The cod-piece that will house

Before the head has any,

The head and he shall louse;

So beggars marry many. 30

The man that makes his toe

What he his heart should make

Shall of a corn cry woe,

And turn his sleep to wake."

For there was never yet fair woman but she made mouths in a glass. 35

Enter KENT.

Lear. No, I will be the pattern of all patience; I will say nothing.

Kent. Who's there?

Fool. Marry, here's grace and a cod-piece;
that 's a wise man and a fool. 41

Kent. Alas, sir, are you here? Things that love night

Love not such nights as these; the wrathful
skies

Gallow the very wanderers of the dark,
And make them keep their caves. Since I was
man, 45

Such sheets of fire, such bursts of horrid
thunder,

Such groans of roaring wind and rain, I never Remember to have heard. Man's nature cannot carry

The affliction nor the fear.

Lear.

Let the great gods,
That keep this dreadful pudder o'er our heads,
Find out their enemies now. Tremble, thou wretch, 51

That hast within thee undivulged crimes, Unwhipp'd of justice! Hide thee, thou bloody
hand;

Thou perjur'd, and thou simular of virtue

That art incestuous! Caitiff, to pieces shake, 55
That under covert and convenient seeming Has practis'd on man's life! Close pent-up guilts,

Rive your concealing continents, and cry
These dreadful summoners grace. I am a man
More sinn'd against than sinning. 60

Kent.

Alack, bare-headed!

Gracious my lord, hard by here is a hovel; 61
Some friendship will it lend you 'gainst the tempest.

Repose you there; while I to this hard house —
More harder than the stones whereof 'tis rais'd;

Which even but now, demanding after you, 65
Deni'd me to come in — return, and force
Their scanted courtesies.

Lear.

My wits begin to turn.
Come on, my boy. How dost, my boy? Art
cold?

I am cold myself. Where is this straw, my fellow?

The art of our necessities is strange, 69
And can make vile things precious. Come, your hovel.

Poor Fool and knave, I have one part in my
heart

That's sorry yet for thee.

Fool. [Singing.]

"He that has and a little tiny wit, —

With heigh-ho, the wind and the rain, — 75
Must make content with his fortunes fit,
For the rain it raineth every day."

Lear. True, boy. Come, bring us to this hovel. [Exeunt (Lear and Kent).]

Fool. This is a brave night to cool a courtezan.

I'll speak a prophecy ere I go: 80
When priests are more in word than matter;
When brewers mar their malt with water;

When nobles are their tailors' tutors;

No heretics burn'd, but wenches' suitors;

When every case in law is right;

No squire in debt, nor no poor knight;

When slanders do not live in tongues;

Nor cutpurses come not to throngs;

When usurers tell their gold i' the field;

And bawds and whores do churches build; 85

Then shall the realm of Albion
Come to great confusion.

Then comes the time, who lives to see 't,

That going shall be us'd with feet.

This prophecy Merlin shall make; for I live before his time. [Exit. 90]

SCENE III. [Gloucester's castle.]

Enter GLOUCESTER and EDMUND.

Glou. Alack, alack, Edmund, I like not this unnatural dealing. When I desired their leave that I might pity him, they took from me the use of mine own house; charg'd me, on pain of perpetual displeasure, neither to speak of him, entreat for him, or any way sustain him. 95

Edm. Most savage and unnatural!

Glou. Go to; say you nothing. There is division between the Dukes, and a worse matter age ought to have respect to elements should be human as human

than that. I have received a letter this night; [16]
 't is dangerous to be spoken; I have lock'd the letter in my closet. These injuries the King now bears will be revenged home; there is part of a power already footed. We must incline to the King. I will look him, and privily relieve him. Go you and maintain talk with [18]
 the Duke, that my charity be not of him perceived. If he ask for me, I am ill, and gone to bed. If I die for it, as no less is threat'ned me, the King my old master must be relieved.
 There is strange things toward, Edmund; pray
 you, be careful. [Exit. 21]

Edm. This courtesy, forbid thee, shall the Duke

Instantly know; and of that letter too.

This seems a fair deserving, and must draw
 me

That which my father loses; no less than all. 25
 The younger rises when the old doth fall.

[Exit.]

SCENE IV. [The open country. Before a hovel.]

Enter LEAR, KENT, and FOOL.

Kent. Here is the place, my lord; good my lord, enter.

The tyranny of the open night 's too rough

For nature to endure. [Storm still.]

Lear. Let me alone.

Kent. Good my lord, enter here.

Lear. Wilt break my heart?

Kent. I had rather break mine own. Good my lord, enter. 5

Lear. Thou think'st 't is much that this contentious storm

Invades us to the skin; so 't is to thee;

But where the greater malady is fix'd,

The lesser is scarce felt. Thou 'dst shun a bear;

But if thy flight lay toward the roaring sea, 10

Thou 'dst meet the bear i' the mouth. When the mind 's free,

The body 's delicate; the tempest in my mind

Doth from my senses take all feeling else

Save what beats there. Filial ingratitude!

Is it not as this mouth should tear this hand 15

For lifting food to 't? But I will punish home.

No, I will weep no more. In such a night

To shut me out! Pour on! I will endure.

In such a night as this! O Regan, Goneril!

Your old kind father, whose frank heart gave
 all, — 20

O, that way madness lies; let me shun that;

No more of that.

Kent. Good my lord, enter here.

Lear. Prithee, go in thyself; seek thine own ease.

This tempest will not give me leave to ponder
 On things would hurt me more. But I'll go in. 25

[To the Fool.] In, boy; go first. You houseless poverty, —

Nay, get thee in. I'll pray, and then I'll sleep.
 [Exit [Fool].]

Poor naked wretches, wheresoe'er you are,
 That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm,

How shall your houseless heads and unfed
 sides, 30

Your loop'd and window'd raggedness, defend
 you

From seasons such as these? O, I have ta'en
 Too little care of this! Take physic, pomp;

Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel, To kind

That thou mayst shake the superflux to them, wake her

And show the heavens more just. 36

Edg. [Within.] Fathom and half, fathom and half! Poor Tom!

[The Fool runs out from the hovel.]

Fool. Come not in here, nuncle, here's a spirit. Help me, help me! 40

Kent. Give me thy hand. Who's there?

Fool. A spirit, a spirit! He says his name's poor Tom.

Kent. What art thou that dost grumble there i' the straw? Come forth. 45

[Enter EDGAR, disguised as a madman.]

Edg. Away! the foul fiend follows me!

"Through the sharp hawthorn blow the winds."
 Hum! go to thy bed, and warm thee.

Lear. Did'st thou give all to thy daughters, and art thou come to this? 50

Edg. Who gives anything to poor Tom? To kind whom the foul fiend hath led through fire and through flame, and through ford and whirlpool, o'er bog and quagmire; that hath laid knives under his pillow, and halters in his pew; set ratsbane by his porridge; made him proud [55] of heart, to ride on a bay trotting-horse over four-inch'd bridges, to course his own shadow for a traitor. Bless thy five wits! Tom's a-cold, — O, do de, do de, do de. Bless thee from whirlwinds, star-blasting, and taking! [60]
 Do poor Tom some charity, whom the foul fiend vexes. There could I have him now, — and there, — and there again, and there.

Lear. Has his daughters brought him to this pass? [Storm still.] 65

Couldst thou save nothing? Wouldst thou give 'em all?

Fool. Nay, he reserv'd a blanket, else we had been all sham'd.

Lear. Now, all the plagues that in the pendulous air

Hang fated o'er men's faults light on thy daughters! 70

Kent. He hath no daughters, sir.

Lear. Death, traitor! nothing could have subdu'd nature

To such a lowness but his unkind daughters.

Is it the fashion, that discarded fathers

Should have thus little mercy on their flesh? 75

Judicious punishment! 'T was this flesh begot
 Those pelican daughters.

Edg. "Pillicock sat on Pillicock-hill."

Alow, alow, loo, loo!

Fool. This cold night will turn us all to fools and madmen. 81

Edg. Take heed o' the foul fiend. Obey thy parents; keep thy word justly; swear not;
 commit not with man's sworn spouse; set not thy sweet heart on proud array. Tom's a-cold.

Lear. What hast thou been? 86

Edg. A serving-man, proud in heart and

King is a little kinder mind; that curl'd my hair; wore gloves in my cap; serv'd the lust of my mistress' heart, and did the act of darkness with her; swore as many oaths as I spake words, and broke [50] them in the sweet face of heaven: one that slept in the contriving of lust, and wak'd to do it. Wine lov'd I dearly, dice dearly; and in woman out-paramour'd the Turk: false of heart, light of ear, bloody of hand; hog in [55] sloth, fox in stealth, wolf in greediness, dog in madness, lion in prey. Let not the creaking of shoes nor the rustling of silks betray thy poor heart to woman. Keep thy foot out of brothels, thy hand out of plackets, thy pen from lenders' books, and defy the foul fiend. 101

 "Still through the hawthorn blows the cold wind."

Says suum, mun, nonny. Dolphin my boy, boy, sessa! let him trot by. [Storm still.]

Lear. Thou wert better in a grave than [105] to answer with thy uncover'd body this extremity of the skies. Is man no more than this? Consider him well. Thou ow'st the worm no silk, the beast no hide, the sheep no wool, the cat no perfume. Ha! here's three on 's are sophisticated! Thou art the thing it- [110] self; unaccommodated man is no more but such a poor, bare, forked animal as thou art. Off, off, you lendings! come, unbutton here. 114
 [Tearing off his clothes.]

Enter GLOUCESTER, with a torch.

Fool. Prithee, nuncle, be contented; 'tis a naughty night to swim in. Now a little fire in a wild field were like an old lecher's heart; a small spark, all the rest on 's body cold. Look, here comes a walking fire. 119

Edg. This is the foul [fiend] Flibbertigibbet; he begins at curfew, and walks till the first cock; he gives the web and the pin, squints the eye, and makes the hare-lip; mildews the white wheat, and hurts the poor creature of earth. 125

"St. Withold footed thrice the 'old; 125

He met the night-mare, and her ninefold;

Bid her alight,

And her troth plight,

And, aroint thee, witch, aroint thee!" 130

Kent. How fares your Grace?

Lear. What 's he?

Kent. Who 's there? What is 't you seek?

Glou. What are you there? Your names?

Edg. Poor Tom, that eats the swimming frog, the toad, the tadpole, the wall-newt, and the water; that in the fury of his heart, when [135] the foul fiend rages, eats cow-dung for salads; swallows the old rat and the ditch-dog; drinks the green mantle of the standing pool; who is whipp'd from tithing to tithing, and stock'd, punish'd, and imprison'd; who hath three [140] suits to his back, six shirts to his body,

Horse to ride, and weapon to wear;

But mice and rats, and such small deer,

Have been Tom's food for seven long year.

Beware my follower. Peace, Smulkin; peace, thou fiend! 146

Glou. What, hath your Grace no better company?

Edg. The prince of darkness is a gentleman. Modo he 's call'd, and Mahu.

Glou. Our flesh and blood, my lord, is grown so vile 150

That it doth hate what gets it.

Edg. Poor Tom 's a-cold.

Glou. Go in with me; my duty cannot suffer To obey in all your daughters' hard commands.

Though their injunction be to bar my doors 155 And let this tyrannous night take hold upon you, Yet have I ventur'd to come seek you out, And bring you where both fire and food is ready.

Lear. First let me talk with this philosopher.

What is the cause of thunder? 160

Kent. Good my lord, take his offer; go into the house.

Lear. I'll talk a word with this same learned Theban.

What is your study?

Edg. How to prevent the fiend, and to kill vermin.

Lear. Let me ask you one word in private.

Kent. Importune him once more to go, my lord; 166

His wits begin to unsettle.

Glou. Canst thou blame him? [Storm still.]

His daughters seek his death. Ah, that good

Kent!

He said it would be thus, poor banish'd man! Thou say'st the King grows mad; I'll tell thee, friend, 170

I am almost mad myself. I had a son, Now outlaw'd from my blood; he sought my

life,

But lately, very late. I lov'd him, friend, No father his son dearer; true to tell thee,

The grief hath craz'd my wits. What a night 's this! 175

I do beseech your Grace, —

Lear. O, cry you mercy, sir.

Noble philosopher, your company.

Edg. Tom 's a-cold.

Glou. In, fellow, there, into the hovel; keep thee warm.

Lear. Come, let 's in all.

Kent. This way, my lord.

Lear. With him;

I will keep still with my philosopher. 181

Kent. Good my lord, soothe him; let him take the fellow.

Glou. Take him you on.

Kent. Sirrah, come on; go along with us.

Lear. Come, good Athenian.

Glou. No words, no words; hush.

Edg. "Child Rowland to the dark tower came;

His word was still, 'Fie, foh, and fum,
 I smell the blood of a British man.'" 186

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V. [Gloucester's castle.]

Enter CORNWALL and EDMUND.

Corn. I will have my revenge ere I depart his house.

Edm. How, my lord, I may be censured that nature thus gives way to loyalty, something fears me to think of.

Corn. I now perceive, it was not altogether your brother's evil disposition made him seek his death; but a provoking merit, set a-work by a reproveable badness in himself.

Edm. How malicious is my fortune, that I must repent to be just! This is the letter which he spoke of, which approves him an intelligent party to the advantages of France. O heavens! that this treason were not, or not I the detector!

Corn. Go with me to the Duchess.

Edm. If the matter of this paper be certain, you have mighty business in hand.

Corn. True or false, it hath made thee Earl of Gloucester. Seek out where thy father is, that he may be ready for our apprehension.

Edm. [Aside.] If I find him comforting the King, it will stuff his suspicion more fully. — I will persevere in my course of loyalty, though the conflict be sore between that and my blood.

Corn. I will lay trust upon thee; and thou shalt find a dearer father in my love. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. [A building attached to Gloucester's castle.]

Enter KENT and GLOUCESTER.

Glou. Here is better than the open air; take it thankfully. I will piece out the comfort with what addition I can. I will not be long from you.

Kent. All the power of his wits have given way to his impatience. The gods reward your kindness!

Enter LEAR, EDGAR, and FOOL.

Edg. Frateretto calls me; and tells me Nero is an angler in the lake of darkness. Pray, innocent, and beware the foul fiend.

Fool. Prithee, nuncle, tell me whether a madman be a gentleman or a yeoman?

Lear. A king, a king!

Fool. No, he's a yeoman that has a gentleman to his son; for he's a mad yeoman that sees his son a gentleman before him.

Lear. To have a thousand with red burning spits

Come hissing in upon 'em, —

[Edg.] The foul fiend bites my back.

Fool. He's mad that trusts in the tameness of a wolf, a horse's health, a boy's love, or a whore's oath.

Lear. It shall be done; I will arraign them straight.

[To Edg.] Come, sit thou here, most learned justicer;

[To the Fool.] Thou, sapient sir, sit here. Now, you she foxes!

Edg. Look, where he stands and glares! Wantest thou eyes at trial, madam?

"Come o'er the bourn, Bessy, to me," —

Fool. "Her boat hath a leak, And she must not speak

Why she dares not come over to thee."

Edg. The foul fiend haunts poor Tom in the voice of a nightingale. Hopdance cries in Tom's belly for two white herring. Croak not, black angel; I have no food for thee.

Kent. How do you, sir? Stand you not so amaz'd:

Will you lie down and rest upon the cushions?
Lear. I'll see their trial first. Bring in their evidence.

[To Edg.] Thou robed man of justice, take thy place;

[To the Fool.] And thou, his yoke-fellow of equity,

Bench by his side. [To Kent.] You are o' the commission,

Sit you too.

Edg. Let us deal justly.

"Sleepest or wakest thou, jolly shepherd?

Thy sheep be in the corn;

And for one blast of thy minikin mouth,

Thy sheep shall take no harm."

Purr! the cat is grey.

Lear. Arraign her first; 't is Goneril. I here take my oath before this honourable assembly, she kick'd the poor king her father.

Fool. Come hither, mistress. Is your name Goneril?

Lear. She cannot deny it.

Fool. Cry you mercy, I took you for a joint-stool.

Lear. And here's another, whose warp'd looks proclaim

What store her heart is made on. Stop her there!

Arms, arms, sword, fire! Corruption in the place!

False justicer, why hast thou let her scape?

Edg. Bless thy five wits!

Kent. O pity! Sir, where is the patience now

That you so oft have boasted to retain?

Edg. [Aside.] My tears begin to take his part so much,

They mar my counterfeiting.

Lear. The little dogs and all,

Tray, Blanch, and Sweetheart, see, they bark at me.

Edg. Tom will throw his head at them. Avaunt, you curs!

Be thy mouth or black or white,

Tooth that poisons if it bite;

Mastiff, greyhound, mongrel grim,

Hound or spaniel, brach or lym,

Or bobtail tike or trundle-tail,

Tom will make him weep and wail;

For, with throwing thus my head,

Dogs leap the hatch, and all are fled.

Do de, de, de, Sessa! Come, march to wakes and fairs and market-towns. Poor Tom, thy horn is dry.

Lear. Then let them anatomize Regan; see what breeds about her heart. Is there any cause in nature that make these hard hearts?

[To Edg.] You, sir, I entertain for one of my hundred; only I do not like the fashion of your garments. You will say they are Persian, but let them be chang'd.

He think she heart 76.

Re-enter GLOUCESTER.

Kent. Now, good my lord, lie here and rest a while.

Lear. Make no noise, make no noise; draw the curtains; so, so, so. We'll go to supper i'
the morning. 91

Fool. And I'll go to bed at noon.

Glou. Come hither, friend; where is the King my master?

Kent. Here, sir; but trouble him not, his wits are gone.

Glou. Good friend, I prithee, take him in thy arms; 95

I have o'erheard a plot of death upon him.

There is a litter ready; lay him in 't,
And drive toward Dover, friend, where thou shalt meet

Both welcome and protection. Take up thy master.

If thou shouldst dally half an hour, his life, 100
With thine, and all that offer to defend him,
Stand in hard loss. Take up, take up;
And follow me, that will to some provision
Give thee quick conduct.

Kent. [Oppressed nature sleeps.
This rest might yet have balm'd thy broken sinews, 105

Which, if convenience will not allow,
Stand in hard cure. [To the Fool.] Come, help to bear thy master.

Thou must not stay behind.]

Glou. Come, come, away.

[Exeunt all but Edgar.]

[Edg.] When we our betters see bearing our woes,

We scarcely think our miseries our foes. 110
Who alone suffers, suffers most i' the mind,
Leaving free things and happy shows behind;
But then the mind much sufferance doth o'erskip,

When grief hath mates, and bearing fellowship.
How light and portable my pain seems now, 115
When that which makes me bend makes the King bow,

He childed as I fathered! Tom, away!
Mark the high noises; and thyself bewray,
When false opinion, whose wrong thoughts
defile thee,

In thy just proof repeals and reconciles thee. 120
What will hap more to-night, safe scape thee
King!

Lurk, lurk. [Exit.]

SCENE VII. [Gloucester's castle.]

Enter CORNWALL, REGAN, GONERIL, Bastard [EDMUND], and SERVANTS.

Corn. [To Gon.] Post speedily to my lord your husband; show him this letter. The army of France is landed.—Seek out the traitor Gloucester. [Exeunt some of the Servants.]

Reg. Hang him instantly.

Gon. Pluck out his eyes. 5

Corn. Leave him to my displeasure.—Edmund, keep you our sister company; the revenges we are bound to take upon your traitorous father are not fit for your beholding.

Advise the Duke, where you are going, to a most festinate preparation; we are bound to the like. Our posts shall be swift and intelligent betwixt us. Farewell, dear sister; farewell, my lord of Gloucester. 10

Enter Steward [OSWALD].

How now! where's the King?

Osw. My Lord of Gloucester hath convey'd him hence.

Some five or six and thirty of his knights, 15
Hot questraters after him, met him at gate,
Who, with some other of the lords dependants,
Are gone with him toward Dover, where they boast

To have well-armed friends.

Corn. Get horses for your mistress.

Gon. Farewell, sweet lord, and sister. 21

Corn. Edmund, farewell.

[Exeunt [Goneril, Edmund, and Oswald].

Go seek the traitor Gloucester,
Pinion him like a thief, bring him before us. [Exeunt other Servants.]

Though well we may not pass upon his life
Without the form of justice, yet our power 25
Shall do a courtesy to our wrath, which men
May blame, but not control.

Enter GLOUCESTER and SERVANTS.

Who's there? The traitor?

Reg. Ingrateful fox! 't is he.

Corn. Bind fast his corky arms. no muscle

Glou. What means your Graces? Good my friends, consider 30

You are my guests. Do me no foul play, friends.
Corn. Bind him, I say. [Servants bind him.]

Reg. Hard, hard. O filthy traitor!

Glou. Unmerciful lady as you are, I'm none.

Corn. To this chair bind him. Villain, thou shalt find — [Regan plucks his beard.]

Glou. By the kind gods, 't is most ignobly done
To pluck me by the beard. 35

Reg. So white, and such a traitor!

Glou. Naughty lady,
These hairs, which thou dost ravish from my
chin,

Will quicken, and accuse thee. I am your host:
With robber's hands my hospitable favours 40
You should not ruffle thus. What will you do?

Corn. Come, sir, what letters had you late from France?

Reg. Be simple-answer'd, for we know the truth.

Corn. And what confederacy have you with the traitors

Late footed in the kingdom? 45

Reg. To whose hands you have sent the lunatic king,

Speak.

Glou. I have a letter guessingly set down,
Which came from one that's of a neutral
heart,

And not from one oppo's'd.

Corn. Cunning.

Reg. And false.

Corn. Where hast thou sent the King? 50

Glou. To Dover.

Reg. Wherefore to Dover? Wast thou not charg'd at peril—

Corn. Wherefore to Dover? Let him answer that.

Glou. I am tied to the stake, and I must stand the course. [Bear baiting.] 55

Reg. Wherefore to Dover?

Glou. Because I would not see thy cruel nails

Pluck out his poor old eyes; nor thy fierce sister

In his anointed flesh stick boarish fangs.

The sea, with such a storm as his bare head

In hell-black night endur'd, would have buoy'd up 60

And quench'd the stelled fires;

Yet, poor old heart, he help the heavens to rain.

If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,

Thou shouldst have said, "Good porter, turn the key."

All cruels else subscribe; but I shall see 65

The winged vengeance overtake such children.

Corn. See 't shalt thou never. Fellows, hold the chair.

Upon these eyes of thine I'll set my foot.

Glou. He that will think to live till he be old,

Give me some help!—O cruel! O you gods! 70

Reg. One side will mock another; the other too.

Corn. If you see vengeance,—

[I.] Serv. Hold your hand, my lord!

I have serv'd you ever since I was a child;

But better service have I never done you

Than now to bid you hold.

Reg. How now, you dog!

[I.] Serv. If you did wear a beard upon your chin, 76

I'd shake it on this quarrel. What do you mean?

Corn. My villain! [They draw and fight.]

[I.] Serv. Nay, then, come on, and take the chance of anger.

Reg. Give me thy sword. A peasant stand up thus? 80

[Takes a sword, and runs at him behind.]

[I.] Serv. Oh, I am slain! My lord, you have one eye left

To see some mischief on him. Oh! [Dies.]

Corn. Lest it see more, prevent it. Out, vile jelly!

Where is thy lustre now?

Glou. All dark and comfortless. Where's my son Edmund? 85

Edmund, enkindle all the sparks of nature, To quit this horrid act.

Reg. Out, treacherous villain!

Thou call'st on him that hates thee. It was he That made the overture of thy treasons to us,

Who is too good to pity thee. 90

Glou. O my follies! then Edgar was abus'd. Kind gods, forgive me that, and prosper him!

Reg. Go thrust him out at gates, and let him smell

His way to Dover. (Exit [one] with Gloucester.)

How is 't, my lord? How look you?

Corn. I have received a hurt; follow me, lady. 95

Turn out that eyeless villain; throw this slave Upon the dunghill. Regan, I bleed apace;

Untimely comes this hurt. Give me your arm. [Exit Cornwall, led by Regan.]

[2. Serv.] I'll never care what wickedness I do,

If this man come to good.

3. Serv. If she live long, 100

And in the end meet the old course of death, Women will all turn monsters.

2. Serv. Let's follow the old earl, and get the Bedlam

To lead him where he would: his roguish madness

Allows itself to anything. 105

3. Serv. Go thou: I'll fetch some flax and whites of eggs

To apply to his bleeding face. Now, Heaven help him! [Exeunt [severally].]

ACT IV

SCENE I. [The open country near Gloucester's castle.]

Enter EDGAR.

Edg. Yet better thus, and known to be contempt'd,

Than, still contempt'd and flatter'd, to be worst.

The lowest and most dejected thing of fortune

Stands still in esperance, lives not in fear.

The lamentable change is from the best; 5

The worst returns to laughter. Welcome, then, Thou unsubstantial air that I embrace!

The wretch that thou hast blown unto the worst

Owes nothing to thy blasts.

Enter GLOUCESTER, led by an OLD MAN.

But who comes here?

My father, poorly led? World, world, O world!

But that thy strange mutations make us hate thee, 11

Life would not yield to age.

Old Man. O, my good lord, I have been your tenant, and your father's tenant, these four-score years. 15

Glou. Away, get thee away! Good friend, be gone;

Thy comforts can do me no good at all; These they may hurt.

Old Man. [Alack, sir,] you cannot see your way.

Glou. I have no way, and therefore want no eyes; 20

I stumbled when I saw. Full oft 't is seen, Our means secure us, and our mere defects Prove our commodities. O dear son Edgar,

The food of thy abused father's wrath! 25

Might I but live to see thee in my touch, I'd say I had eyes again!

Re-enter GLOUCESTER.

Old Man. How now! Who's there?
Edg. [Aside.] O gods! Who is't can say,
 "I am at the worst?"

I am worse than e'er I was.

Old Man. 'Tis poor mad Tom.

Edg. [Aside.] And worse I may be yet; the worst is not

So long as we can say, "This is the worst." 30

Old Man. Fellow, where goest?

Glou. Is it a beggar-man?

Old Man. Madman and beggar too.

Glou. He has some reason, else he could not beg.

I' the last night's storm I such a fellow saw,
 Which made me think a man a worm. My son
 Came then into my mind, and yet my mind 30
 Was then scarce friends with him. I have heard more since.

As flies to wanton boys, are we to the gods,
 They kill us for their sport.

Edg. [Aside.] How should this be?
 Bad is the trade that must play fool to sor-
 row, 40

Ang'ring itself and others.—Bless thee, master!

Glou. Is that the naked fellow?

Old Man. Ay, my lord.

Glou. [Then, prithee,] get thee away. If, for my sake,

Thou wilt o'ertake us, hence a mile or twain
 I' the way toward Dover, do it for ancient
 love; 45

And bring some covering for this naked soul,
 Which I'll entreat to lead me.

Old Man. Alack, sir, he is mad.

Glou. 'Tis the time's plague, when madmen lead the blind.

Do as I bid thee, or rather do thy pleasure;
 Above the rest, be gone. 50

Old Man. I'll bring him the best 'parel that I have,

Come on 't what will. [Exit.]

Glou. Sirrah, naked fellow,—

Edg. Poor Tom's a-cold. [Aside.] I cannot daub it further.

Glou. Come hither, fellow. 55

Edg. [Aside.] And yet I must.—Bless thy sweet eyes, they bleed.

Glou. Know'st thou the way to Dover?

Edg. Both stile and gate, horse-way and foot-path. Poor Tom hath been scar'd out of his good wits. Bless thee, good man's son, from the foul fiend! [Five fiends have been in 60 poor Tom at once; of lust, as Obidicut; Hob-biddence, prince of dumbness; Mahu, of stealing; Modo, of murder; Flibbertigibbet, of mopping and mowing, who since possesses cham-bermaids and waiting-women. So, bless thee,
 master!]

Glou. Here, take this purse, thou whom the heavens' plagues

Have humbled to all strokes. That I am wretched

Makes thee the happier; heavens, deal so still!

Let the superfluous and lust-dieted man, 70
 That slaves your ordinance, that will not see

Because he does not feel, feel your power
 quickly;

So distribution should undo excess,

And each man have enough. Dost thou know Dover?

Edg. Ay, master. 75

Glou. There is a cliff, whose high and bending head

Looks fearfully in the confined deep.

Bring me but to the very brim of it,
 And I'll repair the misery thou dost bear

With something rich about me. From that place 80

I shall no leading need.

Edg. Give me thy arm;
 Poor Tom shall lead thee. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. [*Before the Duke of Albany's
 palace.*]

Enter GONERIL, Bastard [EDMUND], and Steward [OSWALD].

Gon. Welcome, my lord! I marvel our mild
 husband

Not met us on the way.—Now, where's your master?

Osw. Madam, within; but never man so chang'd.

I told him of the army that was landed;
 He smil'd at it. I told him you were coming; 5
 His answer was, "The worse." Of Gloucester's treachery,

And of the loyal service of his son,
 When I inform'd him, then he call'd me sot,
 And told me I had turn'd the wrong side out.
 What most he should dislike seems pleasant to
 him; 10

What like, offensive.

Gon. [To Edm.] Then shall you go no further.

It is the cowish terror of his spirit,
 That dares not undertake; he'll not feel wrongs

Which tie him to an answer. Our wishes on the way

May prove effects. Back, Edmund, to my brother; 15

Hasten his musters and conduct his powers.
 I must change names at home, and give the distaff

Into my husband's hands. This trusty serv-vant

Shall pass between us. Ere long you are like to hear,

If you dare venture in your own behalf, 20
 A mistress's command. Wear this; spare
 speech;

Decline your head. This kiss, if it durst speak,
 Would stretch thy spirits up into the air.

Conceive, and fare thee well.

Edm. Yours in the ranks of death. [Exit.]

Gon. My most dear Gloucester!

O, the difference of man and man!

To thee a woman's services are due; 25

My Fool usurps my body.

Osw. Madam, here comes my lord.

[Exit.]

Enter the DUKE OF ALBANY.

Gon. I have been worth the whistle.

Alb. O Goneril!
You are not worth the dust which the rude wind

Blows in your face. [I fear your disposition,
That nature which condemns its origin
Cannot be bordered certain in itself.
She that herself will sliver and disbranch
From her material sap, perforce must wither 35
And come to deadly use.

Gon. No more; the text is foolish.

Alb. Wisdom and goodness to the vile seem vile;

Filth savour but themselves. What have you done?

Tigers, not daughters, what have you perform'd?

A father, and a gracious aged man,
Whose reverence even the head-lugg'd bear would lick,
Most barbarous, most degenerate! have you madded.

Could my good brother suffer you to do it?

A man, a prince, by him so benefited!

If that the heavens do not their visible spirits
Send quickly down to tame these vile offences,
It will come,
Humanity must perforce prey on itself,
Like monsters of the deep.]

Gon. Milk-liver'd man! 50
That bear'st a cheek for blows, a head for wrongs,

Who hast not in thy brows an eye discerning
Thine honour from thy suffering, [that not know'st

Fools do those villains pity who are punish'd
Ere they have done their mischief, where 's thy drum?

France spreads his banners in our noiseless land,
With plumed helm thy state begins to threat;
While thou, a moral fool, sits still, and criest,
"Alack, why does he so?"

Alb. See thyself, devil!
Proper deformity seems not in the fiend 60
So horrid as in woman.

Gon. O vain fool!
[Alb. Thou changed and self-cover'd thing,
for shame!

Be-monster not thy feature. Were 't my fitness
To let these hands obey my blood,
They are apt enough to dislocate and tear 65
Thy flesh and bones. Howe'er thou art a fiend,

A woman's shape doth shield thee.

Gon. Marry, your manhood — Mew!

Enter a MESSENGER.

Alb. What news?

Mess. O, my good lord, the Duke of Cornwall's dead;
Slain by his servant, going to put out
The other eye of Gloucester.

Alb. Gloucester's eyes!
Mess. A servant that he bred, thrill'd with remorse,

Oppos'd against the act, bending his sword
To his great master; who, thereat enrag'd, 75
Flew on him, and amongst them fell'd him dead;

But not without that harmful stroke, which since

Hath pluck'd him after.

Alb. This shows you are above,
You justicers, that these our nether crimes
So speedily can venge! But, O poor Gloucester!
Lost he his other eye?

Mess. Both, both, my lord. 81
This letter, madam, craves a speedy answer.
'T is from your sister.

Gon. [Aside.] One way I like this well;
But being widow, and my Gloucester with her,

May all the building in my fancy pluck
Upon my hateful life. Another way,
The news is not so tart. — I'll read, and answer. [Exit.

Alb. Where was his son when they did take his eyes?

Mess. Come with my lady hither.

Alb. He is not here.
Mess. No, my good lord; I met him back again. 91

Alb. Knows he the wickedness?

Mess. Ay, my good lord; 't was he inform'd against him;

And quit the house on purpose, that their punishment 94

Might have the freer course.

Alb. Gloucester, I live
To thank thee for the love thou show'st the King,

And to revenge thine eyes. Come hither, friend;

Tell me what more thou know'st. [Exeunt.

[SCENE III. The French camp near Dover.

Enter KENT and a GENTLEMAN.

Kent. Why the King of France is so suddenly gone back, know you no reason?

Gent. Something he left imperfect in the state, which since his coming forth is thought of; which imports to the kingdom so much fear and danger that his personal return was most required and necessary. 7

Kent. Who hath he left behind him General?

Gent. The Marshal of France, Monsieur La Far.

Kent. Did your letters pierce the Queen to any demonstration of grief? 12

Gent. Ay, sir; she took them, read them in my presence;

And now and then an ample tear trill'd down
Her delicate cheek. It seem'd she was a queen
Over her passion, who, most rebel-like, 16
Sought to be king o'er her.

Kent. O, then it mov'd her.

Gent. Not to a rage; patience and sorrow strove

Who should express her goodliest. You have seen

Sunshine and rain at once: her smiles and tears

Were like a better way ; those happy smilets ²¹
That play'd on her ripe lip seem'd not to know What guests were in her eyes, which, parted
thence,

As pearls from diamonds dropp'd. In brief,
Sorrow would be a rarity most beloved, ²⁵
If all could so become it.

Kent. Made she no verbal question ?

Genl. Faith, once or twice she heav'd the name of "father"

Pantingly forth, as if it press'd her heart ;
Cried, "Sisters ! sisters ! Shame of ladies !
sisters !

Kent! father ! sisters ! What, i' the storm ?
i' the night ? ³⁰

Let pity not be believ'd ! " There she shook
The holy water from her heavenly eyes ;
And, clamour-moistened, then away she started
To deal with grief alone.

Kent. It is the stars,
The stars above us, govern our conditions ; ³⁵
Else one self mate and make could not beget
Such different issues. You spoke not with her since ?

Genl. No.

Kent. Was this before the King return'd ?

Genl. No, since.

Kent. Well, sir, the poor distressed Lear's
i' the town ; ⁴⁰

Who sometime, in his better tune, remembers
What we are come about, and by no means
Will yield to see his daughter.

Genl. Why, good sir ?

Kent. A sovereign shame so elbows him.

His own unkindness,
That stripp'd her from his benediction, turn'd her ⁴⁵

To foreign casualties, gave her dear rights
To his dog-hearted daughters, — these things sting

His mind so venomously, that burning shame
Detains him from Cordelia.

Genl. Alack, poor gentleman !

Kent. Of Albany's and Cornwall's powers
you heard not ? ⁵⁰

Genl. 'Tis so, they are afoot.

Kent. Well, sir, I'll bring you to our master
Lear,

And leave you to attend him. Some dear cause
Will in concealment wrap me up a while ; ⁵⁴
When I am known aright, you shall not grieve
Lending me this acquaintance. I pray you, go Along with me. [Exeunt.]

SCENE [IV. The same. A tent.]

Enter, with drum and colours, CORDELIA, DOCTOR, and Soldiers.

Cor. Alack, 'tis he ! Why, he was met even
now

As mad as the vex'd sea, singing aloud,
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds,
With hardocks, hemlock, nettles, cuckoo-flowers,

Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow ⁵
In our sustaining corn. A sentry send forth ;
Search every acre in the high-grown field,

And bring him to our eye. [Exit an Officer.]

What can man's wisdom

In the restoring his bereaved sense ?

He that helps him take all my outward worth.

Doct. There is means, madam. ¹¹

Our foster-nurse of nature is repose,
The which he lacks ; that to provoke in him,
Are many simples operative, whose power
Will close the eye of anguish.

Cor. All blest secrets,

All you unpublish'd virtues of the earth, ¹⁵
Spring with my tears ! be aidant and remediate
In the good man's distress ! Seek, seek for him,
Lest his ungentle'd rage dissolve the life
That wants the means to lead it.

Enter a MESSENGER.

Mess. News, madam !

The British powers are marching hitherward. ²¹

Cor. 'Tis known before ; our preparation
stands

In expectation of them. O dear father,
It is thy business that I go about ;
Therefore great France ²⁵

My mourning and importune tears hath pitied.
No blown ambition doth our arms incite,
But love, dear love, and our ag'd father's right.
Soon may I hear and see him ! [Exeunt.]

SCENE [V. Gloucester's castle.]

Enter REGAN and Steward [OSWALD].

Reg. But are my brother's powers set forth ?

Osw. Ay, madam.

Reg. Himself in person there ?

Osw. Madam, with much ado.

Your sister is the better soldier.

Reg. Lord Edmund spake not with your lord at home ?

Osw. No, madam. ⁵

Reg. What might import my sister's letter to
him ?

Osw. I know not, lady.

Reg. Faith, he is posted hence on serious matter.

It was great ignorance, Gloucester's eyes being
out,

To let him live ; where he arrives he moves ¹⁰
All hearts against us. Edmund, I think, is
gone,

In pity of his misery, to dispatch
His nighted life ; moreover, to descry
The strength o' the enemy.

Osw. I must needs after him, madam, with my letter. ¹⁵

Reg. Our troops set forth to-morrow, stay with us ;

The ways are dangerous.

Osw. I may not, madam :
My lady charg'd my duty in this business.

Reg. Why should she write to Edmund ?
Might not you

Transport her purposes by word ? Belike ²⁰
Some things — I know not what. I'll love thee
much,

Let me unseal the letter.

Osw. Madam, I had rather —

Reg. I know your lady does not love her husband;
I am sure of that; and at her late being here
She gave strange œillades and most speaking looks ²⁵

To noble Edmund. I know you are of her bosom.
Osw. I, madam?

Reg. I speak in understanding; y' are, I know't.

Therefore I do advise you, take this note;
My lord is dead; Edmund and I have talk'd; ³⁰
And more convenient is he for my hand
Than for your lady's. You may gather more.
If you do find him, pray you, give him this;
And when your mistress hears thus much from you,

I pray, desire her call her wisdom to her. ³⁵
So, fare you well.

If you do chance to hear of that blind traitor,
Preferment falls on him that cuts him off.

Osw. Would I could meet him, madam! I should show

What party I do follow.

Reg. Fare thee well. ⁴⁰
[Exeunt.]

SCENE [VI. Fields near Dover.]

Enter GLOUCESTER, and EDGAR [dressed like a peasant].

Glou. When shall I come to the top of that same hill?

Edg. You do climb up it now; look, how we labour.

Glou. Methinks the ground is even.
Edg. Horrible steep.

Hark, do you hear the sea?

Glou. No, truly.
Edg. Why, then, your other senses grow imperfect ⁵

By your eyes' anguish.

Glou. So may it be, indeed.
Methinks thy voice is alter'd, and thou speak'st

In better phrase and matter than thou didst.
Edg. You're much deceiv'd. In nothing am I chang'd

But in my garments.

Glou. Methinks you're better spoken.
Edg. Come on, sir, here's the place; stand still. How fearful ¹¹

And dizzy 't is, to cast one's eyes so low!
The crows and choughs that wing the midway

air
Show scarce so gross as beetles. Half way down Hangs one that gathers samphire, dreadful trade! ¹⁵

Methinks he seems no bigger than his head.
The fishermen, that walk upon the beach,

Appear like mice; and yond tall anchoring bark,

Diminish'd to her cock; her cock, a buoy
Almost too small for sight. The murmuring surge, ²⁰

That on the unnumb'd idle pebbles chafes,
Cannot be heard so high. I'll look no more,

Lest my brain turn, and the deficient sight
Topple down headlong.

Glou. Set me where you stand.
Edg. Give me your hand; you are now within a foot ²⁵

Of the extreme verge. For all beneath the moon

Would I not leap upright.

Glou. Let go my hand.
Here, friend, 's another purse; in it a jewel

Well worth a poor man's taking. Fairies and gods

Prosper it with thee! Go thou further off; ³⁰
Bid me farewell, and let me hear thee going.

Edg. Now fare ye well, good sir.
Glou. With all my heart.

Edg. Why I do trifle thus with his despair
Is done to cure it.

Glou. [Kneeling.] O you mighty gods!
This world I do renounce, and in your sights ³⁵

Shake patiently my great affliction off.
If I could bear it longer, and not fall

To quarrel with your great opposeless wills,
My snuff and loathed part of nature should

Burn itself out. If Edgar live, O bless him! ⁴⁰
Now, fellow, fare thee well.

Edg. Gone, sir; farewell!
— And yet I know not how conceit may rob

The treasury of life, when life itself
Yields to the theft. [Glou. throws himself forward.] Had he been where he thought,

By this had thought been past. Alive or dead? — ⁴⁵

Ho, you sir! friend! Hear you, sir! speak! —
Thus might he pass indeed; yet he revives. —

What are you, sir?

Glou. Away, and let me die.
Edg. Hadst thou been aught but gossamer, feathers, air,

So many fathom down precipitating, ⁵⁰

Thou 'dst shiver'd like an egg: but thou dost breathe;

Hast heavy substance; bleed'st not; speak'st;
art sound.

Ten masts at each make not the altitude
Which thou hast perpendicularly fell.

Thy life 's a miracle. Speak yet again. ⁵⁵

Glou. But have I fallen, or no?
Edg. From the dread summit of this chalky bound.

Look up a-height; the shrill-gorg'd lark so far
Cannot be seen or heard. Do but look up. ⁶⁰

Glou. Alack, I have no eyes.
Is wretchedness depriv'd that benefit,

To end itself by death? 'T was yet some comfort,
When misery could beguile the tyrant's rage,

And frustrate his proud will.

Edg. Give me your arm.
Up: so. How is 't? Feel you your legs? You stand. ⁶⁵

Glou. Too well, too well.
Edg. This is above all strangeness.

Upon the crown o' the cliff, what thing was that
Which parted from you?

Glou. A poor unfortunate beggar.
Edg. As I stood here below, methought his

eyes

Were two full moons; he had a thousand noses,⁷⁰
 Horns whelk'd and waved like the enridged sea.
 It was some fiend; therefore, thou happy
 father,
 Think that the clearest gods, who make them
 honours

Of men's impossibilities, have preserv'd thee.
Glou. I do remember now. Henceforth I'll bear⁷⁵

Affliction till it do cry out itself, "Enough, enough," and die. That thing you speak of,
 I took it for a man; often 't would say,
 "The fiend, the fiend!" He led me to that place.

Edg. Bear free and patient thoughts.

Enter LEAR [fantastically dressed with wild flowers].

But who comes here?
 The safer sense will ne'er accommodate⁸¹
 His master thus.

Lear. No, they cannot touch me for coining;
 I am the King himself.

Edg. O thou side-piercing sight!⁸⁵
Lear. Nature's above art in that respect.
 There's your press-money. That fellow handles his bow like a crow-keeper; draw me a clothier's yard. Look, look, a mouse! Peace, peace; this piece of toasted cheese will do 't.
 There's my gauntlet; I'll prove it on a giant.
 Bring up the brown bills. O, well flown, bird!
 I' the clout, i' the clout! Hewgh! Give the word.⁹³

Edg. Sweet marjoram.

Lear. Pass.

Glou. I know that voice.⁹⁶

Lear. Ha! Goneril, with a white beard!
 They flatter'd me like a dog, and told me I had the white hairs in my beard ere the black ones were there. To say "ay" and "no" to everything that I said! "Ay" and "no" too was no good divinity. When the rain came to¹⁰¹ wet me once, and the wind to make me chatter; when the thunder would not peace at my bidding; there I found 'em, there I smelt 'em out. Go to, they are not men o' their words:
 they told me I was everything; 't is a lie, I am not ague-proof.¹⁰⁷

Glou. The trick of that voice I do well remember.

Is 't not the King?

Lear. Ay, every inch a king!

When I do stare, see how the subject quakes.
 I pardon that man's life. What was thy cause?¹¹¹

Adultery?

Thou shalt not die. Die for adultery! No:
 The wren goes to 't, and the small gilded fly
 Does lecher in my sight.¹¹⁵

Let copulation thrive; for Gloucester's bastard
 son

Was kinder to his father than my daughters

Got 'tween the lawful sheets.

To 't, luxury, pell-mell! for I lack soldiers.

Behold yond simp'ring dame,¹²⁰

Whose face between her forks presages snow,
 That minces virtue, and does shake the head
 To hear of pleasure's name,—
 The fitchew, nor the soiled horse, goes to 't¹²⁵
 With a more riotous appetite.

Down from the waist they are Centaurs,
 Though women all above;
 But to the girdle do the gods inherit,
 Beneath is all the fiends';

There's hell, there's darkness, there's the sulphurous pit,¹³⁰

Burning, scalding, stench, consumption; fie, fie, fie! pah, pah! Give me an ounce of civet;
 good apothecary, sweeten my imagination.
 There's money for thee.

Glou. O, let me kiss that hand!¹³⁵

Lear. Let me wipe it first; it smells of mortality.

Glou. O ruin'd piece of nature! This great world

Shall so wear out to nought. Dost thou know
 me?

Lear. I remember thine eyes well enough.
 Dost thou squiny at me? No, do thy worst, blind Cupid; I'll not love. Read thou this challenge; mark but the penning of it.¹⁴³

Glou. Were all thy letters suns, I could not see.

Edg. [Aside.] I would not take this from report. It is;

And my heart breaks at it.

Lear. Read.¹⁴⁶

Glou. What, with the case of eyes?

Lear. O, ho, are you there with me? No eyes in your head, nor no money in your purse?
 Your eyes are in a heavy case, your purse in a light; yet you see how this world goes.

Glou. I see it feelingly.¹⁵²

Lear. What, art mad? A man may see how this world goes with no eyes. Look with thine ears; see how yond justice rails upon yond simple thief. Hark, in thine ear: change places, and, handy-dandy, which is the justice, which is the thief? Thou hast seen a farmer's dog bark at a beggar?¹⁵⁹

Glou. Ay, sir.

Lear. And the creature run from the cur?
 There thou mightst behold the great image of authority: a dog's obey'd in office.

Thou rascal beadle, hold thy bloody hand!
 Why dost thou lash that whore? Strip thy own back;¹⁶⁵

Thou hotly lusts to use her in that kind
 For which thou whip'st her. The usurer hangs the cozener.

Through tatter'd clothes great vices do appear;
 Robes and furr'd gowns hide all. Plate sins with gold,

And the strong lance of justice hurtless breaks;¹⁷⁰

Arm it in rags, a pigmy's straw does pierce it.
 None does offend, none, I say, none; I'll able
 'em.

Take that of me, my friend, who have the power

To seal the accuser's lips. Get thee glass eyes,
 And, like a scurvy politician, seem¹⁷⁶

a world upside down

To see the things thou dost not. Now, now, now, now.

Pull off my boots; harder, harder: so.

Edg. O, matter and impertinency mix'd!
Reason in madness!

Lear. If thou wilt weep my fortunes, take my eyes. 180

I know thee well enough; thy name is Gloucester.

Thou must be patient; we came crying hither.
Thou know'st, the first time that we smell the
air,

We wawl and cry. I will preach to thee;
mark.

Glou. Alack, alack the day! 185

Lear. When we are born, we cry that we are come

To this great stage of fools.—This a good block.

It were a delicate stratagem, to shoe
A troop of horse with felt. I'll put 't in proof;
And when I have stol'n upon these son-in-
laws, 190

Then, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill!

Enter a GENTLEMAN [with Attendants].

Gent. O, here he is! Lay hand upon him.
Sir,

Your most dear daughter—

Lear. No rescue? What, a prisoner? I am even

The natural fool of fortune. Use me well; 195
You shall have ransom. Let me have surgeons;
I am cut to the brains.

Gent. You shall have anything.

Lear. No seconds? All myself?

Why, this would make a man a man of salt,
To use his eyes for garden water-pots, 200
[Ay, and laying autumn's dust.

Gent. Good sir, —]

Lear. I will die bravely, like a smug bridegroom. What!

I will be jovial. Come, come; I am a king,
My masters, know you that?

Gent. You are a royal one, and we obey
you. 205

Lear. Then there's life in 't. Come, an you get it, you shall get it by running. Sa, sa, sa,
sa. [Exit [running; attendants follow].

Gent. A sight most pitiful in the meanest
wretch,

Past speaking of in a king! Thou hast one daughter

Who redeems Nature from the general curse 210
Which twain have brought her to.

Edg. Hail, gentle sir.

Gent. Sir, speed you: what's your will?

Edg. Do you hear aught, sir, of a battle toward?

Gent. Most sure and vulgar; every one hears
that,

Which can distinguish sound.

Edg. But, by your favour,
How near's the other army? 215

Gent. Near and on speedy foot; the main descry

Stands on the hourly thought.

Edg. I thank you, sir; that's all.
Gent. Though that the Queen on special cause is here,

Her army is mov'd on. [Exit.

Edg. I thank you, sir. 220

Glou. You ever-gentle gods, take my breath
from me;

Let not my worse spirit tempt me again
To die before you please!

Edg. Well pray you, father.

Glou. Now, good sir, what are you?

Edg. A most poor man, made tame to fortune's blows; 225

Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,
Am pregnant to good pity. Give me your hand,
I'll lead you to some biding.

Glou. Hearty thanks;

The bounty and the benison of Heaven
To boot, and boot!

Enter Steward [OSWALD].

Osw. A proclaim'd prize! Most happy! 230
That eyeless head of thine was first fram'd flesh
To raise my fortunes. Thou old unhappy traitor,
Briefly thyself remember; the sword is out
That must destroy thee.

Glou. Now let thy friendly hand
Put strength enough to 't. [Edgar interposes.]

Osw. Wherefore, bold peasant, 235
Dar'st thou support a publish'd traitor? Hence;
Lest that the infection of his fortune take
Like hold on thee. Let go his arm.

Edg. 'Chill not let go, zir, without further
'casion.

Osw. Let go, slave, or thou diest! 241

Edg. Good gentleman, go your gait, and let poor folk pass. An 'chud ha' bin zwagger'd out of my life, 't would not ha' bin zo long as 't is by a vortnight. Nay, come not near th' old man; keep out, 'che vor ye, or Ise try whether your costard or my ballow be the harder. 'Chill be plain with you. 245

Osw. Out, dunghill!

Edg. 'Chill pick your teeth, zir. Come, no matter vor your foins. 251

[*They fight, and Edgar knocks him
down.*]

Osw. Slave, thou hast slain me. Villain, take my purse.

If ever thou wilt thrive, bury my body;
And give the letters which thou find'st about
me 254

To Edmund Earl of Gloucester; seek him out
Upon the English party. O, untimely death!
Death! [Dies.

Edg. I know thee well; a serviceable villain,
As duteous to the vices of thy mistress
As badness would desire.

Glou. What, is he dead?

Edg. Sit you down, father; rest you. 260
Let's see these pockets; the letters that he speaks of

May be my friends. He's dead; I am only sorry

He had no other death's-man. Let us see.
Leave, gentle wax; and, manners, blame us
not.

To know our enemies' minds, we rip their hearts;

Their papers, is more lawful.

(Reads the letter.) "Let our reciprocal vows be rememb'ed. You have many opportunities to cut him off; if your will want not, time and place will be fruitfully offer'd. There is nothing done, if he return the conqueror; then am I the prisoner, and his bed my gaol; from the loathed warmth whereof deliver me, and supply the place for your labour."

"Your — wife, so I would say —

"Affectionate servant,
"GONERIL."

O indistinguish'd space of woman's will!
A plot upon her virtuous husband's life;
And the exchange my brother! Here, in the sands,

Thee I'll rake up, the post unsanctified
Of murderous lechers; and in the mature time

With this ungracious paper strike the sight
Of the death-practis'd duke. For him 'tis well
That of thy death and business I can tell.

Glou. The King is mad; how stiff is my vile sense

That I stand up and have ingenious feeling
Of my huge sorrows! Better I were distract;
So should my thoughts be sever'd from my griefs,

And woes by wrong imaginations lose
The knowledge of themselves.

Edg. Give me your hand.
Far off, methinks, I hear the beaten drum.
Come, father, I'll bestow you with a friend.

(Exeunt.)

SCENE VII. [A tent in the French camp.]

Enter CORDELIA, KENT, and DOCTOR.

Cor. O thou good Kent, how shall I live and work

To match thy goodness? My life will be too short,

And every measure fail me.

Kent. To be acknowledg'd, madam, is o'er-paid.

All my reports go with the modest truth;
Nor more nor clipp'd, but so.

Cor. Be better suited;
These weeds are memories of those worser hours.

I prithee, put them off.

Kent. Pardon, dear madam;
Yet to be known shortens my made intent.
My boon I make it, that you know me not Till time and I think meet.

Cor. Then be 't so, my good lord, [To the Doctor.] How does the King?

Doct. Madam, sleeps still.

Cor. O you kind gods,
Cure this great breach in his abused nature! 's
The untun'd and jarring senses, O, wind up
Of this child-changed father!

Doct. So please your Majesty
That we may wake the King? He hath slept long.

Cor. Be govern'd by your knowledge, and proceed

I' the sway of your own will.

Enter LEAR in a chair carried by Servants.
[GENTLEMAN in attendance.]

Is he array'd? 's

Gent. Ay, madam; in the heaviness of sleep
We put fresh garments on him.

Doct. Be by, good madam, when we do awake him;

I doubt not of his temperance.

[Cor.

Very well.

Doct. Please you, draw near. — Louder the music there!]

Cor. O my dear father! Restoration hang Thy medicine on my lips; and let this kiss
Repair those violent harms that my two sisters
Have in thy reverence made!

Kent. Kind and dear princess!

Cor. Had you not been their father, these white flakes

Did challenge pity of them. Was this a face
To be oppos'd against the warring winds?

[To stand against the deep dread-bolted thunder?

In the most terrible and nimble stroke
Of quick, cross lightning? to watch — poor perdu! —

With this thin helm? Mine enemy's dog,
Though he had bit me, should have stood that night

Against my fire; and wast thou fain, poor father,

To hovel thee with swine and rogues forlorn
In short and musty straw? Alack, alack!

'T is wonder that thy life and wits at once
Had not concluded all. He waxes; speak to him.

Doct. Madam, do you; 't is fittest.

Cor. How does my royal lord? How fares your Majesty?

Lear. You do me wrong to take me out o' the grave.

Thou art a soul in bliss; but I am bound
Upon a wheel of fire, that mine own tears
Do scald like molten lead.

Cor. Sir, do you know me?

Lear. You are a spirit, I know; when did you die?

Cor. Still, still, far wide!

Doct. He's scarce awake; let him alone a while.

Lear. Where have I been? Where am I? Fair daylight?

I am mightily abus'd. I should even die with pity,

To see another thus. I know not what to say.
I will not swear these are my hands. Let's see;

I feel this pin prick. Would I were assur'd
Of my condition!

Cor. O, look upon me, sir,
And hold your hand in benediction o'er me.
[No, sir,] you must not kneel.

Lear. Pray, do not mock me.
I am a very foolish fond old man,

Edm. 70
Fourscore and upward, not an hour more nor less;

And, to deal plainly,
I fear I am not in my perfect mind.
Methinks I should know you, and know this man;

Yet I am doubtful; for I am mainly ignorant⁶⁵
What place this is, and all the skill I have Remembers not these garments; nor I know not

Where I did lodge last night. Do not laugh at me;

For, as I am a man, I think this lady
To be my child Cordelia.

Cor. And so I am, I am. 70

Lear. Be your tears wet? Yes, faith. I pray, weep not.

If you have poison for me, I will drink it.
I know you do not love me; for your sisters
Have, as I do remember, done me wrong: 74
You have some cause, they have not.

Cor. No cause, no cause.

Lear. Am I in France?

Kent. In your own kingdom, sir.

Lear. Do not abuse me.

Doct. Be comforted, good madam; the great rage,

You see, is kill'd in him: [and yet it is danger
To make him even o'er the time he has lost.] 80
Desire him to go in; trouble him no more
Till further settling.

Cor. Will't please your Highness walk?

Lear. You must bear with me.
Pray you now, forget and forgive; I am old and foolish.

[Exeunt [all but Kent and Gentleman].

[Gent. Holds it true, sir, that the Duke of Cornwall was so slain? 86

Kent. Most certain, sir.

Kent. Who is conductor of his people?

Kent. As 't is said, the bastard son of Gloucester.

Gent. They say Edgar, his banish'd son, is with the Earl of Kent in Germany. 91

Kent. Report is changeable. 'Tis time to look about; the powers of the kingdom approach apace.

Gent. The arbitrement is like to be bloody.
Fare you well, sir. [Exit.] 96

Kent. My point and period will be thoroughly wrought,

Or well or ill, as this day's battle's fought.] [Exit.

ACT V

SCENE I. [The British camp, near Dover.]

Enter, with drum and colours, EDMUND, REGAN, Gentlemen, and Soldiers.

Edm. Know of the Duke if his last purpose hold,

Or whether since he is advis'd by aught
To change the course. He's full of alteration
And self-reproving; bring his constant pleasure.
[To a Gentleman, who goes out.]

Reg. Our sister's man is certainly miscarried.
Edm. 'T is to be doubted, madam.

Reg. Now, sweet lord, 6
You know the goodness I intend upon you.
Tell me — but truly — but then speak the truth,
Do you not love my sister?

Edm. In honour'd love.

Reg. But have you never found my brother's way 10

To the forfended place?

[Edm. That thought abuses you.

Reg. I am doubtful that you have been conjunct

And bosom'd with her, — as far as we call hers.]

Edm. No, by mine honour, madam.

Reg. I never shall endure her. Dear my lord,
Be not familiar with her.

Edm. Fear me not. 16

She and the Duke her husband!

Enter, with drum and colours, ALBANY, GONERIL, and Soldiers.

[Gon. [Aside.] I had rather lose the battle than that sister

Should loosen him and me.]

Alb. Our very loving sister, well be-met. 20

Sir, this I heard: the King is come to his daughter,

With others whom the rigour of our state
Forc'd to cry out. [Where I could not be honest,

I never yet was valiant. For this business,
It toucheth us, as France invades our land, 25
Not holds the King, with others, whom, I fear,
Most just and heavy causes make oppose.

Edm. Sir, you speak nobly.]

Reg. Why is this reason'd?

Gon. Combine together 'gainst the enemy;
For these domestic and particular broils 30

Are not the question here.

Alb. Let's then determine

With the ancient of war on our proceeding.

[Edm. I shall attend you presently at your tent.]

Reg. Sister, you'll go with us?

Gon. No. 25

Reg. 'T is most convenient; pray you, go with us.

Gon. [Aside.] O, ho, I know the riddle. — I will go. [Exeunt both the armies.

[As they are going out, enter EDGAR [disguised. Albany remains].

Edg. If e'er your Grace had speech with man so poor,

Hear me one word.

Alb. I'll overtake you. — Speak.

Edg. Before you fight the battle, ope this letter. 40

If you have victory, let the trumpet sound
For him that brought it. Wretched though I seem,

I can produce a champion that will prove
What is avouched there. If you miscarry,
Your business of the world hath so an end, 45
And machination ceases. Fortune love you!

Alb. Stay till I have read the letter.

Edg. I was forbid it.
When time shall serve, let but the herald
cry,
And I'll appear again. [Exit.
Alb. Why, fare thee well; I will o'erlook thy paper. 60

Re-enter EDMUND.

Edm. The enemy's in view; draw up your powers.
Here is the guess of their true strength and forces
By diligent discovery; but your haste
Is now urg'd on you.

Alb. We will greet the time. [Exit.

Edm. To both these sisters have I sworn my
love;
Each jealous of the other, as the stung
Are of the adder. Which of them shall I take?
Both? one? or neither? Neither can be enjoy'd,
If both remain alive. To take the widow
Exasperates, makes mad her sister Goneril; 60
And hardly shall I carry out my side,
Her husband being alive. Now then we'll use
His countenance for the battle; which being done,
Let her who would be rid of him devise
His speedy taking off. As for the mercy 65
Which he intends to Lear and to Cordelia,
The battle done, and they within our power,
Shall never see his pardon; for my state
Stands on me to defend, not to debate. [Exit.

SCENE II. [A field between the two camps.]

*Alarum within. Enter, with drum and colours, Lear, Cordelia, and Soldiers, over the stage;
and exeunt.*

Enter EDGAR and GLOUCESTER.

Edg. Here, father, take the shadow of this tree
For your good host; pray that the right may thrive.
If ever I return to you again,
I'll bring you comfort.

Glou. Grace go with you, sir! [Exit [Edgar].]

Alarum and retreat within. Re-enter EDGAR.

Edg. Away, old man; give me thy hand;
away!
King Lear hath lost, he and his daughter ta'en.
Give me thy hand; come on.

Glou. No further, sir; a man may rot even here.

Edg. What, in ill thoughts again? Men must endure
Their going hence, even as their coming hither; 10
Ripeness is all. Come on.

Glou. And that's true too. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. [The British camp near Dover.]

*Enter, in conquest, with drum and colours, ED-MUND; LEAR and CORDELIA as prisoners:
CAPTAIN, Soldiers, etc.*

Edm. Some officers take them away. Good guard,
Until their greater pleasures first be known
That are to censure them.

Cor. We are not the first
Who, with best meaning, have incur'd the worst.
For thee, oppressed king, I am cast down; 5
Myself could else out-frown false Fortune's frown.
Shall we not see these daughters and these sisters?

Lear. No, no, no, no! Come, let's away to prison;
We two alone will sing like birds i' the cage.
When thou dost ask me blessing, I'll kneel
down 10

And ask of thee forgiveness. So we'll live,
And pray, and sing, and tell old tales, and laugh

At gilded butterflies, and hear poor rogues
Talk of court news; and we'll talk with them
too,
Who loses and who wins; who's in, who's
out; 15

And take upon's the mystery of things
As if we were God's spies; and we'll wear out,
In a wall'd prison, packs and sects of great
ones,

That ebb and flow by the moon.

Edm. Take them away.
Lear. Upon such sacrifices, my Cordelia, 20
The gods themselves throw incense. Have I caught thee?

He that parts us shall bring a brand from
heaven,
And fire us hence like foxes. Wipe thine eyes;
The good-years shall devour them, flesh and
fell,

Ere they shall make us weep. We'll see 'em
starv'd first. 25

Come. [Exeunt [Lear and Cordelia, guarded].]

Edm. Come hither, captain; hark.
Take thou this note [giving a paper]; go follow them to prison.

One step I have advanc'd thee; if thou dost
As this instructs thee, thou dost make thy way
To noble fortunes. Know thou this, that men
Are as the time is; to be tender-minded 30
Does not become a sword. Thy great employment

Will not bear question; either say thou 'lt
do't,

Or thrive by other means.

Capt. I'll do 't, my lord.
Edm. About it; and write happy when thou hast done. 35

Mark, I say, instantly; and carry it so
As I have set it down.

[Capt.] I cannot draw a cart, nor eat dried oats;
If it be man's work, I'll do 't. [Exit.]

Flourish. Enter ALBANY, GONERIL, REGAN, [another CAPTAIN] and Soldiers.

Alb. Sir, you have show'd to-day your valiant strain,
And fortune led you well. You have the captives

Who were the opposites of this day's strife;
I do require them of you, so to use them
As we shall find their merits and our safety
May equally determine.

Edm. Sir, I thought it fit
To send the old and miserable king
To some retention [and appointed guard];
Whose age had charms in it, whose title more,
To pluck the common bosom on his side,
And turn our impress'd lances in our eyes Which do command them. With him I sent the Queen,

My reason all the same; and they are ready
To-morrow, or at further space, to appear
Where you shall hold your session. [At this time

We sweat and bleed: the friend hath lost his friend;

And the best quarrels, in the heat, are curs'd
By those that feel their sharpness:
The question of Cordelia and her father
Requires a fitter place.]

Alb. Sir, by your patience,
I hold you but a subject of this war,
Not as a brother.

Reg. That 's as we list to grace him.
Methinks our pleasure might have been demanded,

Ere you had spoke so far. He led our powers,
Bore the commission of my place and person;
The which immediacy may well stand up,
And call itself your brother.

Gon. Not so hot.
In his own grace he doth exalt himself,
More than in your addition.

Reg. In my rights,
By me invested, he compeers the best.

Alb. That were the most, if he should husband you.

Reg. Jesters do oft prove prophets.
Gon. Holla, holla!
That eye that told you so look'd but a-squint.

Reg. Lady, I am not well; else I should answer

From a full-flowing stomach. General,
Take thou my soldiers, prisoners, patrimony;
Dispose of them, of me; the walls are thine.
Witness the world, that I create thee here
My lord and master.

Gon. Mean you to enjoy him?
Alb. The let-alone lies not in your good will.
Edm. Nor in thine, lord.

Alb. Half-blooded fellow, yes.
Reg. [To Edmund.] Let the drum strike, and prove my title thine.

Alb. Stay yet; hear reason. Edmund, I arrest thee

On capital treason; and, in thy arrest,
This gilded serpent. [Pointing to Gon.] For your claim, fair sister,

I bar it in the interest of my wife.
'T is she is sub-contracted to this lord,
And I, her husband, contradict your bans.
If you will marry, make your loves to me,
My lady is bespoken.

Gon. An interlude!
Alb. Thou art armed, Gloucester; let the trumpet sound.

If none appear to prove upon thy person
Thy heinous, manifest, and many treasons,
There is my pledge [throwing down a glove].

I'll prove it on thy heart,
Ere I taste bread, thou art in nothing less
Than I have here proclaim'd thee.

Reg. Sick, O, sick!
Gon. [Aside.] If not, I'll ne'er trust medicine.

Edm. There 's my exchange [throwing down a glove]. What in the world he is
That names me traitor, villain-like he lies.
Call by the trumpet;—he that dares approach,
On him, on you, who not? I will maintain
My truth and honour firmly.

Alb. A herald, ho!
[Edm. A herald, ho, a herald!]
Alb. Trust to thy single virtue; for thy soldiers,

All levied in my name, have in my name
Took their discharge.

Reg. My sickness grows upon me.
Alb. She is not well; convey her to my tent. [Exit Regan, led.]

Enter a HERALD.

Come hither, herald,—Let the trumpet sound—
And read out this.

[Capt. Sound, trumpet!]
[A trumpet sounds.]

Her. [Reads.] "If any man of quality or degree within the lists of the army will maintain upon Edmund, supposed Earl of Gloucester, that he is a manifold traitor, let him appear by the third sound of the trumpet. He is bold in his defence."

[Edm. Sound!]
Her. Again!
Her. Again!

[First trumpet.
[Second trumpet.
[Third trumpet.
[Trumpet answers within.]

Enter EDGAR, at the third sound, armed, with a trumpet before him.

Alb. Ask him his purposes, why he appears
Upon this call o' the trumpet.

Her. What are you?
Your name, your quality? and why you answer

This present summons?
Edg. Know, my name is lost,

By treason's tooth bare-gnawn and canker-bit;
Yet am I noble as the adversary
I come to cope.

Alb. Which is that adversary?
Edg. What's he that speaks for Edmund
Earl of Gloucester?

Edm. Himself; what say'st thou to him?
Edg. Draw thy sword.

That, if my speech offend a noble heart,
Thy arm may do thee justice ; here is mine.
Behold, it is the privilege of mine honours,
My oath, and my profession. I protest, 130
Maugre thy strength, place, youth, and eminence,

Despite thy victor-sword and fire-new fortune,
Thy valour, and thy heart, thou art a traitor ;

False to thy gods, thy brother, and thy father ;
Conspirant 'gainst this high illustrious prince ;
And, from the extremest upward of thy head 138
To the descent and dust below thy foot,
A most toad-spotted traitor. Say thou "No,"
This sword, this arm, and my best spirits are bent

To prove upon thy heart, whereto I speak, 140
Thou liest.

Edm. In wisdom I should ask thy name ;
But, since thy outside looks so fair and war-
like,

And that thy tongue some 'say of breeding breathes,

What safe and nicely I might well delay,
By rule of knighthood, I disdain and spurn. 148
Back do I toss these treasons to thy head ;
With the hell-hated lie o'erwhelm thy heart ;
Which, for thy yet glance by and scarcely bruise,

This sword of mine shall give them instant
way,

Where they shall rest for ever. Trumpets,
speak ! 150

[Alarums. They fight. [Edmund
falls.]

Alb. Save him, save him !

Gon. This is [mere] practice, Gloucester.
By the law of war thou wast not bound to answer

An unknown opposite. Thou art not vanquish'd,

But cozen'd and beguill'd.

Alb. Shut your mouth, dame,
Or with this paper shall I stop it. Hold, sir. — Thou worse than any name, read thine own evil. 156

No tearing, lady ; I perceive you know it.

Gon. Say, if I do, the laws are mine, not thine.

Who can arraign me for 't ? [Exit.]

Alb. Most monstrous ! oh ! —
Know'st thou this paper ?

Edm. Ask me not what I know.

Alb. Go after her ; she's desperate ; govern
her. 161

Edm. What you have charg'd me with, that have I done ;

And more, much more ; the time will bring it out.

'Tis past, and so am I. But what art thou That hast this fortune on me ? If thou 'rt noble, 165

I do forgive thee.

Edg. Let 's exchange charity.
I am no less in blood than thou art, Edmund ;
If more, the more thou 'st wrong'd me.
My name is Edgar, and thy father's son.

The gods are just, and of our pleasant vices 170
Make instruments to plague us.

The dark and vicious place where thee he got Cost him his eyes.

Edm. Thou 'st spoken right, 't is true.
The wheel is come full circle ; I am here.

Alb. Methought thy very gait did prophesy 175

A royal nobleness. I must embrace thee.

Let sorrow split my heart, if ever I

Did hate thee or thy father !

Edg. Worthy prince, I know 't.

Alb. Where have you hid yourself ?
How have you known the miseries of your
father ? 180

Edg. By nursing them, my lord. List a brief
tale ;

And when 't is told, oh, that my heart would burst !

The bloody proclamation to escape,
That follow'd me so near, — oh, our lives'
sweetness !

That we the pain of death would hourly die 185
Rather than die at once ! — taught me to shift
Into a madman's rags, to assume a semblance

That very dogs disdain'd ; and in this habit
Met I my father with his bleeding rings,

Their precious stones new lost ; became his guide, 190

Led him, begg'd for him, sav'd him from despair ;

Never, — O fault ! — reveal'd myself unto him,
Until some half-hour past, when I was arm'd.

Not sure, though hoping, of this good success,
I ask'd his blessing, and from first to last 195

Told him our pilgrimage ; but his flaw'd heart,
Alack, too weak the conflict to support !

'Twixt two extremes of passion, joy and grief,
Burst smilingly.

Edm. This speech of yours hath mov'd me,
And shall perchance do good. But speak you on ; 200

You look as you had something more to say.

Alb. If there be more, more woeful, hold it
in ;

For I am almost ready to dissolve,
Hearing of this.

[Edg. This would have seem'd a period
To such as love not sorrow ; but another, 205

To amplify too much, would make much more,
And top extremity.

Whilst I was big in clamour came there in a
man,

Who, having seen me in my worst estate,
Shunn'd my abhorr'd society ; but then, find-
ing 210

Who 't was that so endur'd, with his strong arms

He fastened on my neck, and bellowed out
As he'd burst heaven ; threw him on my
father ;

Told the most piteous tale of Lear and him
That ever ear received ; which in recounting, 215

His grief grew puissant, and the strings of life Began to crack. Twice then the trumpets sounded,

And there I left him tranç'd.

Alb. But who was this?
Edg. Kent, sir, the banish'd Kent; who in disguise Follow'd his enemy king, and did him service Improper for a slave.] 221

Enter a GENTLEMAN with a bloody knife.

Gent. Help, help, O, help!

Edg. What kind of help?

Alb. Speak, man.

Edg. What means this bloody knife?

Gent. 'Tis hot, it smokes; It came even from the heart of—O, she's dead!

Alb. Who dead? Speak, man. 225

Gent. Your lady, sir, your lady; and her sister

By her is poison'd; she confesses it.

Edm. I was contracted to them both. All three

Now marry in an instant.

Edg. Here comes Kent.

Enter KENT.

Alb. Produce the bodies, be they alive or dead. 230

This judgement of the heavens, that makes us tremble,

Touches us not with pity. [Exit Gentleman.]

—O, is this he?

The time will not allow the compliment

Which very manners urges.

Kent. I am come

To bid my king and master aye good-night. 235

Is he not here?

Alb. Great thing of us forgot!

Speak, Edmund, where's the King? and where's Cordelia?

[The bodies of Goneril and Regan are brought in.]

See'st thou this object, Kent?

Kent. Alack, why thus?

Edm. Yet Edmund was belov'd!

The one the other poison'd for my sake, 240

And after slew herself.

Alb. Even so. Cover their faces.

Edm. I pant for life. Some good I mean to do,

Despite of mine own nature. Quickly send,

Be brief in it, to the castle; for my writ 245 Is on the life of Lear and on Cordelia.

Nay, send in time.

Alb. Run, run, O, run!

Edg. To who, my lord? Who has the office?

Send

Thy token of reprove.

Edm. Well thought on. Take my sword, 250 Give it the captain.

Edg. Haste thee, for thy life.

[Exit Gentleman.]

Edm. He hath commission from thy wife and me

To hang Cordelia in the prison, and

To lay the blame upon her own despair,

That she fordid herself.

Alb. The gods defend her! Bear him hence a while. 255 [Edmund is borne off.]

Re-enter LEAR with Cordelia in his arms
 [GENTLEMAN following].

Lear. Howl, howl, howl! O, you are men of stones!

Had I your tongues and eyes, I'd use them so That heaven's vault should crack. She's gone for ever! 259

I know when one is dead, and when one lives; She's dead as earth. Lend me a looking-glass; If that her breath will mist or stain the stone, Why, then she lives.

Kent. Is this the promis'd end?

Edg. Or image of that horror?

Alb. Fall, and cease!

Lear. This feather stirs; she lives! If it be so, 265

It is a chance which does redeem all sorrows That ever I have felt.

Kent. [Kneeling.] O my good master!

Lear. Prithee, away.

Edg. 'Tis noble Kent, your friend.

Lear. A plague upon you, murderers, traitors all!

I might have sav'd her; now she's gone for ever! 270

Cordelia, Cordelia! stay a little. Ha!

What is't thou say'st? Her voice was ever soft,

Gentle, and low; an excellent thing in woman. I kill'd the slave that was a-hanging thee.

Gent. 'Tis true, my lords, he did.

Lear. Did I not, fellow?

I have seen the day, with my good biting falchion 275

I would have made him skip. I am old now, And these same crosses spoil me. Who are you? Mine eyes are not o' the best. I'll tell you straight.

Kent. If Fortune brag of two she lov'd and hated, 280

One of them we behold.

Lear. This is a dull sight. Are you not Kent?

Kent. The same,

Your servant Kent. Where is your servant Caius?

Lear. He's a good fellow, I can tell you that;

He'll strike, and quickly too. He's dead and rotten. 285

Kent. No, my good lord; I am the very man,—

Lear. I'll see that straight.

Kent.—That, from your first of difference and decay,

Have follow'd your sad steps.

Lear. You are welcome hither.

Kent. Nor no man else; all's cheerless, dark, and deadly. 290

Your eldest daughters have fordone themselves,

And desperately are dead.

Lear. Ay, so I think.

Alb. He knows not what he says; and vain is it

That we present us to him.

Enter a MESSENGER.

Edg. Very bootless.

Mess. Edmund is dead, my lord.

Alb. That's but a trifle here. — 295

You lords and noble friends, know our intent.

What comfort to this great decay may come

Shall be appli'd. For us, we will resign,

During the life of this old majesty,

To him our absolute power; [to Edgar and

Kent] you, to your rights, 300

With boot, and such addition as your honours

Have more than merited. All friends shall taste

The wages of their virtue, and all foes

The cup of their deservings. O, see, see!

Lear. And my poor fool is hang'd! No, no, no life! 305

Why should a dog, a horse, a rat, have life,
And thou no breath at all? Thou'lt come no more,

Never, never, never, never, never!

Pray you, undo this button. Thank you, sir.

Do you see this? Look on her, look, her lips,
Look there, look there! [Dies.

*He died with the conviction
That she is alive.*

Edg. He faints! My lord, my lord! 311

Kent. Break, heart; I prithee, break!

Edg. Look up, my lord.

Kent. Vex not his ghost; O, let him pass!

He hates him

That would upon the rack of this tough world

Stretch him out longer.

Edg. He is gone, indeed. 315

Kent. The wonder is he hath endur'd so long;

He but usurp'd his life.

Alb. Bear them from hence. Our present business

Is general woe. [To Kent and Edgar.] Friends of my soul, you twain

Rule in this realm, and the gor'd state sustain.

Kent. I have a journey, sir, shortly to go. 321

My master calls me; I must not say no.

Edg. The weight of this sad time we must obey;

Speak what we feel, not what we ought to say.

The oldest hath borne most; we that are young

Shall never see so much, nor live so long. 325

[Exeunt, with a dead march.]

THE TRAGEDY OF MACBETH

It is generally agreed that Macbeth was written about 1605 or 1606, though the evidence—tone, style, and metre apart—is far from conclusive. A later limit of date is found in Dr. Simon Forman's statement in his Booke of Plaies that he was present at a performance of the tragedy in the Globe Theatre on April 20, 1610. An earlier limit is afforded by the "twofold balls and treble sceptres" of iv. i. 121, and by the reference in iv. iii. 140-159 to the practice of touching for the king's evil, which James I was induced to revive, both of which point to a date later than the Union of the Crowns in 1603. Of minor indications of date, the most important is the passage in ii. iii. 9-13, which has been interpreted as an allusion to the Jesuit Superior, Henry Garnet, who in his trial in 1606 for complicity in the Gunpowder Plot is recorded to have avowed the doctrine of equivocation.

Macbeth was first published in the First Folio, and on this text all subsequent editions are based. The language of the play is printed with fair accuracy, but the metre is badly mangled. This fact, along with the exceptionally large number of broken lines and the shortness of the whole, has led some to suspect either that Shakespeare did not finish it, or, more plausibly, that it has suffered severe mutilation. Further, a number of passages have been regarded as coming from another hand. Thus at iii. v. 34 and iv. i. 43 the stage directions of the Folio give the names of two songs which are found in full in The Witch of Thomas Middleton (d. 1622). Again, the speeches of Hecate, and the dialogue immediately connected therewith, in iii. v. and iv. i. 39-47, stand apart from the rest of the play in tone and metre, and are unnecessary to the plot, while they much resemble Middleton's work. The theory which best fits these facts is that Middleton was employed to add to the witch scenes of Macbeth, and that at the same time he inserted two songs from his own unsuccessful drama. The following passages have also been suspected, though with less reason: i. ii., i. iii. 1-37, ii. iii. 1-23, iv. iii. 140-159, v. ii., v. viii. 35-75.

Shakespeare's main source was the Historie of Scotland of Holinshed, which follows the Scotorum Historia of Hector Boece (1526), usually through Bellenden's Scottish translation. Of Boece's predecessors, the most important for the story of Macbeth are the earliest, John of Fordun (1360), and Andrew of Wyntoun (c. 1420). Most of the story is taken from Holinshed's account of the reigns of Duncan and Macbeth (A. D. 1034-1057), but certain details are drawn from other parts of the chronicle. Thus several points in the assassination of Duncan, like the drugging of the grooms by Lady Macbeth, and the portents described in ii. iv., are from the murder of Duncan's ancestor Duffe (A. D. 972); and the voice that called, "Sleep no more!" seems to have been suggested by the troubled conscience of Duffe's brother Kenneth, who had poisoned his own nephew.

Of the witches Holinshed says: "The common opinion was that these women were either the weird sisters, that is (as ye would say) the goddesses of destiny, or else some nymphs or fairies, indued with knowledge of prophecy by their necromantical science." To the suggestions here given Shakespeare added details of witch lore gathered from such books as Scot's Discoverie of Witchcraft, and probably also from oral sources; and he bestowed upon the witches, in addition, a symbolical and spiritual significance that brought them into vital relation with the change in the character of Macbeth.

Among the more important features of the tragedy not derived from the chronicle are the first two scenes, the consultations between Macbeth and his wife, the soliloquies, the Porter scene and the knocking at the gate, the appearance of the ghost of Banquo, Macbeth's second interview with the witches, and the sleep-walking scene. On the other hand, the long conversation between Malcolm and Macduff in iv. iii. follows the chronicle closely. It should be said that Holinshed's account contains much purely legendary matter.

ACT I

SCENE I. [A heath.]

Thunder and lightning. Enter three WITCHES.

1. Witch. When shall we three meet again
In thunder, lightning, or in rain?

2. Witch. When the hurlyburly's done,
When the battle's lost and won.

3. Witch. That will be ere the set of sun. 5

1. Witch. Where the place?

2. Witch. Upon the heath.

3. Witch. There to meet with Macbeth.

1. Witch. I come, Graymalkin!

[2. Witch.] Paddock calls: — Anon! 10

All. Fair is foul, and foul is fair;
Hover through the fog and filthy air. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. [A camp near Forres.]

Alarum within. Enter DUNCAN, MALCOLM, Donalbain, LENNOX, with Attendants, meeting a bleeding CAPTAIN.

Dun. What bloody man is that? He can report,
As seemeth by his plight, of the revolt
The newest state.

Mal. This is the sergeant
Who like a good and hardy soldier fought
'Gainst my captivity. Hail, brave friend! 5
Say to the King the knowledge of the broil
As thou didst leave it.

Cap. Doubtful it stood,
As two spent swimmers that do cling together
And choke their art. The merciless Macdon-
wald —

Worthy to be a rebel, for to that 10
The multiplying villainies of nature

Do swarm upon him — from the Western Isles
Of kerns and gallowglasses is supplid;
And Fortune, on his damned quarrel smiling, Show'd like a rebel's whore. But all's too weak; 15

For brave Macbeth — well he deserves that
name —

Disdaining Fortune, with his brandish'd steel,
Which smok'd with bloody execution,
Like Valour's minion carv'd out his passage 20

Till he fac'd the slave;
Which ne'er shook hands, nor bade farewell to
him,

Till he unseam'd him from the nave to the chaps,

And fix'd his head upon our battlements.

Dun. O valiant cousin! worthy gentleman!
Cap. As whence the sun gins his reflection 25

Shipwrecking storms and direful thunders
break,

So from that spring whence comfort seem'd to
come

Discomfort swells. Mark, King of Scotland,
mark!

No sooner justice had, with valour arm'd, Compell'd these skipping kerns to trust their heels, 30

But the Norweyan lord, surveying vantage,
With furbish'd arms and new supplies of men
Began a fresh assault.

Dun. Dismay'd not this

Our captains, Macbeth and Banquo? 35

Cap. Yes;
As sparrows eagles, or the hare the lion.

If I say sooth, I must report they were
As cannons overcharg'd with double cracks; so they

Doubly redoubled strokes upon the foe.

Except they meant to bathe in reeking wounds,
Or memorize another Golgotha, 40
I cannot tell.

But I am faint, my gashes cry for help.

Dun. So well thy words become thee as thy wounds;

They smack of honour both. Go get him surgeons. [Exit Captain, attended.]

Enter Ross and Angus.

Who comes here?

Mal. The worthy thane of Ross. 45

Len. What a haste looks through his eyes!

So should he look

That seems to speak things strange.

Ross. God save the King!

Dun. Whence cam'st thou, worthy thane?

Ross. From Fife, great king;

Where the Norweyan banners flout the sky

And fan our people cold. Norway himself, 50

With terrible numbers,

Assisted by that most disloyal traitor,

The thane of Cawdor, began a dismal conflict;

Till that Bellona's bridegroom, lapp'd in proof,

Confronted him with self-comparisons, 55

Point against point, rebellious arm 'gainst arm,

Curbing his lavish spirit; and, to conclude,

The victory fell on us;—

Dun. Great happiness!

Ross. That now

Sweno, the Norways' king, craves composition;

Nor would we deign him burial of his men 60

Till he disbursed at Saint Colme's inch

Ten thousand dollars to our general use.

Dun. No more that thane of Cawdor shall deceive

Our bosom interest. Go pronounce his present death,

And with his former title greet Macbeth. 65

Ross. I'll see it done.

Dun. What he hath lost, noble Macbeth hath won. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. [A heath near Forres.]

Thunder. Enter the three WITCHES.

1. Witch. Where hast thou been, sister?

2. Witch. Killing swine.

3. Witch. Sister, where thou?

1. Witch. A sailor's wife had chestnuts in her lap,

And munch'd, and munch'd, and munch'd.

"Give me!" quoth I. 5

"Aroint thee, witch!" the rump-fed ronyon cries.

Her husband's to Aleppo gone, master o' the Tiger;

But in a sieve I'll thither sail,

And, like a rat without a tail,

I'll do, I'll do, and I'll do. 10

2. Witch. I'll give thee a wind.

3. Witch. Thou'rt kind.

3. Witch. And I another.

1. Witch. I myself have all the other,

And the very ports they blow, 15

All the quarters that they know

I' the shipman's card.

I'll drain him dry as hay.

Sleep shall neither night nor day

Hang upon his pent-house lid;

He shall live a man forbid. 20

Weary sev'nnights nine times nine

Shall he dwindle, peak, and pine.

Though his bark cannot be lost,

Yet it shall be tempest-tost. 25

Look what I have.

2. Witch. Show me, show me.

1. Witch. Here I have a pilot's thumb,

Wreck'd as homeward he did come.

[Drum within.]

3. Witch. A drum, a drum!

Macbeth doth come. 30

All. The weird sisters, hand in hand,

Posters of the sea and land,

Thus do go about, about;

Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine, 35

And thrice again, to make up nine.

Peace! the charm's wound up.

Enter MACBETH and BANQUO.

Macb. So foul and fair a day I have not seen.

Ban. How far is 't call'd to Forres? What are these

So wither'd and so wild in their attire, 40

That look not like the inhabitants o' the earth,

And yet are on 't? Live you? or are you aught

That man may question? You seem to understand me,

By each at once her choppy finger laying

Upon her skinny lips. You should be women,

And yet your beards forbid me to interpret 45

That you are so.

Macb. Speak, if you can. What are you?

1. Witch. All hail, Macbeth! hail to thee, thane of Glamis!

2. Witch. All hail, Macbeth! hail to thee, thane of Cawdor!

3. Witch. All hail, Macbeth, that shalt be King hereafter! 50

Ban. Good sir, why do you start, and seem to fear

Things that do sound so fair? [To the Witches.]

I' the name of truth,

Are ye fantastical, or that indeed

Which outwardly ye show? My noble partner

You greet with present grace and great prediction 55

Of noble having and of royal hope,

That he seems rapt withal; to me you speak not.

If you can look into the seeds of time,

And say which grain will grow and which will not,

Speak then to me, who neither beg nor fear 60

Your favours nor your hate.

1. Witch. Hail!

2. Witch. Hail!

3. Witch. Hail!

1. Witch. Lesser than Macbeth, and greater. 64

2. Witch. Not so happy, yet much happier.

3. Witch. Thou shalt get kings, though thou be none;

So all hail, Macbeth and Banquo!

1. Witch. Banquo and Macbeth, all hail!
Macb. Stay, you imperfect speakers, tell me more.

By Sinel's death I know I am thane of Glamis;
 But how of Cawdor? The thane of Cawdor lives,

A prosperous gentleman; and to be king
 Stands not within the prospect of belief
 No more than to be Cawdor. Say from whence

You owe this strange intelligence, or why
 Upon this blasted heath you stop our way
 With such prophetic greeting. Speak, I charge you.

Ban. The earth hath bubbles, as the water has,
 And these are of them. Whither are they vanish'd?

Macb. Into the air; and what seem'd corporal melted
 As breath into the wind. Would they had stay'd!

Ban. Were such things here as we do speak about,
 Or have we eaten on the insane root
 That takes the reason prisoner?

Macb. Your children shall be kings.

Ban. You shall be King.

Macb. And thane of Cawdor too; went it not so?

Ban. To the self-same tune and words.
 Who's here?

Enter Ross and Angus.

Ross. The King hath happily receiv'd,
 Macbeth,

The news of thy success; and when he reads
 Thy personal venture in the rebels' fight,
 His wonders and his praises do contend
 Which should be thine or his. Silen'd with that,

In viewing o'er the rest o' the self-same day,
 He finds thee in the stout Norweyan ranks,
 Nothing afeard of what thyself didst make,
 Strange images of death. As thick as hail
 Came post with post; and every one did bear
 Thy praises in his kingdom's great defence,
 And pour'd them down before him.

Ang. We are sent
 To give thee from our royal master thanks;
 Only to herald thee into his sight,
 Not pay thee.

Ross. And, for an earnest of a greater honour,

He bade me, from him, call thee thane of Cawdor;

In which addition, hail, most worthy thane!

For it is thine.

Ban. [Aside.] What, can the devil speak true?

Macb. The thane of Cawdor lives; why do you dress me
 In borrowed robes?

Ang. Who was the thane lives yet;
 But under heavy judgement bears that life Which he deserves to lose. Whether he was combin'd

With those of Norway, or did line the rebel
 With hidden help and vantage, or that with
 He labour'd in his country's wreck, I know
 not;

But treasons capital, confess'd and prov'd,
 Have overthrow'n him.

Macb. [Aside.] Glamis, and thane of Cawdor!

The greatest is behind. [To Ross and Angus.]
 Thanks for your pains.

[To Ban.] Do you not hope your children shall be kings,

When those that gave the thane of Cawdor
 to me

Promis'd no less to them?

Ban. That trusted home
 Might yet enkindle you unto the crown,

Besides the thane of Cawdor. But 't is strange;
 And oftentimes, to win us to our harm,

The instruments of darkness tell us truths,
 Win us with honest trifles, to betray 's

In deepest consequence.

Cousins, a word, I pray you.

Macb. [Aside.] Two truths are told,
 As happy prologues to the swelling act
 Of the imperial theme. — I thank you, gentle-

men.

[Aside.] This supernatural soliciting
 Cannot be ill, cannot be good. If ill,

Why hath it given me earnest of success,
 Commencing in a truth? I'm thane of Caw-dor.

If good, why do I yield to that suggestion
 Whose horrid image doth unfix my hair

And make my seated heart knock at my ribs,
 Against the use of nature? Present fears
 Are less than horrible imaginings.

My thought, whose murder yet is but fantastical,

Shakes so my single state of man that function
 Is smother'd in surmise, and nothing is

But what is not.

Ban. Look, how our partner's rapt.
Macb. [Aside.] If chance will have me King,
 why, chance may crown me,

Without my stir.

Ban. New honours come upon him,
 Like our strange garments, cleave not to their mould

But with the aid of use.

Macb. [Aside.] Come what come may,
 Time and the hour runs through the roughest
 day.

Ban. Worthy Macbeth, we stay upon your leisure.

Macb. Give me your favour; my dull brain was wrought

With things forgotten. Kind gentlemen, your pains

Are regist'ed where every day I turn
 The leaf to read them. Let us toward the King.

[To Ban.] Think upon what hath chanc'd, and,
 at more time,

The interim having weigh'd it, let us speak
 Our free hearts each to other.

Ban. Very gladly.
Macb. Till then, enough. Come, friends.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. [Forres. The palace.]

Flourish. Enter DUNCAN, MALCOLM, Donald-bain, Lennox, and Attendants.

Dun. Is execution done on Cawdor? Are not

Those in commission yet return'd?
Mal. My liege, They are not yet come back. But I have spoke With one that saw him die; who did report That very frankly he confess'd his treasons, Implor'd your Highness' pardon, and set forth A deep repentance. Nothing in his life Became him like the leaving it. He died As one that had been studied in his death To throw away the dearest thing he ow'd, As 't were a careless trifle.

Dun. There's no art To find the mind's construction in the face. He was a gentleman on whom I built An absolute trust.

Enter MACBETH, BANQUO, ROSS, and ANGUS.

O worthiest cousin!

The sin of my ingratitude even now Was heavy on me. Thou art so far before That swiftest wing of recompense is slow To overtake thee. Would thou hadst less deserv'd,

That the proportion both of thanks and payment

Might have been mine! Only I have left to say, More is thy due than more than all can pay.

Macb. The service and the loyalty I owe, In doing it, pays itself. Your Highness' part Is to receive our duties; and our duties Are to your throne and state children and servants,

Which do but what they should, by doing everything

Safe toward your love and honour.

Dun. Welcome hither! I have begun to plant thee, and will labour To make thee full of growing. Noble Banquo, That hast no less deserv'd, nor must be known No less to have done so, let me infold thee And hold thee to my heart.

Ban. There if I grow, The harvest is your own.

Dun. My plenteous joys, Wanton in fulness, seek to hide themselves In drops of sorrow. Sons, kinsmen, thanes, And you whose places are the nearest, know We will establish our estate upon Our eldest, Malcolm, whom we name hereafter The Prince of Cumberland; which honour must Not unaccompanied invest him only, But signs of nobleness, like stars, shall shine On all deservers. From hence to Inverness, And bind us further to you.

Macb. The rest is labour, which is not us'd for you.

I'll be myself the harbinger and make joyful

The hearing of my wife with your approach; as So humbly take my leave.

Dun. My worthy Cawdor!
Macb. [Aside.] The Prince of Cumberland! That is a step

On which I must fall down, or else o'erleap, For in my way it lies. Stars, hide your fires; Let not light see my black and deep desires; The eye wink at the hand; yet let that be Which the eye fears, when it is done, to see.

[Exit.]
Dun. True, worthy Banquo; he is full so valiant,

And in his commendations I am fed; It is a banquet to me. Let's after him, Whose care is gone before to bid us welcome. It is a peerless kinsman. [Flourish. Exeunt.]

SCENE V. [Inverness. Macbeth's castle.]

Enter LADY MACBETH, alone, with a letter.

Lady M. [Reads.] "They met me in the day of success; and I have learn'd by the perfect'st report, they have more in them than mortal knowledge. When I burn'd in desire to question them further, they made themselves air, into which they vanish'd. Whiles I stood rapt in the wonder of it, came missives from the King, who all-hail'd me 'Thane of Cawdor'; by which title, before, these weird sisters saluted me, and refer'd me to the coming on of time, with 'Hail, King that shalt be!' This have I thought good to deliver thee, my dearest partner of greatness, that thou mightst not lose the dues of rejoicing, by being ignorant of what greatness is promis'd thee. Lay it to thy heart, and farewell." Glamis thou art, and Cawdor; and shalt be What thou art promis'd. Yet do I fear thy nature;

It is too full o' the milk of human kindness To catch the nearest way. Thou wouldst be great,

Art not without ambition, but without The illness should attend it. What thou wouldst highly,

That wouldst thou holily; wouldst not play false,

And yet wouldst wrongly win. Thou'dst have, great Glamis,

That which cries, "Thus thou must do, if thou have it";

And that which rather thou dost fear to do Than wishest should be undone. Hie thee hither

That I may pour my spirits in thine ear, And chastise with the valour of my tongue All that impedes thee from the golden round Which fate and metaphysical aid doth seem To have thee crown'd withal.

Enter a MESSENGER.

What is your tidings?

Mess. The King comes here to-night.

Lady M. Thou'rt mad to say it! Is not thy master with him? who, were't so, Would have inform'd for preparation.

Mess. So please you, it is true; our thane is coming. 35

One of my fellows had the speed of him,
Who, almost dead for breath, had scarcely more

Than would make up his message.

Lady M. Give him tending;
He brings great news. [Exit Messenger.]

The raven himself is hoarse
That croaks the fatal entrance of Duncan 40

Under my battlements. Come, you spirits
That tend on mortal thoughts, unsex me here,

And fill me from the crown to the toe top-full
Of direst cruelty! Make thick my blood;

Stop up the access and passage to remorse, 45
That no compunctious visitings of nature

Shake my fell purpose, nor keep peace between
The effect and it! Come to my woman's breasts

And take my milk for gall, you murd'ring
ministers,

Wherever in your sightless substances 50
You wait on nature's mischief! Come, thick

night,
And pall thee in the dunnest smoke of hell,

That my keen knife see not the wound it makes,

Nor heaven peep through the blanket of the dark

To cry, "Hold, hold!"

Enter MACBETH.

Great Glamis! worthy Cawdor!
Greater than both, by the all-hail hereafter! 55

Thy letters have transported me beyond
This ignorant present, and I feel now

The future in the instant.

Macb. My dearest love, 59
Duncan comes here to-night.

Lady M. And when goes hence?
Macb. To-morrow, as he purposes.

Lady M. O, never Shall sun that morrow see!

Your face, my thane, is as a book where men
May read strange matters. To beguile the time,

Look like the time; bear welcome in your eye, 65

Your hand, your tongue; look like the innocent
flower,

But be the serpent under 't. He that's coming Must be provided for; and you shall put

This night's great business into my dispatch,
Which shall to all our nights and days to come

Give solely sovereign sway and masterdom. 70
Macb. We will speak further.

Lady M. Only look up clear;
To alter favour ever is to fear.

Leave all the rest to me. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. [Before Macbeth's castle.]

Hautboys and torches. Enter DUNCAN, Malcolm, Donalbain, BANQUO, Lennox, Macduff, Ross, Angus, and Attendants.

Dun. This castle hath a pleasant seat; the air

Nimble and sweetly recommends itself
Unto our gentle senses.

Ban. This guest of summer,
The temple-haunting martlet, does approve,
By his loved masonry, that the heaven's breath
Smells wooingly here; no jutty, frieze,
Buttress, nor coign of vantage, but this bird
Hath made his pendent bed and procreant cradle.

Where they most breed and haunt, I have ob-
serv'd

The air is delicate.

Enter LADY MACBETH.

Dun. See, see, our honour'd hostess!
The love that follows us sometime is our trouble, 11

Which still we thank as love. Herein I teach

you
How you shall bid God 'ield us for your pains,
And thank us for your trouble.

Lady M. All our service
In every point twice done and then done double

Were poor and single business to contend 15 Against those honours deep and broad wherewith

Your Majesty loads our house. For those of old,
And the late dignities heap'd up to them, 19

We rest your hermits.

Dun. Where's the thane of Cawdor?
We cour'd him at the heels, and had a purpose

To be his purveyor; but he rides well,
And his great love, sharp as his spur, hath holp

him
To his home before us. Fair and noble hostess,
We are your guest to-night.

Lady M. Your servants ever Have theirs, themselves, and what is theirs, in

compt, 25
To make their audit at your Highness' pleasure,

Still to return your own.

Dun. Give me your hand;
Conduct me to mine host. We love him highly,

And shall continue our graces towards him. 30
By your leave, hostess. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII. [Within Macbeth's castle.]

Hautboys and torches. Enter a Sewer, and divers Servants with dishes and service, over the stage.

Then enter MACBETH.

Macb. If it were done when 't is done, then
't were well

It were done quickly. If the assassination
Could trammel up the consequence, and catch

With his surcease success; that but this blow
Might be the be-all and the end-all here, 5

But here, upon this bank and shoal of time, We'd jump the life to come. But in these cases

We still have judgement here, that we but teach Bloody instructions, which, being taught, return

To plague the inventor. This even-handed justice 10

Commends the ingredients of our poison'd
chalice

To our own lips. He's here in double trust:
First, as I am his kinsman and his subject,
Strong both against the deed; then, as his host,
Who should against his murderer shut the door,
Not bear the knife myself. Besides, this Duncan

Hath borne his faculties so meek, hath been
So clear in his great office, that his virtues
Will plead like angels, trumpet-tongu'd, against
The deep damnation of his taking-off;
And pity, like a naked new-born babe
Striding the blast, or heaven's cherubin hors'd
Upon the sightless couriers of the air,
Shall blow the horrid deed in every eye,
That tears shall drown the wind. I have no

spur
To prick the sides of my intent, but only Vaulting ambition, which o'erleaps itself
And falls on the other—

Enter LADY MACBETH.

How now! what news?
Lady M. He has almost supp'd. Why have you left the chamber?

Macb. Hath he ask'd for me?

Lady M. Know you not he has?

Macb. We will proceed no further in this business.

He hath honour'd me of late; and I have bought

Golden opinions from all sorts of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest gloss,
Not cast aside so soon.

Lady M. Was the hope drunk
Wherein you dress'd yourself? Hath it slept since?

And wakes it now, to look so green and pale
At what it did so freely? From this time
Such I account thy love. Art thou afraid
To be the same in thine own act and valour
As thou art in desire? Wouldst thou have that
Which thou esteem'st the ornament of life,
And live a coward in thine own esteem,
Letting "I dare not" wait upon "I would,"
Like the poor cat i' the adage?

Macb. Prithee, peace!
I dare do all that may become a man;
Who dares do more is none.

Lady M. What beast w't, then,
That made you break this enterprise to me?
When you durst do it, then you were a man;
And, to be more than what you were, you
would

Be so much more the man. Nor time nor place
Did then adhere, and yet you would make both.
They have made themselves, and that their fitness now

Does unmake you. I have given suck, and
know

How tender 'tis to love the babe that milks
me;

I would, while it was smiling in my face,
Have pluck'd my nipple from his boneless gums
And dash'd the brains out, had I so sworn as
you
Have done to this.

Macb. If we should fail?

Lady M. We fail!
But screw your courage to the sticking-place,
And we'll not fail. When Duncan is asleep—
Whereto the rather shall his day's hard journey
Soundly invite him—his two chamberlains
Will I with wine and wassail so convince
That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume, and the receipt of reason
A limbeck only. When in swinish sleep
Their drenched natures lie as in a death,
What cannot you and I perform upon
The unguarded Duncan? what not put upon
His spongy officers, who shall bear the guilt
Of our great quell?

Macb. Bring forth men-children only;
For thy undaunted mettle should compose
Nothing but males. Will it not be receiv'd,
When we have mark'd with blood those sleepy two

Of his own chamber and us'd their very daggers,
That they have done 't?

Lady M. Who dares receive it other,
As we shall make our griefs and clamour roar
Upon his death?

Macb. I am settled, and bend up
Each corporal agent to this terrible feat.
Away, and mock the time with fairest show;
False face must hide what the false heart doth know. [Exeunt.]

ACT II

SCENE I. [Within Macbeth's castle.]

Enter BANQUO, and FLEANCE with a torch before him.

Ban. How goes the night, boy?

Fle. The moon is down; I have not heard the clock.

Ban. And she goes down at twelve.

Fle. I take 't, 't is later, sir.

Ban. Hold, take my sword. There's husbandry in heaven;
Their candles are all out. Take thee that too.

A heavy summons lies like lead upon me,
And yet I would not sleep. Merciful powers,
Restrain in me the cursed thoughts that nature
Gives way to in repose!

Enter MACBETH, and a Servant with a torch.

Give me my sword.

Who's there?

Macb. A friend.

Ban. What, sir, not yet at rest? The King's a-bed.

He hath been in unusual pleasure, and Sent forth great largess to your offices.
This diamond he greets your wife withal,
By the name of most kind hostess; and shut up
In measureless content.

Macb. Being unprepar'd,
Our will became the servant to defect;
Which else should free have wrought.

Ban. All's well.
I dreamt last night of the three weird sisters:
To you they have show'd some truth.

Macb. I think not of them ;
Yet, when we can entreat an hour to serve,
We would spend it in some words upon that
business,
If you would grant the time.

Ban. At your kind'st leisure.

Macb. If you shall cleave to my consent, when 't is,
It shall make honour for you.

Ban. So I lose none
In seeking to augment it, but still keep
My bosom franchis'd and allegiance clear,
I shall be counsell'd.

Macb. Good repose the while !

Ban. Thanks, sir ; the like to you !

[Exeunt Banquo [and Fleance].]

Macb. Go bid thy mistress, when my drink is ready,
She strike upon the bell. Get thee to bed.

[Exit [Servant].]

Is this a dagger which I see before me,
The handle toward my hand ? Come, let me clutch thee.

I have thee not, and yet I see thee still.

Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible

To feeling as to sight ? or art thou but

A dagger of the mind, a false creation,

Proceeding from the heat-oppressed brain ?

I see thee yet, in form as palpable

As this which now I draw.

Thou marshall'st me the way that I was going,

And such an instrument I was to use.

Mine eyes are made the fools o' the other senses,

Or else worth all the rest. I see thee still,

And on thy blade and dudgeon gouts of blood,

Which was not so before. There's no such thing.

It is the bloody business which informs

Thus to mine eyes. Now o'er the one half-world

Nature seems dead, and wicked dreams abuse

The curtain'd sleep. Witchcraft celebrates

Pale Hecate's offerings, and wither'd Murder,

Alarm'd by his sentinel, the wolf,

Whose howl's his watch, thus with his stealthy

pace,

With Tarquin's ravishing strides, towards his design

Moves like a ghost. Thou sure and firm set

earth,

Hear not my steps, which way they walk, for

fear

Thy very stones prate of my whereabout,

And take the present horror from the time,

Which now suits with it. Whiles I threat, he lives :

Words to the heat of deeds too cold breath

gives. [A bell rings.]

I go, and it is done ; the bell invites me.

Hear it not, Duncan ; for it is a knell

That summons thee to heaven or to hell. [Exit.]

SCENE II. [The same.]

Enter LADY MACBETH.

Lady M. That which hath made them drunk hath made me bold ;

What hath quench'd them hath given me fire.

Hark ! Peace !

It was the owl that shriek'd, the fatal bellman Which gives the stern'st good-night. He is about it.

The doors are open ; and the surfeited grooms

Do mock their charge with snoures. I have drugg'd their possets,

That death and nature do contend about them,

Whether they live or die.

Enter MACBETH.

Macb. Who's there ? What, ho !

Lady M. Alack, I am afraid they have awak'd,

And 't is not done. The attempt and not the deed

Confounds us. Hark ! I laid their daggers ready ;

He could not miss 'em. Had he not resembled

My father as he slept, I had done 't. — My husband !

Macb. I have done the deed. Didst thou not hear a noise ?

Lady M. I heard the owl scream and the crickets cry.

Did not you speak ?

Macb. When ?

Lady M. Now.

Macb. As I descended ?

Lady M. Ay.

Macb. Hark !

Who lies i' the second chamber ?

Lady M. Donalbain.

Macb. This is a sorry sight.

[Looking on his hands.]

Lady M. A foolish thought, to say a sorry sight.

Macb. There's one did laugh in 's sleep, and one cried, "Murder !"

That they did wake each other. I stood and heard them ;

But they did say their prayers, and address'd

them

Again to sleep.

Lady M. There are two lodg'd together.

Macb. One cried, "God bless us !" and

"Amen" the other,

As they had seen me with these hangman's

hands.

List'n'ing their fear, I could not say "Amen,"

When they did say, "God bless us !"

Lady M. Consider it not so deeply.

Macb. But wherefore could not I pronounce

"Amen" ?

I had most need of blessing, and "Amen"

Stuck in my throat.

Lady M. These deeds must not be thought

After these ways ; so, it will make us mad.

Macb. Methought I heard a voice cry,

"Sleep no more !"

Macb. Sleep no more ! — the innocent

sleep,

Sleep that knits up the ravell'd sleeve of care,

The death of each day's life, sore labour's bath,

Balm of hurt minds, great nature's second

course,

Chief nourisher in life's feast, —

Lady M. What do you mean?

Macb. Still it cried, "Sleep no more!" to all the house;

"Glamis hath murder'd sleep, and therefore Cawdor Shall sleep no more; Macbeth shall sleep no more."

Lady M. Who was it that thus cried? Why, worthy thane,

You do unbend your noble strength, to think as You brainsickly of things. Go get some water,

And wash this filthy witness from your hand.

Why did you bring these daggers from the place?

They must lie there. Go carry them; and sneer The sleepy grooms with blood.

Macb. I'll go no more.

I am afraid to think what I have done; Look on't again I dare not.

Lady M. Infirm of purpose! Give me the daggers. The sleeping and the dead

Are but as pictures; 't is the eye of childhood That fears a painted devil. If he do bleed, I'll gild the faces of the grooms withal; For it must seem their guilt.

[Exit. Knocking within.]

Macb. Whence is that knocking? How is 't with me, when every noise appalls me?

What hands are here? Ha! they pluck out mine eyes.

Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood Clean from my hand? No, this my hand will rather

The multitudinous seas incarnadine, Making the green one red.

Re-enter LADY MACBETH.

Lady M. My hands are of your colour; but I shame

To wear a heart so white. [Knocking.] I hear a knocking

At the south entry. Retire we to our chamber. A little water clears us of this deed;

How easy is it, then! Your constancy Hath left you unattended. [Knocking.] Hark! more knocking.

Get on your nightgown, lest occasion call us And show us to be watchers. Be not lost So poorly in your thoughts.

Macb. To know my deed, 't were best not know myself. [Knocking.]

Wake Duncan with thy knocking! I would thou couldst! [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. [The same.]

Enter a PORTER. Knocking within.

Porter. Here's a knocking indeed! If a man were porter of hell-gate, he should have old turning the key. [Knocking.] Knock, knock, knock! Who's there, i' the name of Beelzebub? Here's a farmer, that hang'd himself on the expectation of plenty. Come in time; I have napkins enow about you; here you'll sweat for't. [Knocking.] Knock, knock! Who's there, in the other devil's name?

Faith, here's an equivocator, that could swear in both the scales against either scale; who committed treason enough for God's sake, yet could not equivocate to heaven. O, come in, equivocator. [Knocking.] Knock, knock, knock! Who's there? Faith, here's an English tailor come hither, for stealing out of a French hose. Come in, tailor; here you may roast your goose. [Knocking.] Knock, knock; never at quiet! What are you? But this place is too cold for hell. I'll devil-porter it no further. I had thought to have let in some of all professions that go the primrose way to the everlasting bonfire. [Knocking.] Anon, anon. I pray you, remember the porter.

[Opens the gate.]

Enter MACDUFF and LENNOX.

Macd. Was it so late, friend, ere you went to bed,

That you do lie so late?

Port. Faith, sir, we were carousing till the second cock; and drink, sir, is a great provoker of three things.

Macd. What three things does drink especially provoke?

Port. Marry, sir, nose-painting, sleep, and urine. Lechery, sir, it provokes, and unprovokes; it provokes the desire, but it takes away the performance; therefore, much drink may be said to be an equivocator with lechery: it makes him, and it mars him; it sets him on, and it takes him off; it persuades him, and disheartens him; makes him stand to, and not stand to; in conclusion, equivocates him in a sleep, and, giving him the lie, leaves him.

Macd. I believe drink gave thee the lie last night.

Port. That it did, sir, i' the very throat on me. But I requited him for his lie; and, I think, being too strong for him, though he took up my legs sometime, yet I made a shift to cast him.

Enter MACBETH.

Macd. Is thy master stirring?

Our knocking has awak'd him; here he comes.

Len. Good morrow, noble sir.

Macb. Good morrow, both.

Macd. Is the King stirring, worthy thane?

Macb. Not yet.

Macd. He did command me to call timely on him.

I have almost slipp'd the hour.

Macb. I'll bring you to him.

Macd. I know this is a joyful trouble to you; But yet 't is one.

Macb. The labour we delight in physics pain. This is the door.

Macd. I'll make so bold to call,

For 't is my limited service. [Exit.]

Len. Goes the King hence to-day?

Macb. He does; — he did appoint so.

Len. The night has been unruly. Where we lay,

Our chimneys were blown down; and, as they say,

Lamentings heard i' the air; strange screams of death,
And prophesying with accents terrible
Of dire combustion and confus'd events
New hatch'd to the woeful time. The obscure bird
Clamour'd the livelong night; some say, the
earth 85

Was feverous and did shake.

Macb. 'T was a rough night.
Len. My young remembrance cannot parallel
A fellow to it.

Re-enter MACDUFF.

Macd. O horror, horror, horror! Tongue nor
heart

Cannot conceive nor name thee!

Macb. What's the matter?
Len. }

Macd. Confusion now hath made his masterpiece! 71

Most sacrilegious murder hath broke ope
The Lord's anointed temple, and stole thence
The life o' the building!

Macb. What is 't you say? The life?

Len. Mean you his Majesty? 75

Macd. Approach the chamber, and destroy your sight

With a new Gorgon. Do not bid me speak;

See, and then speak yourselves.

[Exeunt Macbeth and Lennox.]

Awake, awake!

Ring the alarum-bell. Murder and treason!

Banquo and Donalbain! Malcolm! awake! 80

Shake off this downy sleep, death's counterfeit,

And look on death itself! Up, up, and see

The great doom's image! Malcolm! Banquo!

As from your graves rise up, and walk like sprites,

To countenance this horror! Ring the bell. 85

[Bell rings.]

Enter LADY MACBETH.

Lady M. What's the business,

That such a hideous trumpet calls to parley

The sleepers of the house? Speak, speak!

Macd. O gentle lady,

'T is not for you to hear what I can speak;

The repetition in a woman's ear 90

Would murder as it fell.

Enter BANQUO.

O Banquo, Banquo,

Our royal master's murder'd!

Lady M. Woe, alas!

What, in our house?

Ban. Too cruel anywhere.

Dear Duff, I prithee, contradict thyself,

And say it is not so. 95

Re-enter MACBETH and LENNOX, with ROSS.

Macb. Had I but died an hour before this chance,

I had liv'd a blessed time; for, from this instant,

There's nothing serious in mortality.

All is but toys; renown and grace is dead;

The wine of life is drawn, and the mere lees 100
Is left this vault to brag of.

Enter MALCOLM and DONALBAIN.

Don. What is amiss?

Macb. You are, and do not know 't.

The spring, the head, the fountain of your blood
Is stopp'd; the very source of it is stopp'd.

Macd. Your royal father's murder'd.

Mal. O, by whom?

Len. Those of his chamber, as it seem'd, had done 't. 106

Their hands and faces were all badg'd with
blood;

So were their daggers, which unwip'd we found
Upon their pillows.

They star'd, and were distracted; no man's
life 110

Was to be trusted with them.

Macb. O, yet I do repent me of my fury,

That I did kill them.

Macd. Wherefore did you so?

Macb. Who can be wise, amaz'd, temperate and furious,

Loyal and neutral, in a moment? No man. 115

The expedition of my violent love

Outrun the pauser, reason. Here lay Duncan,

His silver skin lac'd with his golden blood,

And his gash'd stabs look'd like a breach in nature

For ruin's wasteful entrance; there, the murderers, 120

Steep'd in the colours of their trade, their
daggers

Unmannerly breech'd with gore. Who could refrain,

That had a heart to love, and in that heart

Courage to make 's love known?

Lady M. Help me hence, ho!

Macd. Look to the lady.

Mal. [Aside to Don.] Why do we hold our tongues, 125

That most may claim this argument for ours?

Don. [Aside to Mal.] What should be spoken
here, where our fate,

Hid in an auger-hole, may rush and seize us?

Let's away;

Our tears are not yet brew'd.

Mal. [Aside to Don.] Nor our strong sorrow

Upon the foot of motion.

Ban. Look to the lady; 131

[Lady Macbeth is carried out.]

And when we have our naked frailties hid,

That suffer in exposure, let us meet

And question this most bloody piece of work,

To know it further. Fears and scruples shake
us. 135

In the great hand of God I stand, and thence

Against the undivulg'd pretence I fight

Of treasonous malice.

Macd. And so do I.

All. So all.

Macb. Let's briefly put on manly readiness,
And meet i' the hall together.

All.

[Well contented.]

[Exeunt [all but Malcolm and Donalbain].]

Mal. What will you do? Let's not consort with them; 141

To show an unfelt sorrow is an office Which the false man does easy. I'll to England.

Don. To Ireland, I; our separated fortune Shall keep us both the safer. Where we are, 145 There's daggers in men's smiles; the near in blood,

The nearer bloody.

Mal. This murderous shaft that's shot Hath not yet lighted, and our safest way Is to avoid the aim. Therefore, to horse; And let us not be dainty of leave-taking, 150 But shift away. There's warrant in that theft Which steals itself, when there's no mercy left. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. [Outside Macbeth's castle.]

Enter ROSS and an OLD MAN.

Old M. Threescore and ten I can remember well;

Within the volume of which time I have seen Hours dreadful and things strange; but this sore night

Hath trifled former knowings.

Ross. Ah, good father, Thou seest the heavens, as troubled with man's 5 act, Threatens his bloody stage. By the clock 't is day, And yet dark night strangles the travelling lamp.

Is 't night's predominance or the day's shame That darkness does the face of earth entomb, When living light should kiss it?

Old M. 'T is unnatural, Even like the deed that's done. On Tuesday 11 last,

A falcon, tow'ring in her pride of place, Was by a mousing owl hawk'd at and kill'd.

Ross. And Duncan's horses—a thing most strange and certain—

Beauteous and swift, the minions of their race, Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out, 16

Contending 'gainst obedience, as they would make

War with mankind.

Old M. 'T is said they eat each other.

Ross. They did so, to the amazement of mine eyes 19

That look'd upon 't.

Enter MACDUFF.

Here comes the good Macduff. How goes the world, sir, now?

Macd. Why, see you not?

Ross. Is 't known who did this more than bloody deed?

Macd. Those that Macbeth hath slain.

Ross. Alas, the day!

What good could they pretend?

Macd. They were suborn'd.

Malcolm and Donalbain, the King's two sons, 25 Are stolen away and fled; which puts upon them Suspicion of the deed.

Ross. 'Gainst nature still!

Thrifless ambition, that will ravin up Thine own life's means! Then 't is most like The sovereignty will fall upon Macbeth. 30

Macd. He is already nam'd, and gone to Scone

To be invested.

Ross. Where is Duncan's body?

Macd. Carried to Colmekill, The sacred storehouse of his predecessors, 34 And guardian of their bones.

Ross. Will you to Scone?

Macd. No, cousin, I'll to Fife.

Ross. Well, I will thither.

Macd. Well, may you see things well done there,—adieu!—

Lest our old robes sit easier than our new!

Ross. Farewell, father.

Old M. God's benison go with you; and with those 40

That would make good of bad, and friends of foes! [Exeunt.]

SCENE I. [Forres. The palace.]

Enter BANQUO.

Ban. Thou hast it now: King, Cawdor, Glamis, all,

As the weird women promis'd, and, I fear, Thou play'd'st most foully for 't: yet it was said

It should not stand in thy posterity, But that myself should be the root and father Of many kings. If there come truth from them— 5

As upon thee, Macbeth, their speeches shine— Why, by the verities on thee made good, May they not be my oracles as well, And set me up in hope? But hush! no more, 10

Sennet sounded. Enter MACBETH, as King, LADY [MACBETH, as Queen], LENNOX, ROSS, LORDS, [Ladies,] and SERVANTS.

Macb. Here's our chief guest.

Lady M. If he had been forgotten, It had been as a gap in our great feast, And all-things unbecoming.

Macb. To-night we hold a solemn supper, sir, And I'll request your presence.

Ban. Let your Highness Command upon me; to the which my duties 15 Are with a most indissoluble tie For ever knit.

Macb. Ride you this afternoon?

Ban. Ay, my good lord.

Macb. We should have else desir'd your good advice, 20

Which still hath been both grave and prosperous, In this day's council; but we'll take to-morrow.

Is 't far you ride?

Ban. As far, my lord, as will fill up the time 25

To gain the timely inn ; and near approaches
The subject of our watch.

3. Mur. Hark ! I hear horses.

Ban. (Within.) Give us a light there, ho !

2. Mur. Then 't is he ; the rest
That are within the note of expectation 10
Already are i' the court.

1. Mur. His horses go about.

3. Mur. Almost a mile ; but he does usually,
So all men do, from hence to the palace gate
Make it their walk.

Enter BANQUO, and FLEANCE with a torch.

2. Mur. A light, a light !

3. Mur. 'T is he.

1. Mur. Stand to 't. 15

Ban. It will be rain to-night.

1. Mur. Let it come down.

[They set upon Banquo.]

Ban. O, treachery ! Fly, good Fleance, fly, fly, fly !

Thou mayst revenge. O slave !
[Dies. Fleance escapes.]

3. Mur. Who did strike out the light ?

1. Mur. Was 't not the way ?

3. Mur. There's but one down ; the son is fled.

2. Mur. We have lost 20
Best half of our affair.

1. Mur. Well, let's away, and say how much is done. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. [The same. Hall in the palace.]

A banquet prepar'd. Enter MACBETH, LADY MACBETH, ROSS, LENNOX, Lords, and Attendants.

Macb. You know your own degrees ; sit down. At first

And last, the hearty welcome.

Lords. Thanks to your Majesty.

Macb. Ourself will mingle with society

And play the humble host.

Our hostess keeps her state, but in best time 5
We will require her welcome.

Lady M. Pronounce it for me, sir, to all our
friends,

For my heart speaks they are welcome.

First MURDERER [appears at the door.]

Macb. See, they encounter thee with their hearts' thanks. 9

Both sides are even ; here I'll sit i' the midst.
Be large in mirth ; anon we'll drink a measure
The table round. [Approaching the door.]

— There's blood upon thy face.

Mur. 'T is Banquo's then.

Macb. 'T is better thee without than he within.

Is he dispatch'd ? 15

Mur. My lord, his throat is cut ; that I did for him.

Macb. Thou art the best o' the cut-throats ;
yet he's good

That did the like for Fleance. If thou didst
it,

Thou art the nonpareil.

Mur. Most royal sir,

Fleance is scap'd. 24

Macb. Then comes my fit again. I had else been perfect,

Whole as the marble, founded as the rock,
As broad and general as the casing air ;
But now I am cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd, bound
in

To saucy doubts and fears. But Banquo's safe ?

Mur. Ay, my good lord ; safe in a ditch he
bides. 28

With twenty trenched gashes on his head,

The least a death to nature.

Macb. Thanks for that ;

There the grown serpent lies. The worm that's fled

Hath nature that in time will venom breed, 30

No teeth for the present. Get thee gone ; tomorrow

We'll hear ourselves again. [Exit Murderer.]

Lady M. My royal lord,

You do not give the cheer. The feast is sold
That is not often vouch'd, while 't is a-making,

'T is given with welcome. To feed were best at home ; 35

From thence, the sauce to meat is ceremony ;

Meeting were bare without it.

Enter the Ghost of Banquo, and sits in Macbeth's place.

Macb. Sweet remembrancer !

Now, good digestion wait on appetite,

And health on both !

Len. May 't please your Highness sit.

Macb. Here had we now our country's honour roof'd, 40

Were the grac'd person of our Banquo present,
Who may I rather challenge for unkindness

Than pity for mischance.

Ross. His absence, sir,

Lays blame upon his promise. Please 't your Highness

To grace us with your royal company ? 45

Macb. The table's full.

Len. Here is a place reserv'd, sir.

Macb. Where ?

Len. Here, my good lord. What is 't that moves your Highness ?

Macb. Which of you have done this ?

Lords. What, my good lord ?

Macb. Thou canst not say I did it ; never shake 50

Thy gory locks at me.

Ross. Gentlemen, rise : his Highness is not
well.

Lady M. Sit, worthy friends ; my lord is often thus,

And hath been from his youth. Pray you, keep
seat ;

The fit is momentary ; upon a thought 55
He will again be well. If much you note him,

You shall offend him and extend his passion.
Feed, and regard him not. [Aside to Macbeth.]

Are you a man ?

Macb. Ay, and a bold one, that dare look on
that

Which might appall the devil.

Lady M. [Aside to Macbeth.] O proper stuff !
This is the very painting of your fear ;
This is the air-drawn dagger which, you said,
Led you to Duncan. O, these flaws and starts,
Impostors to true fear, would well become
A woman's story at a winter's fire,
Authoriz'd by her grandam. Shame itself !
Why do you make such faces ? When all's done,
You look but on a stool.

Macb. Prithee, see there ! behold ! look ! lo !
how say you ?
Why, what care I ? If thou canst nod, speak
too.

If charnel-houses and our graves must send
Those that we bury back, our monuments
Shall be the maws of kites. [Ghost vanishes.]

Lady M. [Aside to Macbeth.] What, quite unmann'd in folly ?

Macb. If I stand here, I saw him.

Lady M. [Aside to Macbeth.] Fie, for shame !

Macb. Blood hath been shed ere now, i' the olden time,

Ere humane statute purg'd the gentle weal ;
Ay, and since too, murders have been perform'd Too terrible for the ear. The time has been,
That, when the brains were out, the man would
die,

And there an end ; but now they rise again,
With twenty mortal murders on their crowns,
And push us from our stools. This is more strange

Than such a murder is.

Lady M. My worthy lord,
Your noble friends do lack you.

Macb. I do forget.
Do not muse at me, my most worthy friends ;
I have a strange infirmity, which is nothing
To those that know me. Come, love and health to all ;

Then I'll sit down. Give me some wine ; fill full.

Re-enter Ghost.

I drink to the general joy o' the whole table,
And to our dear friend Banquo, whom we miss ;
Would he were here ! to all and him we thirst,
And all to all.

Lords. Our duties, and the pledge.

Macb. Avaunt ! and quit my sight ! let the earth hide thee !

Thy bones are marrowless, thy blood is cold ;
Thou hast no speculation in those eyes
Which thou dost glare with !

Lady M. Think of this, good peers,
But as a thing of custom ; 't is no other.
Only it spoils the pleasure of the time.

Macb. What man dare, I dare.
Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear,
The arm'd rhinoceros, or the Hyrcan tiger ;
Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves
Shall never tremble. Or be alive again,
And dare me to the desert with thy sword ;
If trembling I inhabit then, protest me
The baby of a girl. Hence, horrible shadow !
Unreal mockery, hence ! [Ghost vanishes.]

Why, so ; being gone,
I am a man again. Pray you, sit still.

Lady M. You have displac'd the mirth, broke the good meeting,
With most admir'd disorder.

Macb. Can such things be,
And overcome us like a summer's cloud,
Without our special wonder ? You make me
strange

Even to the disposition that I owe,
When now I think you can behold such sights,
And keep the natural ruby of your cheeks,
When mine is blanch'd with fear.

Ross. What sights, my lord ?

Lady M. I pray you, speak not ; he grows worse and worse ;

Question enrages him. At once, good-night.
Stand not upon the order of your going,
But go at once.

Len. Good-night ; and better health Attend his Majesty !

Lady M. A kind good-night to all !

[Exeunt Lords.]
Macb. It will have blood, they say ; blood will have blood.

Stones have been known to move and trees to
speak ;

Augures and understood relations have
By maggot-pies and choughs and rooks brought forth

The secret'st man of blood. What is the night ?
Lady M. Almost at odds with morning, which is which.

Macb. How say'st thou, that Macduff denies his person

At our great bidding ?

Lady M. Did you send to him, sir ?

Macb. I hear it by the way ; but I will send.
There's not a one of them but in his house
I keep a servant fee'd. I will to-morrow,
And betimes I will, to the weird sisters.

More shall they speak ; for now I am bent to
know,

By the worst means, the worst. For mine own
good

All causes shall give way. I am in blood
Stepp'd in so far that, should I wade no more,
Returning were as tedious as go o'er.

Strange things I have in head, that will to
hand,

Which must be acted ere they may be scann'd.

Lady M. You lack the season of all natures,
sleep.

Macb. Come, we'll to sleep. My strange and self-abuse

Is the initiate fear that wants hard use ;
We are yet but young in deed. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V. [A heath.]

Thunder. Enter the three WITCHES, meeting
HECATE.

1. Witch. Why, how now, Hecate ! you look angrily.

Hec. Have I not reason, beldams as you are,
Saucy and overbold ? How did you dare

To trade and traffic with Macbeth
In riddles and affairs of death ;

And I, the mistress of your charms,

The close contriver of all harms,
 Was never call'd to bear my part,
 Or show the glory of our art?
 And, which is worse, all you have done
 Hath been but for a wayward son,
 Spiteful and wrathful, who, as others do,
 Loves for his own ends, not for you.
 But make amends now; get you gone,
 And at the pit of Acheron
 Meet me i' the morning; thither he
 Will come to know his destiny.
 Your vessels and your spells provide,
 Your charms and everything beside.
 I am for the air; this night I'll spend Unto a dismal and a fatal end;
 Great business must be wrought ere noon.
 Upon the corner of the moon
 There hangs a vaporous drop profound;
 I'll catch it ere it come to ground;
 And that distill'd by magic sleights
 Shall raise such artificial sprites
 As by the strength of their illusion
 Shall draw him on to his confusion.
 He shall spurn fate, scorn death, and bear
 His hopes 'bove wisdom, grace, and fear;
 And, you all know, security
 Is mortals' chiefest enemy.

[Music, and a song.]

Hark! I am call'd; my little spirit, see,
 Sits in a foggy cloud, and stays for me. [Exit.]

[Sing within: "Come away, come away," etc.]

1. Witch. Come, let's make haste; she'll soon be back again. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. [Forres. The palace.]

Enter LENNOX and another LORD.

Len. My former speeches have but hit your thoughts,

Which can interpret farther; only, I say,
 Things have been strangely borne. The gracious Duncan

Was pitied of Macbeth; marry, he was dead:
 And the right-valiant Banquo walk'd too late;
 Whom, you may say, if 't please you, Fleance kill'd,

For Fleance fled; men must not walk too late.

Who cannot want the thought how monstrous
 It was for Malcolm and for Donalbain
 To kill their gracious father? Damned fact!
 How it did grieve Macbeth! Did he not straight

In pious rage the two delinquents tear,
 That were the slaves of drink and thralls of sleep?

Was not that nobly done? Ay, and wisely too;

For 't would have anger'd any heart alive
 To hear the men deny 't. So that, I say,
 He has borne all things well; and I do think
 That had he Duncan's sons under his key—
 As, an 't please Heaven, he shall not—they should find

What 't were to kill a father; so should Fleance.

But, peace! for from broad words, and 'cause he fail'd

His presence at the tyrant's feast, I hear Macduff lives in disgrace. Sir, can you tell
 Where he bestows himself?

Lord. The son of Duncan,
 From whom this tyrant holds the due of birth,

Lives in the English court, and is receiv'd
 Of the most pious Edward with such grace
 That the malevolence of Fortune nothing
 Takes from his high respect. Thither Macduff
 Is gone to pray the holy king, upon his aid
 To wake Northumberland and warlike Siward;
 That, by the help of these—with Him above
 To ratify the work—we may again
 Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights,
 Free from our feasts and banquets bloody knives,
 Do faithful homage and receive free honours;
 All which we pine for now: and this report
 Hath so exasperate their king that he Prepares for some attempt of war.

Len. Sent he to Macduff?

Lord. He did; and with an absolute "Sir, not I,"

The cloudy messenger turns me his back,
 And hums, as who should say, "You'll rue the time

That clogs me with this answer."

Len. And that well might Advise him to a caution, to hold what distance
 His wisdom can provide. Some holy angel
 Fly to the court of England and unfold
 His message ere he come, that a swift blessing
 May soon return to this our suffering country
 Under a hand accus'd!

Lord. I'll send my prayers with him.
 [Exeunt.]

ACT IV

SCENE I. [A cavern. In the middle, a boiling cauldron.]

Thunder. Enter the three WITCHES.

1. Witch. Thrice the brinded cat hath mew'd.

2. Witch. Thrice, and once the hedge-pig whin'd.

3. Witch. Harpier cries; 't is time, 't is time.

1. Witch. Round about the cauldron go;
 In the poison'd entrails throw.

Toad, that under cold stone
 Days and nights has thirty-one Swelt' red venom sleeping got,
 Boil thou first i' the charmed pot.

All. Double, double, toil and trouble;
 Fire burn and cauldron bubble.

2. Witch. Fillet of a fenny snake,
 In the cauldron boil and bake;
 Eye of newt and toe of frog,
 Wool of bat and tongue of dog,
 Adder's fork and blind-worm's sting,
 Lizard's leg and howlet's wing,
 For a charm of powerful trouble,
 Like a hell-broth boil and bubble.

All. Double, double, toil and trouble;
Fire burn and cauldron bubble.

3. Witch. Scale of dragon, tooth of wolf,
Witches' mummy, maw and gulf
Of the ravin'd salt-sea shark,
Root of hemlock digg'd i' the dark,
Liver of blaspheming Jew,
Gall of goat, and slips of yew
Sliver'd in the moon's eclipse,
Nose of Turk and Tartar's lips,
Finger of birth-strangled babe
Ditch-deliver'd by a drab,
Make the gruel thick and slab.
Add thereto a tiger's chaudron,
For the ingredients of our cauldron.

All. Double, double, toil and trouble;
Fire burn and cauldron bubble.

2. Witch. Cool it with a baboon's blood,
Then the charm is firm and good.

Enter HECATE to the other three Witches.

Hec. O, well done! I commend your pains;
And every one shall share i' the gains.
And now about the cauldron sing,
Like elves and fairies in a ring,
Enchanting all that you put in.

[Music and a song: "Black spirits," etc. [Hecate retires.]]

2. Witch. By the pricking of my thumbs,
Something wicked this way comes.

Open, locks,
Whoever knocks!

Enter MACBETH.

Macb. How now, you secret, black, and midnight hags!

What is't you do?

All. A deed without a name.

Macb. I conjure you, by that which you profess,

Howe'er you come to know it, answer me!

Though you untie the winds and let them fight Against the churches; though the yesty waves
Confound and swallow navigation up;
Though bladed corn be lodg'd and trees blown
down;

Though castles topple on their warders' heads;
Though palaces and pyramids do slope
Their heads to their foundations; though the treasure

Of nature's germens tumble all together,
Even till destruction sicken; answer me
To what I ask you.

1. Witch. Speak.

2. Witch. Demand.

3. Witch. We'll answer.

1. Witch. Say, if thou'dst rather hear it from our mouths,

Or from our masters?

Macb. Call 'em; let me see 'em.

1. Witch. Pour in sow's blood, that hath eaten

Her nine farrow; grease that's sweaten
From the murderer's gibbet throw
Into the flame.

All. Come, high or low;
Thyself and office deftly show!

Thunder. First APPARITION, an armed Head.

Macb. Tell me, thou unknown power, —

1. Witch. He knows thy thought.

Hear his speech, but say thou nought.

1. App. Macbeth! Macbeth! Macbeth! beware Macduff;

Beware the thane of Fife. Dismiss me.
Enough.

Macb. What'e'er thou art, for thy good caution, thanks;

Thou hast harp'd my fear aright. But one word more, —

1. Witch. He will not be commanded. Here's another,

More potent than the first.

Thunder. Second APPARITION, a bloody Child.

2. App. Macbeth! Macbeth! Macbeth!

Macb. Had I three ears, I'd hear thee.

2. App. Be bloody, bold, and resolute; laugh to scorn

The power of man; for none of woman born,
Shall harm Macbeth.

Macb. Then live, Macduff: what need I fear of thee?

But yet I'll make assurance double sure,
And take a bond of fate. Thou shalt not live;
That I may tell pale-hearted fear it lies,
And sleep in spite of thunder.

Thunder. Third APPARITION, a Child crowned, with a tree in his hand.

What is this

That rises like the issue of a king,
And wears upon his baby-brow the round
And top of sovereignty?

All. Listen, but speak not to't.

3. App. Be lion-mettled, proud, and take no care

Who chafes, who frets, or where conspirers
are.

Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be until Great Birnam wood to high Dunsinane hill
Shall come against him.

Macb. That will never be.

Who can impress the forest, bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root? Sweet bodements!
good!

Rebellion's head, rise never till the wood
Of Birnam rise, and our high-plac'd Macbeth
Shall live the lease of nature, pay his breath
To time and mortal custom. Yet my heart
Throbs to know one thing: tell me, if your art
Can tell so much, shall Banquo's issue ever Reign in this kingdom?

All. Seek to know no more.

Macb. I will be satisfied! Deny me this,
And an eternal curse fall on you! Let me
know.

Why sinks that cauldron? And what noise is this?

1. Witch. Show!

2. Witch. Show!

3. Witch. Show!

All. Show his eyes, and grieve his heart;
Come like shadows, so depart!

A show of Eight Kings, the last with a glass in his hand; Banquo's Ghost following.

Macb. Thou art too like the spirit of Banquo; down!

Thy crown does sear mine eye-balls. And thy hair,

Thou other gold-bound brow, is like the first. A third is like the former. Filthy hags! 115

Why do you show me this? A fourth! Start, eyes!

What, will the line stretch out to the crack of doom?

Another yet! A seventh! I'll see no more. And yet the eighth appears, who bears a glass

Which shows me many more; and some I see 120

That twofold balls and treble sceptres carry. Horrible sight! Now, I see, 'tis true;

For the blood-bolter'd Banquo smiles upon me,

And points at them for his. [Apparitions vanish.] What, is this so?

1. Witch. Ay, sir, all this is so; but why 125

Stands Macbeth thus amazedly? Come, sisters, cheer we up his sprites,

And show the best of our delights. I'll charm the air to give a sound,

While you perform your antic round; 130

That this great king may kindly say, Our duties did his welcome pay.

[Music. The Witches dance, and vanish [with Hecate].]

Macb. Where are they? Gone? Let this pernicious hour

Stand eye accursed in the calendar! 134

Come in, without there!

Enter LENNOX.

Len. What's your Grace's will?

Macb. Saw you the weird sisters?

Len. No, my lord.

Macb. Came they not by you?

Len. No, indeed, my lord.

Macb. Infected be the air whereon they ride; And damn'd all those that trust them! I did

hear

The galloping of horse; who was't came by? 140

Len. 'Tis two or three, my lord, that bring you word

Macduff is fled to England.

Macb. Fled to England!

Len. Ay, my good lord.

Macb. Time, thou anticipat'st my dread exploits:

The flighty purpose never is o'ertook 145

Unless the deed go with it. From this moment

The very firstlings of my heart shall be

The firstlings of my hand. And even now,

To crown my thoughts with acts, be it thought and done.

The castle of Macduff I will surprise; 150

Seize upon Fife; give to the edge o' the sword

His wife, his babes, and all unfortunate souls

That trace him in his line. No boasting like a fool;

This deed I'll do before this purpose cool.

But no more sights! — Where are these gentlemen?

Come, bring me where they are. [Exit.]

SCENE II. [Fife. Macduff's castle.]

Enter LADY MACDUFF, her SON, and ROSS.

L. Macd. What had he done, to make him fly the land?

Ross. You must have patience, madam.

L. Macd. He had none;

His flight was madness. When our actions do not,

Our fears do make us traitors.

Ross. You know not

Whether it was his wisdom or his fear. 5

L. Macd. Wisdom! to leave his wife, to leave his babes,

His mansion and his titles, in a place

From whence himself does fly? He loves us

not,

He wants the natural touch; for the poor wren,

The most diminutive of birds, will fight, 10

Her young ones in her nest, against the owl.

All is the fear and nothing is the love;

As little is the wisdom, where the flight

So runs against all reason.

Ross. My dearest coz,

I pray you, school yourself; but for your husband,

He is noble, wise, judicious, and best knows 15

The fits o' the season. I dare not speak much

further;

But cruel are the times when we are traitors

And do not know ourselves; when we hold rumour

From what we fear, yet know not what we

fear, 20

But float upon a wild and violent sea

Each way and move. I take my leave of you;

Shall not be long but I'll be here again.

Things at the worst will cease, or else climb upward

To what they were before. My pretty cousin, 25

Blessing upon you!

L. Macd. Father'd he is, and yet he's fatherless.

Ross. I am so much a fool, should I stay longer,

It would be my disgrace and your discomfort.

I take my leave at once. [Exit.]

L. Macd. Sirrah, your father's dead;

And what will you do now? How will you live? 31

Son. As birds do, mother.

L. Macd. What, with worms and flies?

Son. With what I get, I mean; and so do they.

L. Macd. Poor bird! thou 'dst never fear

the net nor lime,

The pitfall nor the gin. 35

Son. Why should I, mother? Poor birds

they are not set for.

My father is not dead, for all your saying.

L. Macd. Yes, he is dead. How wilt thou do for a father?

Son. Nay, how will you do for a husband?

L. Macd. Why, I can buy me twenty at any market. 40

Son. Then you 'll buy 'em to sell again.

L. Macd. Thou speak'st with all thy wit; and yet, i' faith,

With wit enough for thee.

Son. Was my father a traitor, mother?

L. Macd. Ay, that he was. 45

Son. What is a traitor?

L. Macd. Why, one that swears and lies.

Son. And be all traitors that do so?

L. Macd. Every one that does so is a traitor, and must be hang'd. 50

Son. And must they all be hang'd that swear and lie?

L. Macd. Every one.

Son. Who must hang them?

L. Macd. Why, the honest men. 55

Son. Then the liars and swearers are fools; for there are liars and swearers enow to beat the honest men and hang up them.

L. Macd. Now, God help thee, poor monkey!

But how wilt thou do for a father? 60

Son. If he were dead, you 'd weep for him; if you would not, it were a good sign that I should quickly have a new father.

L. Macd. Poor prattler, how thou talk'st!

Enter a MESSENGER.

Mess. Bless you, fair dame! I am not to you known, 65

Though in your state of honour I am perfect.

I doubt some danger does approach you nearly.

If you will take a homely man's advice,

Be not found here; hence, with your little ones.

To fright you thus, methinks, I am too savage; 70

To do worse to you were fell cruelty, Which is too nigh your person. Heaven preserve you!

I dare abide no longer. [Exit.]

L. Macd. Whither should I fly?

I have done no harm. But I remember now

I am in this earthly world, where to do harm 75

Is often laudable, to do good sometime

Accounted dangerous folly. Why then, alas,

Do I put up that womanly defence,

To say I have done no harm?

Enter MURDERERS.

What are these faces?

[1.] Mur. Where is your husband? 80

L. Macd. I hope, in no place so unsanctified

Where such as thou mayst find him.

[1.] Mur. He's a traitor.

Son. Thou liest, thou shag-ear'd villain!

[1.] Mur. What, you egg! 85

[Stabbing him.]

Young fry of treachery!

Son. He has kill'd me, mother:

Run away, I pray you! [Dies.] 85

[Exit [Lady Macduff] crying

"Murder!" [Exeunt Murderers, following her.]

SCENE III. [England. Before the King's palace.]

Enter MALCOLM and MACDUFF.

Mal. Let us seek out some desolate shade, and there

Weep our sad bosoms empty.

Macd. Let us rather Hold fast the mortal sword, and like good men Bestride our down-fallen birthdom. Each new morn

New widows howl, new orphans cry, new sorrows 5

Strike heaven on the face, that it resounds

As if it felt with Scotland, and yell'd out

Like syllable of dolour.

Mal. What I believe I 'll wail,

What know believe, and what I can redress,

As I shall find the time to friend, I will. 10

What you have spoke, it may be so perchance.

This tyrant, whose sole name blisters our tongues,

Was once thought honest; you have lov'd him well.

He hath not touch'd you yet. I am young; but something

You may deserve of him through me, and wisdom 15

To offer up a weak poor innocent lamb

To appease an angry god.

Macd. I am not treacherous.

Mal.

But Macbeth is. A good and virtuous nature may recoil

In an imperial charge. But I shall crave your pardon; 20

That which you are my thoughts cannot trans- pose.

Angels are bright still, though the brightest fell.

Though all things foul would wear the brows of grace,

Yet grace must still look so.

Macd.

I have lost my hopes. Mal. Perchance even there where I did find my doubts. 25

Why in that rawness left you wife and child, Those precious motives, those strong knots of love,

Without leave-taking? I pray you,

Let not my jealousies be your dishonours,

But mine own safeties. You may be rightlly just, 30

Whatever I shall think.

Macd.

Bleed, bleed, poor country!

Great tyranny! lay thou thy basis sure,

For goodness dare not check thee; wear thou thy wrongs;

The title is affeer'd! Fare thee well, lord:

I would not be the villain that thou think'st 35

For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp,

And the rich East to boot.

Mal.

Be not offended;

I speak not as in absolute fear of you.

I think our country sinks beneath the yoke;

It weeps, it bleeds; and each new day a gash 40

Is added to her wounds. I think withal

There would be hands uplifted in my right;
And here from gracious England have I offer
Of goodly thousands. But, for all this,
When I shall tread upon the tyrant's head, 45
Or wear it on my sword, yet my poor country
Shall have more vices than it had before,
More suffer and more sundry ways than ever,
By him that shall succeed.

Macd. What should he be?

Mal. It is myself I mean; in whom I know 50
All the particulars of vice so grafted
That, when they shall be open'd, black Macbeth

Will seem as pure as snow, and the poor state
Esteem him as a lamb, being compar'd 54
With my confineless harms.

Macd. Not in the legions
Of horrid hell can come a devil more damn'd
In evils to top Macbeth.

Mal. I grant him bloody,
Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful,
Sudden, malicious, smacking of every sin
That has a name; but there's no bottom, none, 60
In my voluptuousness. Your wives, your daughters,

Your matrons, and your maids, could not fill up
The cistern of my lust, and my desire
All continent impediments would o'erbear
That did oppose my will. Better Macbeth 65
Than such an one to reign.

Macd. Boundless intemperance
In nature is a tyranny; it hath been
The untimely emptying of the happy throne
And fall of many kings. But fear not yet
To take upon you what is yours. You may 70
Convey your pleasures in a spacious plenty,
And yet seem cold; the time you may so hoodwink.

We have willing dames enough; there cannot be
That vulture in you, to devour so many
As will to greatness dedicate themselves, 75
Finding it so inclin'd.

Mal. With this there grows
In my most ill-compos'd affection such
A stanchless avarice that, were I King,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands,
Desire his jewels and this other's house; 80
And my more-having would be as a sauce
To make me hunger more, that I should forge
Quarrels unjust against the good and loyal,
Destroying them for wealth.

Macd. This avarice
Sticks deeper, grows with more pernicious root
Than summer-seeming lust, and it hath been 85
The sword of our slain kings. Yet do not fear;
Scotland hath fountains to fill up your will,
Of your mere own. All these are portable,
With other graces weigh'd. 90

Mal. But I have none. The king-becoming graces,

As justice, verity, temperance, stableness,
Bounty, perseverance, mercy, lowliness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them, but abound 95
In the division of each several crime, Acting it many ways. Nay, had I power, I should

Pour the sweet milk of concord into hell,
Uproar the universal peace, confound
All unity on earth.

Macd. O Scotland, Scotland! 100

Mal. If such an one be fit to govern, speak.
I am as I have spoken.

Macd. Fit to govern!

No, not to live. O nation miserable,
With an untitled tyrant bloody-sceptred,
When shalt thou see thy wholesome days again,
Since that the truest issue of thy throne 104
By his own interdiction stands accurs'd,
And does blaspheme his breed? Thy royal
father

Was a most sainted king; the queen that bore
thee,

Oftener upon her knees than on her feet, 107
Died every day she liv'd. Fare thee well!
These evils thou repeat'st upon thyself
Hath banish'd me from Scotland. O my breast,
Thy hope ends here!

Mal. Macduff, this noble passion,
Child of integrity, hath from my soul 115
Wip'd the black scruples, reconcil'd my thoughts

To thy good truth and honour. Devilish Macbeth

By many of these trains hath sought to win me
Into his power, and modest wisdom plucks me
From over-credulous haste. But God above 120
Deal between thee and me! for even now
I put myself to thy direction, and Unspeak mine own detraction; here abjure
The taints and blames I laid upon myself,
For strangers to my nature. I am yet 125
Unknown to woman, never was forsworn,
Scarcely have coveted what was mine own,
At no time broke my faith, would not betray
The devil to his fellow, and delight
No less in truth than life; my first false speaking 130

Was this upon myself. What I am truly,
Is thine and my poor country's to command;
Whither indeed, before thy here-approach,
Old Siward, with ten thousand warlike men,
Already at a point, was setting forth. 135
Now we'll together; and the chance of good-
ness

Be like our warranted quarrel! Why are you silent?

Macd. Such welcome and unwelcome things at once

'T is hard to reconcile.

Enter a Doctor.

Mal. Well; more anon. — Comes the King forth, I pray you? 140

Doct. Ay, sir; there are a crew of wretched souls

That stay his cure. Their malady convinces
The great assay of art; but at his touch —
Such sanctity hath Heaven given his hand —
They presently amend.

Mal. I thank you, doctor. 145

[Exit Doctor.]

Macd. What's the disease he means?

Mal. 'T is call'd the evil:

A most miraculous work in this good king ;
Which often, since my here-remain in England,
I have seen him do. How he solicits Heaven, Himself best knows ; but strangely-visited
people,

All swollen and ulcerous, pitiful to the eye,
The mere despair of surgery, he cures,
Hanging a golden stamp about their necks,
Put on with holy prayers ; and 't is spoken,
To the succeeding royalty he leaves
The healing benediction. With this strange virtue,

He hath a heavenly gift of prophecy,
And sundry blessings hang about his throne,
That speak him full of grace.

Enter Ross.

Macd. See, who comes here ?

Mal. My countryman ; but yet I know him
not.

Macd. My ever-gentle cousin, welcome hither.

Mal. I know him now. Good God, betimes remove

The means that makes us strangers !

Ross. Sir, amen.

Macd. Stands Scotland where it did ?

Ross. Alas, poor country !
Almost afraid to know itself. It cannot Be call'd our mother, but our grave ; where
nothing,

But who knows nothing, is once seen to smile ;
Where sighs and groans and shrieks that rend
the air

Are made, not mark'd ; where violent sorrow
seems

A modern ecstasy. The dead man's knell
Is there scarce ask'd for who ; and good men's lives

Expire before the flowers in their caps,
Dying or ere they sicken.

Macd. O, relation
Too nice, and yet too true !

Mal. What's the newest grief ?

Ross. That of an hour's age doth hiss the speaker ;

Each minute teems a new one.

Macd. How does my wife ?

Ross. Why, well.

Macd. And all my children ?

Ross. Well too.

Macd. The tyrant has not batter'd at their peace ?

Ross. No ; they were well at peace when I did leave 'em.

Macd. Be not a niggard of your speech ; how goes 't ?

Ross. When I came hither to transport the tidings,

Which I have heavily borne, there ran a rumour
Of many worthy fellows that were out ;
Which was to my belief witness'd the rather,
For that I saw the tyrant's power a-foot.

Now is the time of help ; your eye in Scotland
Would create soldiers, make our women fight,
To doff their dire distresses.

Mal. Be't their comfort
We're coming thither, Gracious England hath

Lent us good Siward and ten thousand men ;
An older and a better soldier none
That Christendom gives out.

Ross. Would I could answer
This comfort with the like ! But I have words
That would be howl'd out in the desert air,
Where hearing should not latch them.

Macd. What concern they ?
The general cause ? Or is it a fee-grief
Due to some single breast ?

Ross. No mind that's honest
But in it shares some woe ; though the main
part

Pertains to you alone.

Macd. If it be mine,
Keep it not from me, quickly let me have it.

Ross. Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever,

Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound

That ever yet they heard.

Macd. Hum ! I guess at it.

Ross. Your castle is surpris'd ; your wife and babes

Savagely slaughter'd. To relate the manner,
Were, on the quarry of these murder'd deer,

To add the death of you.

Mal. Merciful heaven !
What, man ! ne'er pull your hat upon your brows ;

Give sorrow words. The grief that does not
speak

Whispers the o'er-fraught heart and bids it break.

Macd. My children too ?

Ross. Wife, children, servants, all
That could be found.

Macd. And I must be from thence !

My wife kill'd too ?

Ross. I have said.

Mal. Be comforted.

Let's make us medicines of our great revenge,
To cure this deadly grief.

Macd. He has no children. — All my pretty
ones ?

Did you say all ? O hell-kite ! All ?

What, all my pretty chickens and their dam
At one fell swoop ?

Mal. Dispute it like a man.

Macd. I shall do so ;
But I must also feel it as a man.

I cannot but remember such things were,
That were most precious to me. Did heaven

look on,

And would not take their part ? Sinful Macduff,
They were all struck for thee ! naught that I am,

Not for their own demerits, but for mine,
Fell slaughter on their souls. Heaven rest them
now !

Mal. Be this the whetstone of your sword ;
let grief

Convert to anger ; blunt not the heart, enrage it.

Macd. O, I could play the woman with mine
eyes

And braggart with my tongue ! But, gentle heavens,

Cut short all intermission. Front to front
Bring thou this fiend of Scotland and myself;
Within my sword's length set him; if he escape,
Heaven forgive him too!

Mal. This tune goes manly. ²³⁵
Come, go we to the King; our power is ready;
Our lack is nothing but our leave. Macbeth
Is ripe for shaking, and the powers above Put on their instruments. Receive what cheer you may;

The night is long that never finds the day. ²⁴⁰
[Exeunt.]

ACT V

SCENE I. [Dunsinane. Ante-room in the castle.]

Enter a DOCTOR of Physic and a Waiting GENTLEWOMAN.

Doct. I have two nights watch'd with you, but can perceive no truth in your report. When was it she last walk'd?

Gent. Since his Majesty went into the field,
I have seen her rise from her bed, throw her nightgown upon her, unlock her closet, take forth paper, fold it, write upon 't, read it, afterwards seal it, and again return to bed; yet all this while in a most fast sleep. ⁹

Doct. A great perturbation in nature, to receive at once the benefit of sleep, and do the effects of watching! In this slumb'ry agitation, besides her walking and other actual performances, what, at any time, have you heard her say? ¹⁵

Gent. That, sir, which I will not report after
her.

Doct. You may to me: and 't is most meet you should.

Gent. Neither to you nor any one; having no witness to confirm my speech. ²¹

Enter LADY MACBETH, with a taper.

Lo you, here she comes! This is her very guise; and, upon my life, fast asleep. Observe her; stand close.

Doct. How came she by that light? ²⁵

Gent. Why, it stood by her. She has light by her continually; 't is her command.

Doct. You see, her eyes are open.

Gent. Ay, but their sense are shut.

Doct. What is it she does now? Look, how she rubs her hands. ³¹

Gent. It is an accustom'd action with her, to seem thus washing her hands. I have known her continue in this a quarter of an hour.

Lady M. Yet here 's a spot. ³⁵

Doct. Hark! she speaks. I will set down what comes from her, to satisfy my remembrance the more strongly. ³⁸

Lady M. Out, damned spot! out, I say!—
One: two: why, then 't is time to do 't.—
Hell is murky!—Fie, my lord, fie! a soldier, and afeard? What need we fear who knows it, when none can call our power to account?—
Yet who would have thought the old man to have had so much blood in him? ⁴⁵

Doct. Do you mark that?

Lady M. The thane of Fife had a wife;
where is she now?—What, will these hands ne'er be clean?—No more o' that, my lord, no more o' that; you mar all with this starting. ⁵⁰

Doct. Go to, go to; you have known what you should not.

Gent. She has spoke what she should not, I am sure of that; Heaven knows what she has known. ⁵⁵

Lady M. Here 's the smell of the blood still;
all the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten
this little hand. Oh, oh, oh!

Doct. What a sigh is there! The heart is sorely charg'd. ⁶⁰

Gent. I would not have such a heart in my bosom for the dignity of the whole body.

Doct. Well, well, well,—

Gent. Pray God it be, sir. ⁶⁴

Doct. This disease is beyond my practice;
yet I have known those which have walk'd in their sleep who have died holily in their beds.

Lady M. Wash your hands, put on your nightgown; look not so pale.—I tell you yet again, Banquo 's buried; he cannot come out on 's grave. ⁷¹

Doct. Even so?

Lady M. To bed, to bed! there 's knocking at the gate. Come, come, come, give me your hand. What 's done cannot be undone.—
To bed, to bed, to bed! [Exit. ⁷⁵

Doct. Will she go now to bed?

Gent. Directly.

Doct. Foul whisperings are abroad; unnatural deeds

Do breed unnatural troubles; infected minds ⁸⁰
To their deaf pillows will discharge their secrets.
More needs she the divine than the physician.

God, God, forgive us all! Look after her;
Remove from her the means of all annoyance,
And still keep eyes upon her. So, good-night! ⁸⁵
My mind she has mated, and amaz'd my sight.
I think, but dare not speak.

Gent. Good-night, good doctor.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. [The country near Dunsinane.]

Drum and colours. Enter MENTEITH, CAITH-NESS, ANGUS, LENNOX, and Soldiers.

Ment. The English power is near, led on by Malcolm,

His uncle Siward, and the good Macduff.
Revenge burn in them; for their dear causes
Would to the bleeding and the grim alarm
Excite the mortified man.

Ang. Near Birnam wood Shall we well meet them; that way are they coming. ⁵

Caith. Who knows if Donalbain be with his brother?

Len. For certain, sir, he is not; I have a file
Of all the gentry. There is Siward's son,
And many unrough youths that even now ¹⁰
Protest their first of manhood.

Ment. What does the tyrant?

Caith. Great Dunsinane he strongly fortifies.
Some say he 's mad, others that lesser hate him

Do call it valiant fury; but, for certain,
He cannot buckle his distemper'd cause 15
Within the belt of rule.

Ang. Now does he feel
His secret murders sticking on his hands;
Now minutely revolts upbraid his faith-breach;
Those he commands move only in command,
Nothing in love. Now does he feel his title 20
Hang loose about him, like a giant's robe
Upon a dwarfish thief.

Ment. Who then shall blame
His pester'd senses to recoil and start,
When all that is within him does condemn
Itself for being there?

Caith. Well, march we on 25
To give obedience where 't is truly ow'd.
Meet we the medicine of the sickly weal,
And with him pour we in our country's purge
Each drop of us.

Len. Or so much as it needs
To dew the sovereign flower and drown the 30 weeds.

Make we our march towards Birnam.
[Exeunt, marching.]

SCENE III. [Dunsinane. A room in the castle.]

Enter MACBETH, DOCTOR, and Attendants.

Macb. Bring me no more reports; let them fly all;

Till Birnam wood remove to Dunsinane
I cannot taint with fear. What's the boy Malcolm?

Was he not born of woman? The spirits that
know

All mortal consequences have pronounc'd me
thus: 5

"Fear not, Macbeth; no man that's born of woman

Shall e'er have power upon thee." Then fly, false thanes,

And mingle with the English epicures!
The mind I sway by and the heart I bear
Shall never sag with doubt nor shake with fear.

Enter a SERVANT.

The devil damn thee black, thou cream-fac'd
loon! 11

Where got'st thou that goose look?

Serv. There is ten thousand—

Macb. Geese, villain?

Serv. Soldiers, sir.

Macb. Go prick thy face, and over-red thy
face,

Thou lily-liver'd boy. What soldiers, patch? 15

Death of thy soul! those linen cheeks of thine
Are counsellors to fear. What soldiers, why-
face?

Serv. The English force, so please you.

Macb. Take thy face hence. [Exit Servant.]

Seyton! — I am sick at heart

When I behold — Seyton, I say! — This push 20
Will cheer me ever, or disseat me now.

I have liv'd long enough. My way of life

Is fallen into the sear, the yellow leaf;

And that which should accompany old age,

As honour, love, obedience, troops of friends, 25

I must not look to have; but, in their stead,
Curses, not loud but deep, mouth-honour,
breath

Which the poor heart would fain deny, and dare not.

Seyton!

Enter SEYTON.

Sey. What's your gracious pleasure?

Macb. What news more?

Sey. All is confirm'd, my lord, which was reported. 31

Macb. I'll fight till from my bones my flesh be hack'd.

Give me my armour.

Sey. 'T is not needed yet.

Macb. I'll put it on.

Send out moe horses; skirr the country round;
Hang those that talk of fear. Give me mine

armour. 36

How does your patient, doctor?

Doct. Not so sick, my lord,

As she is troubled with thick-coming fancies,
That keep her from her rest.

Macb. Cure her of that.

Canst thou not minister to a mind diseas'd, 40

Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow,

Raze out the written troubles of the brain,

And with some sweet oblivious antidote

Cleanse the stuff'd bosom of that perilous stuff

Which weighs upon the heart?

Doct. Therein the patient

Must minister to himself. 46

Macb. Throw physic to the dogs; I'll none of it.

Come, put mine armour on; give me my staff.
Seyton, send out. Doctor, the thanes fly from
me. 49

Come, sir, dispatch. If thou couldst, doctor, cast

The water of my land, find her disease,

And purge it to a sound and pristine health,

I would applaud thee to the very echo,

That should applaud again. — Pull 't off, I
say. —

What rhubarb, senna, or what purgative drug,
Would scour these English hence? Hear'st thou of them? 56

Doct. Ay, my good lord; your royal preparation

Makes us hear something.

Macb. Bring it after me.

I will not be afraid of death and bane,

Till Birnam forest come to Dunsinane. 60

Doct. [Aside.] Were I from Dunsinane away

and clear,

Profit again should hardly draw me here.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. [Country near Birnam wood.]

Drum and colours. Enter MALCOLM, old SIWARD

and his Son, MACDUFF, MENTEITH, Caithness, Angus, [Lennox, Ross,] and SOLDIERS, marching.

Mal. Cousins, I hope the days are near at

hand

That chambers will be safe.

Ment. We doubt it nothing.

Siv. What wood is this before us?

Ment. The wood of Birnam.

Mal. Let every soldier hew him down a bough

And bear 't before him; thereby shall we shadow

The numbers of our host and make discovery
Err in report of us.

Soldiers. It shall be done.

Siv. We learn no other but the confident tyrant

Keeps still in Dunsinane, and will endure
Our setting down before 't.

Mal. 'T is his main hope;
For where there is advantage to be given,¹¹
Both more and less have given him the revolt,
And none serve with him but constrained things
Whose hearts are absent too.

Macd. Let our just censures
Attend the true event, and put we on¹⁵
Industrious soldiership.

Siv. The time approaches
That will with due decision make us know
What we shall say we have and what we owe.
Thoughts speculative their unsure hopes relate,

But certain issue strokes must arbitrate;²⁰
Towards which advance the war.

[Exeunt, marching.]

SCENE V. [Dunsinane. Within the castle.]

Enter MACBETH, SEYTON, and Soldiers, with drum and colours.

Macb. Hang out our banners on the outward walls;

The cry is still, "They come!" Our castle's strength

Will laugh a siege to scorn; here let them lie
Till famine and the ague eat them up.

Were they not forc'd with those that should be ours,⁵

We might have met them dareful, beard to
beard,

And beat them backward home.

[A cry of women within.]

What is that noise?

Sey. It is the cry of women, my good lord.

[Exit.]

Macb. I have almost forgot the taste of fears.
The time has been, my senses would have cool'd
To hear a night-shriek, and my fell of hair¹¹
Would at a dismal treatise rouse and stir
As life were in 't. I have supp'd full with horrors;

Direness, familiar to my slaughterous thoughts,
Cannot once start me.

[Re-enter SEYTON.]

Wherefore was that cry?

Sey. The Queen, my lord, is dead.¹⁶

Macb. She should have died hereafter;
There would have been a time for such a word.
To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day²⁰
To the last syllable of recorded time;

And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death. Out, out, brief candle!
Life's but a walking shadow, a poor player
That struts and frets his hour upon the stage²⁵
And then is heard no more. It is a tale
Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury, Signifying nothing.

Enter a MESSENGER.

Thou com'st to use thy tongue; thy story
quickly.

Mess. Gracious my lord,
I should report that which I say I saw,
But know not how to do it.

Macb. Well, say, sir.

Mess. As I did stand my watch upon the hill,
I look'd toward Birnam, and anon, methought,
The wood began to move.

Macb. Liar and slave!³⁵ Mess. Let me endure your wrath, if 't be not so.

Within this three mile may you see it coming:
I say, a moving grove.

Macb. If thou speak'st false,
Upon the next tree shall thou hang alive,
Till famine cling thee; if thy speech be sooth,
I care not if thou dost for me as much.⁴¹

I pull in resolution, and begin
To doubt the equivocation of the fiend
That lies like truth. "Fear not, till Birnam wood

Do come to Dunsinane;" and now a wood⁴⁵
Comes toward Dunsinane. Arm, arm, and out!
If this which he avouches does appear,
There is no flying hence nor tarrying here.

I gin to be aweary of the sun,
And wish the estate o' the world were now undone.⁵⁰

Ring the alarum-bell! Blow, wind! come,
wrack!

At least we'll die with harness on our back.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. [Dunsinane. Before the castle.]

Drum and colours. Enter MALCOLM, old SEY-
WARD, MACDUFF, and their Army, with boughs.

Mal. Now near enough; your leavy screens throw down,

And show like those you are. You, worthy uncle,
Shall, with my cousin, your right noble son,
Lead our first battle. Worthy Macduff and we Shall take upon 's what else remains to do,⁵
According to our order.

Siv. Fare you well.
Do we but find the tyrant's power to-night,
Let us be beaten, if we cannot fight.

Macd. Make all our trumpets speak; give them all breath,

Those clamorous harbingers of blood and death.
[Exeunt. Alarums continued.]

SCENE VII. [The same.]

Enter MACBETH.

Macb. They have tied me to a stake; I cannot fly,

But, bear-like, I must fight the course.
 What's he
 That was not born of woman? Such a one
 Am I to fear, or none.

Enter young SIWARD.

Y. Siw. What is thy name?

Macb. Thou 'lt be afraid to hear it.

Y. Siw. No; though thou call'st thyself a hotter name

Than any is in hell.

Macb. My name's Macbeth.

Y. Siw. The devil himself could not pronounce a title

More hateful to mine ear.

Macb. No, nor more fearful.

Y. Siw. Thou liest, abhorred tyrant; with my sword

I 'll prove the lie thou speak'st.

[They fight and young Siward is slain.]

Macb.

Thou wast born of woman.
 But swords I smile at, weapons laugh to scorn,
 Brandish'd by man that's of a woman born.

[Exit.]

Alarums. Enter MACDUFF.

Macd. That way the noise is. Tyrant, show thy face!

If thou be'st slain and with no stroke of
 mine,

My wife and children's ghosts will haunt me
 still.

I cannot strike at wretched kerns, whose arms
 Are hir'd to bear their staves; either thou,

Macbeth,

Or else my sword with an unbattered edge
 I sheathe again undeeded. There thou shouldst

be;

By this great clatter, one of greatest note
 Seems bruited. Let me find him, Fortune!
 And more I beg not.

[Exit. Alarums.]

Enter MALCOLM and old SIWARD.

Siw. This way, my lord; the castle's gently
 rend'red:

The tyrant's people on both sides do fight;

The noble thanes do bravely in the war;

The day almost itself professes yours,

And little is to do.

Mal.

We have met with foes
 That strike beside us.

Siw.

Enter, sir, the castle.

[Exeunt. Alarums.]

[SCENE VIII. The same.]

Enter MACBETH.

Macb. Why should I play the Roman fool, and die

On mine own sword? Whiles I see lives, the gashes

Do better upon them.

Enter MACDUFF.

Macd. Turn, hell-hound, turn!

Macb. Of all men else I have avoided thee.

But get thee back; my soul is too much charg'd

With blood of thine already.

Macd.

I have no words,
 My voice is in my sword, thou bloodier villain
 Than terms can give thee out!

[They fight. Alarums.]

Thou lovest labour.

Macb.

As easy mayst thou the intrenchant air

With thy keen sword impress as make me
 bleed.

Let fall thy blade on vulnerable crests;

I bear a charmed life, which must not yield

To one of woman born.

Macd.

Despair thy charm;
 And let the angel whom thou still hast serv'd

Tell thee, Macduff was from his mother's womb Untimely ripp'd.

Macb.

Accurs'd be that tongue that tells me
 so,

For it hath cow'd my better part of man!

And be these juggling fiends no more believ'd
 That palter with us in a double sense,

That keep the word of promise to our ear,
 And break it to our hope. I'll not fight with thee.

Macd.

Then yield thee, coward,
 And live to be the show and gaze o' the time.

We'll have thee, as our rarer monsters are,
 Painted upon a pole, and underwrit,

"Here may you see the tyrant."

Macb.

I will not yield,
 To kiss the ground before young Malcolm's feet

And to be baited with the rabble's curse.

Though Birnam wood be come to Dunsinane,

And thou oppos'd, being of no woman born,

Yet I will try the last. Before my body

I throw my warlike shield. Lay on, Macduff,

And damn'd be him that first cries, "Hold,
 enough!"

[Exeunt, fighting. Alarums.]

Retreat. Flourish. Enter, with drum and colours, MALCOLM, old SIWARD, ROSS, the other

Thanes, and Soldiers.

Mal.

I would the friends we miss were safe
 arriv'd.

Siw.

Some must go off; and yet, by these I
 see,

So great a day as this is cheaply bought.

Mal.

Macduff is missing, and your noble son.

Ross.

Your son, my lord, has paid a soldier's debt.

He only liv'd but till he was a man;

The which no sooner had his prowess confirm'd

In the unshrinking station where he fought,

But like a man he died.

Siw.

Then he is dead?

Ross.

Ay, and brought off the field. Your cause of sorrow

Must not be measur'd by his worth, for then
 It hath no end.

Siw.

Had he his hurts before?

Ross.

Ay, on the front.

Siw.

Why then, God's soldier be he!
 Had I as many sons as I have hairs,

I would not wish them to a fairer death.

And so, his knell is knoll'd.

Mal. He's worth more sorrow,
And that I'll spend for him.

Siw. He's worth no more.
They say he parted well, and paid his score;
And so, God be with him! Here comes newer comfort.

Re-enter MACDUFF, with Macbeth's head.

Macd. Hail, king! for so thou art. Behold, where stands

The usurper's cursed head. The time is free, ⁶⁵
I see thee compass'd with thy kingdom's pearl,
That speak my salutation in their minds;
Whose voices I desire aloud with mine:
Hail, King of Scotland!

All. Hail, King of Scotland!
[Flourish.]

Mal. We shall not spend a large expense of
time 60

Before we reckon with your several loves,
And make us even with you. My thanes and kinsmen,

Henceforth be earls, the first that ever Scotland

In such an honour nam'd. What's more to
do,

Which would be planted newly with the time, ⁶⁸
As calling home our exil'd friends abroad

That fled the snares of watchful tyranny;

Producing forth the cruel ministers

Of this dead butcher and his fiend-like queen,

Who, as 't is thought, by self and violent hands

Took off her life; this, and what needful else ⁷¹

That calls upon us, by the grace of Grace,

We will perform in measure, time, and place.

So, thanks to all at once and to each one,

Whom we invite to see us crown'd at Seene. ⁷²

[Flourish. Exeunt.]

THE LIFE OF TIMON OF ATHENS

THERE is no reason to believe that Timon of Athens was either played or printed during the lifetime of Shakespeare. The first edition, and the basis of all later texts, is that in the First Folio. The printing, especially in the matter of metre, is worse than usual; and it is often difficult to know whether a passage is meant by the writer to be prose or verse. The present metrical arrangement is the result of the experiments of a long succession of editors.

The evidence for the date of the play is internal and inconclusive. Metrical tests, which are not so significant as usual on account of the bad printing of the verse, point to a date, "before the opening of the last period, but not long before it." Æsthetic and other characteristics agree with this. Some striking resemblances between the speeches of Lear and Timon suggest a date not long after that of King Lear; so that 1607 may be regarded as a fair approximation.

A gap of eight pages between Timon and Julius Cæsar in the pagination of the First Folio has drawn attention to the fact that the space thus imperfectly filled by the present tragedy would exactly fit Troilus and Cressida, which is actually inserted between the Histories and the Tragedies, and is not listed at all in the table of contents. It is inferred that, when it was observed that Troilus and Cressida is not properly a tragedy, Timon was chosen to fill the gap. This hypothesis slightly strengthens the suspicion which the unevenness of workmanship and inconsistencies in treatment have created as to the complete authenticity of Timon. A number of the more purely literary critics have believed that Shakespeare's hand is discernible throughout; but more recent and more technical scholarship has been divided between the following two theories: that it is an adaptation by Shakespeare of a lost play; or, that it is an unfinished play of Shakespeare's completed by another hand. No trace of such a lost play has been found, though its existence cannot be disproved. The greater number of modern scholars incline to accept the second view. Many attempts have been made to separate the Shakespearean from the non-Shakespearean passages, but it cannot be said that any one division has yet been generally accepted.

Leaving aside the hypothetical lost play, we find the most certain source of the present drama in a parenthetical account of Timon in Plutarch's Life of Marcus Antonius. Shakespeare had read this in North's translation, and he might have found it re-told in Painter's Palace of Pleasure and elsewhere. But Plutarch supplies nothing for the part of the action preceding Timon's poverty, except the suggestion contained in the remark that his misanthropy was due to "the unthankfulness of those he had done good unto, and whom he took to be his friends." In Lucian's dialogue of Timon, or the Misanthrope are found further details, such as the saving of a man from a debtor's prison, the gift of a dowry, the crowd of flatterers, the digging up of gold in the fields, and the visit of a poet on the rumor of Timon's restoration to wealth; and Shakespeare's conception of Timon's character is much more definitely foreshadowed in Lucian than in Plutarch. Lucian does not seem to have been translated into English in the time of Shakespeare, but his dialogues are said to have been accessible in Latin, French, and Italian. The incident of the finding of the gold appears also in a play on Timon printed in 1842 from a manuscript of about 1600. This anonymous production seems to have been academic in origin, and there is no evidence to show that it was ever acted in London, so that on external grounds it would seem unlikely that it was known to Shakespeare. Yet it alone of the pre-Shakespearean accounts of the misanthrope contains a banquet scene and a faithful steward; and it is possible that it is the direct or indirect source of these features in the Shakespearean play. Alcibiades and Apemantus are both mentioned in connection with Timon in the passage in the Life of Marcus Antonius; and, for the former, additional details were obtainable from Plutarch's Life of Alcibiades.

ACT I

SCENE I. [Athens. A hall in Timon's house.]

Enter POET, PAINTER, JEWELLER, MERCHANT, and others, at several doors.

Poet. Good day, sir.

Pain. I am glad you're well.

Poet. I have not seen you long. How goes the world?

Pain. It wears, sir, as it grows.

Poet. Ay, that's well known ;
But what particular rarity ? What strange,
Which manifold record not matches ? See, 5
Magic of bounty ! all these spirits thy power
Hath conjur'd to attend. I know the merchant.

Pain. I know them both ; the other's a jeweller.

Mer. O, 't is a worthy lord.

Jew. Nay, that's most fix'd.

Mer. A most incomparable man, breath'd, as it were, 10

To an untirable and continue goodness ;
He passes.

Jew. I have a jewel here —

Mer. O, pray, let's see 't. For the Lord
Timon, sir ?

Jew. If he will touch the estimate ; but, for that —

Poet. [Reading from his poem.]

"When we for recompense have prais'd the vile, 15

It stains the glory in that happy verse

Which aptly sings the good."

Mer. [Looking at the jewel.] 'T is a good form.

Jew. And rich. Here is a water, look ye.

Pain. You are rapt, sir, in some work, some dedication

To the great lord.

Poet. A thing slipp'd idly from me.
Our poesy is as a gum, which oozes 21

From whence 't is nourish'd. The fire i' the flint Shows not till it be struck ; our gentle flame
Provokes itself, and, like the current, flies

Each bound it chafes. What have you there ? 25 Pain. A picture, sir. When comes your book forth ?

Poet. Upon the heels of my presentment, sir.
Let's see your piece.

Pain. 'T is a good piece.

Poet. So 't is. This comes off well and excellent.

Pain. Indifferent.

Poet. Admirable. How this grace Speaks his own standing ! What a mental power 31

This eye shoots forth ! How big imagination Moves in this lip ! To the dumbness of the gesture

One might interpret.

Pain. It is a pretty mocking of the life. 35
Here is a touch ; is 't good ?

Poet. I will say of it,
It tutors nature. Artificial strife
Lives in these touches, livelier than life.

Enter certain Senators [and pass over].

Pain. How this lord is followed !

Poet. The senators of Athens : happy man ! 40

Pain. Look, moe !

Poet. You see this confluence, this great flood of visitors.

I have, in this rough work, shap'd out a man Whom this beneath world doth embrace and hug

With amplest entertainment. My free drift 45
Halts not particularly, but moves itself

In a wide sea of wax. No levell'd malice

Infects one comma in the course I hold ;

But flies an eagle flight, bold and forth on,
Leaving no tract behind. 50

Pain. How shall I understand you ?

Poet. I will unbolt to you.
 You see how all conditions, how all minds,
 As well of glib and slippery creatures as
 Of grave and austere quality, tender down
 Their services to Lord Timon. His large fortune,
 Upon his good and gracious nature hanging,
 Subdues and properties to his love and tendance
 All sorts of hearts; yea, from the glass-fac'd flatterer
 To Apemantus, that few things loves better
 Than to abhor himself; even he drops down
 The knee before him and returns in peace
 Most rich in Timon's nod.

Pain. I saw them speak together.
Poet. Sir, I have upon a high and pleasant hill Feign'd Fortune to be thron'd. The base o'
 the mount

Is rank'd with all deserts, all kind of natures,
 That labour on the bosom of this sphere
 To propagate their states. Amongst them all,
 Whose eyes are on this sovereign lady fix'd,
 One do I personate of Lord Timon's frame, Whom Fortune with her ivory hand wafts to
 her;
 Whose present grace to present slaves and servants
 Translates his rivals.

Pain. 'Tis conceiv'd to scope.
 This throne, this Fortune, and this hill, methinks,
 With one man beckon'd from the rest below,
 Bowing his head against the steepy mount
 To climb his happiness, would be well express'd
 In our condition.

Poet. Nay, sir, but hear me on.
 All those which were his fellows but of late,
 Some better than his value, on the moment
 Follow his strides, his lobbies fill with tendance,
 Rain sacrificial whisperings in his ear,
 Make sacred even his stirrup, and through him
 Drink the free air.

Pain. Ay, marry, what of these?
Poet. When Fortune in her shift and change of mood
 Spurns down her late beloved, all his dependants
 Which labour'd after him to the mountain's top
 Even on their knees and hands, let him slip
 down,
 Not one accompanying his declining foot.

Pain. 'Tis common.
 A thousand moral paintings I can show
 That shall demonstrate these quick blows of Fortune's
 More pregnant than words. Yet you do well
 To show Lord Timon that mean eyes have seen
 The foot above the head.

Trumpets sound. Enter LORD TIMON, addressing himself courteously to every suitor [a Messenger from VENTIDIUS talking with him; LUCILIUS and other servants following].

Tim. Imprison'd is he, say you?
Mess. Ay, my good lord; five talents is his
 debt,

His means most short, his creditors most strait.
 Your honourable letter he desires
 To those have shut him up; which failing,
 Periods his comfort.

Tim. Noble Ventidius! Well;
 I am not of that feather to shake off
 My friend when he must need me. I do know
 him

A gentleman that well deserves a help,
 Which he shall have. I'll pay the debt, and free him.

Mess. Your lordship ever binds him.

Tim. Commend me to him. I will send him ransom;

And being enfranchised, bid him come to me.
 'Tis not enough to help the feeble up,
 But to support him after. Fare you well.

Mess. All happiness to your honour! [Exit.]

Enter an OLD ATHENIAN.

Old Ath. Lord Timon, hear me speak.

Tim. Freely, good father.

Old Ath. Thou hast a servant named Lucilius.

Tim. I have so. What of him?

Old Ath. Most noble Timon, call the man before thee.

Tim. Attends he here, or no? Lucilius!

Luc. Here, at your lordship's service.

Old Ath. This fellow here, Lord Timon, this thy creature,

By night frequents my house. I am a man
 That from my first have been inclin'd to thrift;
 And my estate deserves an heir more rais'd
 Than one which holds a trencher.

Tim. Well; what further?
Old Ath. One only daughter have I, no kin
 else,

On whom I may confer what I have got.
 The maid is fair, o' the youngest for a bride,
 And I have bred her at my dearest cost
 In qualities of the best. This man of thine
 Attempts her love. I prithee, noble lord,
 Join with me to forbid him her resort;
 Myself have spoke in vain.

Tim. The man is honest.

Old Ath. Therefore he will be, Timon.

His honesty rewards him in itself;
 It must not bear my daughter.

Tim. Does she love him?

Old Ath. She is young and apt.

Our own precedent passions do instruct us
 What levity 's in youth.

Tim. [To Lucilius.] Love you the maid?

Luc. Ay, my good lord, and she accepts of
 it.

Old Ath. If in her marriage my consent be missing,

I call the gods to witness, I will choose
 Mine heir from forth the beggars of the world,
 And dispossess her all.

Tim. How shall she be endowed,
 If she be mated with an equal husband?

Old Ath. Three talents on the present; in future, all.

Tim. This gentleman of mine hath serv'd me
 long;

To build his fortune I will strain a little,
For 't is a bond in men. Give him thy daughter;

What you bestow, in him I'll counterpoise, 145
And make him weigh with her.

Old Ath. Most noble lord,
Pawn me to this your honour, she is his.

Tim. My hand to thee; mine honour on my promise.

Luc. Humbly I thank your lordship. Never may

That state or fortune fall into my keeping, 150
Which is not owed to you!

[Exeunt [Lucilius and Old Athenian].]

Poet. Vouchsafe my labour, and long live your lordship!

Tim. I thank you; you shall hear from me anon.

Go not away. What have you there, my friend?
Pain. A piece of painting, which I do be- 155
seech

Your lordship to accept.
Tim. Painting is welcome.

The painting is almost the natural man;
For since dishonour traffics with man's na- 160
ture,

He is but outside: these pencill'd figures are Even such as they give out. I like your work,
And you shall find I like it. Wait attendance 161

Till you hear further from me.
Pain. The gods preserve ye!

Tim. Well fare you, gentleman; give me your hand.

We must needs dine together. — Sir, your jewel
Hath suffered under praise.

Jew. What, my lord! dispraise?
Tim. A mere satiety of commendations. 165
If I should pay you for 't as 't is extoll'd,
It would unclew me quite.

Jew. My lord, 't is rated
As those which sell would give; but you well
know,

Things of like value differing in the owners 170
Are prized by their masters. Believe 't, dear
lord,

You mend the jewel by the wearing it.
Tim. Well mock'd.

Enter APEMANTUS.

Mer. No, my good lord; he speaks the common tongue,

Which all men speak with him. 175
Tim. Look, who comes here; will you be chid?

Jew. We'll bear, with your lordship.
Mer. He'll spare none.

Tim. Good morrow to thee, gentle Apeman-
tus!

Apem. Till I-be gentle, stay thou for thy good morrow;

When thou art Timon's dog, and these knaves
honest. 180

Tim. Why dost thou call them knaves? Thou know'st them not.

Apem. Are they not Athenians?

Tim. Yes.

Apem. Then I repent not.

Jew. You know me, Apemantus? 185

Apem. Thou know'st I do; I call'd thee by thy name.

Tim. Thou art proud, Apemantus.

Apem. Of nothing so much as that I am not like Timon. 190

Tim. Whither art going?

Apem. To knock out an honest Athenian's brains.

Tim. That's a deed thou 'lt die for.

Apem. Right, if doing nothing be death by the law. 195

Tim. How lik'st thou this picture, Apeman-
tus?

Apem. The best, for the innocence.

Tim. Wrought he not well that painted it? 200

Apem. He wrought better that made the painter; and yet he's but a filthy piece of work.

Pain. You're a dog.

Apem. Thy mother's of my generation;
what's she, if I be a dog? 205

Tim. Wilt dine with me, Apemantus?

Apem. No; I eat not lords.

Tim. An thou shouldst, thou 'dst anger ladies.

Apem. O, they eat lords; so they come by great bellies. 210

Tim. That's a lascivious apprehension.
Apem. So thou apprehend'st it. Take it for thy labour.

Tim. How dost thou like this jewel, Apemantus? 215

Apem. Not so well as plain-dealing, which will not cost a man a doit.

Tim. What dost thou think 't is worth?
Apem. Not worth my thinking. How now, poet! 220

Poet. How now, philosopher!

Apem. Thou liest.

Poet. Art not one?

Apem. Yes.

Poet. Then I lie not.

Apem. Art not a poet?

Poet. Yes.

Apem. Then thou liest. Look in thy last work, where thou hast feign'd him a worthy fellow.

Poet. That's not feign'd; he is so. 230

Apem. Yes, he is worthy of thee, and to pay thee for thy labour. He that loves to be flattered is worthy o' the flatterer. Heavens, that I were a lord!

Tim. What wouldst do then, Apemantus? 235

Apem. E'en as Apemantus does now; hate a lord with my heart.

Tim. What, thyself?

Apem. Ay.

Tim. Wherefore?

Apem. That I had my angry will to be a lord. Art not thou a merchant? 240

Mer. Ay, Apemantus.

Apem. Traffic confound thee, if the gods will not! 245

Mer. If traffic do it, the gods do it.

Apem. Traffic's thy god; and thy god confound thee!

Trumpet sounds. Enter a MESSENGER.

Tim. What trumpet's that?

Mess. 'Tis Alcibiades, and some twenty horse,

All of companionship.

Tim. Pray, entertain them; give them guide to us. [Ereunt some Attendants.]

You must needs dine with me; go not you hence

Till I have thank'd you. When dinner's done, Show me this piece. I am joyful of your sights.

Enter ALCIBIADES, with the rest.

Most welcome, sir!

Apem. So, so, there!

Aches contract and starve your supple joints! That there should be small love 'mongst these sweet knaves,

And all this courtesy! The strain of man's bred out

Into baboon and monkey.

Alcib. Sir, you have sav'd my longing, and I feed

Most hungrily on your sight.

Tim. Right welcome, sir! Ere we depart, we'll share a bounteous time In different pleasures. Pray you, let us in.

[Ereunt [all but Apemantus].]

Enter two LORDS.

1. Lord. What time o' day is 't, Apemantus?

Apem. Time to be honest.

1. Lord. That time serves still.

Apem. The more accursed thou, that still omitt'st it.

2. Lord. Thou art going to Lord Timon's feast?

Apem. Ay, to see meat fill knaves, and wine heat fools.

2. Lord. Fare thee well, fare thee well.

Apem. Thou art a fool to bid me farewell twice.

2. Lord. Why, Apemantus?

Apem. Shouldst have kept one to thyself, for I mean to give thee none.

1. Lord. Hang thyself!

Apem. No, I will do nothing at thy bidding; make thy requests to thy friend.

2. Lord. Away, unpeaceable dog, or I'll spurn thee hence!

Apem. I will fly, like a dog, the heels o' the ass.

1. Lord. He's opposite to humanity. Come, shall we in

And taste Lord Timon's bounty? He outgoes

The very heart of kindness.

2. Lord. He pours it out: Plutus, the god of gold,

Is but his steward. No meed, but he repays Sevenfold above itself; no gift to him,

But breeds the giver a return exceeding All use of quittance.

1. Lord. The noblest mind he carries That ever govern'd man.

2. Lord. Long may he live in fortunes! Shall we in?

1. Lord. I'll keep you company. [Ereunt.]

[SCENE II. A banqueting-room in Timon's house.]

Hautboys playing loud music. A great banquet serv'd in; [FLAVIUS and others attending;] then enter LORD TIMON, the States, the Athenian LORDS, [ALCIBIADES,] and VENTIDIUS. Then comes, dropping after all, APEMANTUS, discontentedly, like himself.

Ven. Most honoured Timon, It hath pleas'd the gods to remember my father's age,

And call him to long peace.

He is gone happy, and has left me rich.

Then, as in grateful virtue I am bound To your free heart, I do return those talents,

Doubled with thanks and service, from whose help I deriv'd liberty.

Tim. O, by no means, Honest Ventidius. You mistake my love;

I gave it freely ever; and there's none Can truly say he gives, if he receives.

If our betters play at that game, we must not dare

To imitate them; faults that are rich are fair.

Ven. A noble spirit!

Tim. Nay, my lords, [They all stand ceremoniously looking on Timon.]

Ceremony was but devis'd at first To set a gloss on faint deeds, hollow welcomes,

Recanting goodness, sorry ere 't is shown; But where there is true friendship, there needs none.

Pray, sit; more welcome are ye to my fortunes

Than my fortunes to me. [They sit.]

1. Lord. My lord, we always have confess'd it.

Apem. Ho, ho, confess'd it! Hang'd it, have you not?

Tim. O, Apemantus, you are welcome.

Apem. No; You shall not make me welcome.

I come to have thee thrust me out of doors.

Tim. Fie, thou'rt a churl. Ye've got a humour there

Does not become a man; 't is much to blame.

They say, my lords, "ira furor brevis est;" but yond man is ever angry. Go, let him have a table by himself, for he does neither affect company, nor is he fit for 't, indeed.

Apem. Let me stay at thine apperil, Timon. I come to observe; I give thee warning on 't.

Tim. I take no heed of thee; thou'rt an Athenian, therefore welcome. I myself would have no power; prithee, let my meat make thee silent.

Apem. I scorn thy meat; 't would choke me, for I should ne'er flatter thee. O you gods, what a number of men eats Timon, and he sees 'em not! It grieves me to see so many dip their meat in one man's blood ; and all the madness is, he cheers them up too. 43

I wonder men dare trust themselves with men. Methinks they should invite them without knives ;

Good for their meat, and safer for their lives. 46
There's much example for 't ; the fellow that sits next him now, parts bread with him, pledges the breath of him in a divided draught, is the readiest man to kill him ; 't has been proved. If I were a huge man, I should fear to drink at meals, 51

Lest they should spy my windpipe's dangerous notes.

Great men should drink with harness on their throats.

Tim. My lord, in heart ; and let the health go round. 54

2. Lord. Let it flow this way, my good lord.

Apem. Flow this way ! A brave fellow ! he keeps his tides well. Those healths will make thee and thy state look ill, Timon. Here's that which is too weak to be a sinner, honest water, which ne'er left man i' the mire. 60
This and my food are equals ; there's no odds. Feasts are too proud to give thanks to the gods.

Apemantus' grace.

Immortal gods, I crave no pelf ;
I pray for no man but myself. 65

Grant I may never prove so fond,
To trust man on his oath or bond ;
Or a harlot, for her weeping ;
Or a dog, that seems a-sleeping ;
Or a keeper with my flattery ;
Or my friends, if I should need 'em. 70
Amen. So fall to 't.

Rich men sin, and I eat root.

[Eats and drinks.]

Much good dich thy good heart, Apemantus !
Tim. Captain Alcibiades, your heart's in the field now. 75

Alcib. My heart is ever at your service, my lord.

Tim. You had rather be at a breakfast of enemies than a dinner of friends. 79

Alcib. So they were bleeding-new, my lord, there's no meat like 'em. I could wish my best friend at such a feast.

Apem. Would all those flatterers were thine enemies then, that then thou mightst kill 'em and bid me to 'em ! 85

1. Lord. Might we but have that happiness, my lord, that you would once use our hearts, whereby we might express some part of our zeals, we should think ourselves for ever perfect. 90

Tim. O, no doubt, my good friends, but the gods themselves have provided that I shall have much help from you ; how had you been my friends else ? Why have you that charitable title from thousands, did not you chiefly belong to my heart ? I have told more of you to 95 myself than you can with modesty speak in your own behalf ; and thus far I confirm you. O you gods, think I, what need we have any friends, if we should ne'er have need of 'em ? They were the most needless creatures living, 100 should we ne'er have use for 'em, and would most resemble sweet instruments hung up in cases that keep their sounds to themselves. Why, I have often wish'd myself poorer, that I might come nearer to you. We are born to 105 do benefits ; and what better or properer can we call our own than the riches of our friends ? O, what a precious comfort 'tis, to have so many, like brothers, commanding one another's fortunes ! O joy, e'en made away ere 't can be born ! Mine eyes cannot hold out water, 110 methinks ; to forget their faults, I drink to you.

Apem. Thou weep'st to make them drink, Timon.

2. Lord. Joy had the like conception in our eyes, 115

And at that instant like a babe sprung up.

Apem. Ho, ho ! I laugh to think that babe a bastard.

3. Lord. I promise you, my lord, you mov'd me much.

Apem. Much ! [Tucket, within.]

Tim. What means that trumpet ?

Enter a SERVANT.

How now ? 120
Serv. Please you, my lord, there are certain ladies most desirous of admittance.

Tim. Ladies ! what are their wills ?

Serv. There comes with them a forerunner, my lord, which bears that office, to signify their pleasures. 125

Tim. I pray, let them be admitted.

Enter CUPID.

Cup. Hail to thee, worthy Timon, and to all That of his bounties taste ! The five best senses

Acknowledge thee their patron, and come freely

To gratulate thy plenteous bosom. The ear, 131
Taste, touch, and smell, pleas'd from thy table rise ;

They only now come but to feast thine eyes.

Tim. They're welcome all ; let 'em have kind admittance :

Music, make their welcome ! [Exit Cupid.] 135

1. Lord. You see, my lord, how ample you're belov'd.

[Music. Re-enter Cupid, with a mask of LADIES, as Amazons, with lutes in their hands, dancing and playing.]

Apem. Hoy-day, what a sweep of vanity comes this way !

They dance ! they are mad women.

Like madness is the glory of this life,

As this pomp shows to a little oil and root. 140

We make ourselves fools to disport ourselves,

And spend our flatteries to drink those men

Upon whose age we void it up again

With poisonous spite and envy.

Who lives that's not depraved or depraves ? 145

Who dies, that bears not one spurn to their graves

Of their friends' gift?

I should fear those that dance before me now
Would one day stamp upon me; 't has been
done;

Men shut their doors against a setting sun. 150

The Lords rise from table, with much adoring of Timon; and to show their loves, each singles out an Amazon, and all dance, men with women, a lofty strain or two to the hautboys, and cease.

Tim. You have done our pleasures much grace, fair ladies,
Set a fair fashion on our entertainment,
Which was not half so beautiful and kind.
You have added worth unto 't and lustre,
And entertain'd me with mine own device; 155
I am to thank you for 't.

1. [Lady]. My lord, you take us even at the best.

Apem. Faith, for the worst is filthy, and would not hold taking, I doubt me.

Tim. Ladies, there is an idle banquet attends
you; 160

Please you to dispose yourselves.

All Ladies. Most thankfully, my lord.
[Exeunt [Cupid and Ladies].]

Tim. Flavius.

Flav. My lord?

Tim. The little casket bring me hither.
Flav. Yes, my lord. — More jewels yet! 165

[Aside.]

There is no crossing him in 's humour;
Else I should tell him, well, i' faith, I should;
When all 's spent, he 'd be cross'd then, an he could.

'T is pity bounty had not eyes behind,
That man might ne'er be wretched for his mind. [Exit. 170]

1. Lord. Where be our men?

Serv. Here, my lord, in readiness.

2. Lord. Our horses!

[Re-enter FLAVIUS, with the casket.]

Tim. O my friends,
I have one word to say to you. Look you, my good lord,

I must entreat you honour me so much 175
As to advance this jewel. Accept it and wear
it,

Kind my lord.

1. Lord. I am so far already in your gifts, —
All. So are we all.

Enter a SERVANT.

Serv. My lord, there are certain nobles of the Senate 180

Newly alighted, and come to visit you.

Tim. They are fairly welcome.

Flav. I beseech your honour,
Vouchsafe me a word; it does concern you near.

Tim. Near! why then, another time I'll hear thee.

I prithee, let 's be provided to show them entertainment. 185

Flav. [Aside.] I scarce know how.

Enter a second SERVANT.

[2.] Serv. May it please your honour, Lord
Lucius,

Out of his free love, hath presented to you
Four milk-white horses, trapp'd in silver.

Tim. I shall accept them fairly; let the presents 190
Be worthily entertain'd.

Enter a third SERVANT.

How now! what news?

3. Serv. Please you, my lord, that honourable gentleman, Lord Lucullus, entreats your company to-morrow to hunt with him, and has sent your honour two brace of greyhounds. 195

Tim. I'll hunt with him; and let them be receiv'd,
Not without fair reward.

Flav. [Aside.] What will this come to?
He commands us to provide, and give great
gifts,

And all out of an empty coffer;
Nor will he know his purse, or yield me this, 200
To show him what a beggar his heart is,
Being of no power to make his wishes good.
His promises fly so beyond his state
That what he speaks is all in debt; he owes
For every word. He is so kind that he now 205 Pays interest for 't; his land 's put to their books.

Well, would I were gently put out of office
Before I were forc'd out!
Happier is he that has no friend to feed
Than such that do e'en enemies exceed. 210
I bleed inwardly for my lord. [Exit.]

Tim. You do yourselves
Much wrong, you bate too much of your own merits.

Here, my lord, a trifle of our love.

2. Lord. With more than common thanks I will receive it.

3. Lord. O, he 's the very soul of bounty! 215
Tim. And now I remember, my lord, you gave

Good words the other day of a bay courser
I rode on. 'T is yours, because you lik'd it.

1. Lord. O, I beseech you, pardon me, my lord, in that.

Tim. You may take my word, my lord; I know, no man 220
Can justly praise but what he does affect.

I weigh my friend's affection with mine own;
I'll tell you true. I'll call to you.

All Lords. O, none so welcome.
Tim. I take all and your several visita-
tions

So kind to heart, 't is not enough to give; 225
Methinks, I could deal kingdoms to my friends,
And ne'er be weary. Alcibiades,

Thou art a soldier, therefore seldom rich.
It comes in charity to thee: for all thy living
Is 'mongst the dead, and all the lands thou hast 230

Lie in a pitch'd field.

Alcib. Ay, defil'd land, my lord,

1. Lord. We are so virtuously bound —

Tim. Am I to you.
 2. Lord. So infinitely endear'd —

Tim. All to you. Lights, more lights!
 1. Lord. The best of happiness,
 Honour, and fortunes, keep with you, Lord
 Timon!

Tim. Ready for his friends.
 [Exeunt [all but Apemantus and
 Timon].

Apem. What a coil 's here!
 Serving of becks and jutting-out of bums!
 I doubt whether their legs be worth the sums
 That are given for 'em. Friendship 's full of dregs;
 Methinks, false hearts should never have sound legs.

Thus honest fools lay out their wealth on curtsies.

Tim. Now, Apemantus, if thou wert not sullen, I would be good to thee.

Apem. No, I'll nothing; for if I should be brib'd too, there would be none left to rail upon thee, and then thou wouldst sin the faster. Thou giv'st so long, Timon, I fear me thou wilt give away thyself in paper shortly. What needs these feasts, pomps, and vain-glories?

Tim. Nay, an you begin to rail on society once, I am sworn not to give regard to you. Farewell; and come with better music. [Exit.

Apem. So;
 Thou wilt not hear me now. Thou shalt not, then;

I'll lock thy heaven from thee.
 O, that men's ears should be
 To counsel deaf, but not to flattery! [Exit.

[ACT II]

[SCENE I. A Senator's house.]

Enter SENATOR [with papers in his hand].

Sen. And late, five thousand; to Varro and to Isidore
 He owes nine thousand; besides my former sum,
 Which makes it five and twenty. Still in motion

Of raging waste? It cannot hold; it will not. If I want gold, steal but a beggar's dog, And give it Timon; why, the dog coins gold. If I would sell my horse and buy twenty more Better than he, why, give my horse to Timon, Ask nothing, give it him, it foals me straight And able horses. No porter at his gate, But rather one that smiles and still invites All that pass by. It cannot hold; no reason Can found his state in safety. Caphis, ho! Caphis, I say!

Enter CAPHIS.

Caph. Here, sir; what is your pleasure?
Sen. Get on your cloak, and haste you to Lord Timon;
 Importune him for my moneys; be not ceas'd With slight denial, nor then silenc'd when

"Commend me to your master," and the cap Plays in the right hand, thus; but tell him, My uses cry to me, I must serve my turn Out of mine own. His days and times are past, And my reliances on his fracted dates Have smit my credit. I love and honour him, But must not break my back to heal his finger. Immediate are my needs, and my relief Must not be toss'd and turn'd to me in words, But find supply immediate. Get you gone. Put on a most importunate aspect, A visage of demand; for, I do fear, When every feather sticks in his own wing, Lord Timon will be left a naked gull, Which flashes now a phoenix. Get you gone.

Caph. I go, sir.

Sen. "I go, sir!" — Take the bonds along with you,
 And have the dates in compt.

Caph.

Sen.

I will, sir.

Go.

[Exeunt.

[SCENE II. The same. A hall in Timon's house.]

Enter Steward [FLAVIUS], with many bills in his hand.

[Flav.] No care, no stop! so senseless of expense,

That he will neither know how to maintain it, Nor cease his flow of riot; takes no account How things go from him, nor resume no care Of what is to continue; never mind Was to be so unwise, to be so kind. What shall be done? He will not hear, till feel. I must be round with him, now he comes from hunting.

Fie, fie, fie, fie!

Enter CAPHIS [and the Servants of] ISIDORE and VARRO.

Caph. Good even, Varro. What, You come for money?

Var. [Serv.] Is 't not your business too?

Caph. It is: and yours too, Isidore?

Isid. [Serv.] It is so.

Caph. Would we were all discharg'd!

Var. [Serv.] I fear it.

Caph. Here comes the lord.

Enter TIMON [with Alcibiades] and his train.

Tim. So soon as dinner's done, we'll forth again,

My Alcibiades. — With me what is your will?

Caph. My lord, here is a note of certain dues.

Tim. Dues! Whence are you?

Caph. Of Athens here, my lord.

Tim. Go to my steward.

Caph. Please it your lordship, he hath put me off

To the succession of new days this month. My master is awak'd by great occasion

To call upon his own, and humbly prays you That with your other noble parts you'll suit In giving him his right.

Tim. Mine honest friend, I prithee, but repair to me next morning.

Caph. Nay, good my lord, —
Tim. Contain thyself, good friend.
Var. [Serv.] One Varro's servant, my good lord, —

Isid. [Serv.] From Isidore.
 He humbly prays your speedy payment.
Caph. If you did know, my lord, my master's wants —

Var. [Serv.] 'T was due on forfeiture, my lord, six weeks
 And past.

Isid. [Serv.] Your steward puts me off, my lord;

And I am sent expressly to your lordship.
Tim. Give me breath.

I do beseech you, good my lords, keep on; 35
 I'll wait upon you instantly.

[Exeunt Alcibiades and Lords.]

[To Flav.] Come hither. Pray you,
 How goes the world, that I am thus encount'ed
 With clamorous demands of date-broke bonds,
 And the detention of long-since-due debts,
 Against my honour?

[Flav.] Please you, gentlemen, 40
 The time is unagreeable to this business.

Your importunacy cease till after dinner,
 That I may make his lordship understand
 Wherefore you are not paid.

Tim. Do so, my friends. See them well entertain'd. [Exit.] 45

[Flav.] Pray, draw near. [Exit.]

Enter APEMANTUS and FOOL.

Caph. Stay, stay, here comes the Fool with Apemantus; let's ha' some sport with 'em.

Var. [Serv.] Hang him, he'll abuse us.

Isid. [Serv.] A plague upon him, dog! 50

Var. [Serv.] How dost, Fool?

Apem. Dost dialogue with thy shadow?

Var. [Serv.] I speak not to thee.

Apem. No, 't is to thyself. [To the Fool.]
 Come away. 55

Isid. [Serv.] There's the Fool hangs on your back already.

Apem. No, thou stand'st single, thou 'rt not on him yet.

Caph. Where's the Fool now? 60

Apem. He last ask'd the question. Poor rogues, and usurers' men! bawds between gold and want!

All [Serv.]. What are we, Apemantus?

Apem. Asses.

All [Serv.]. Why? 65

Apem. That you ask me what you are, and do not know yourselves. Speak to 'em, Fool.

Fool. How do you, gentlemen?

All [Serv.]. Gramercies, good Fool; how does your mistress? 70

Fool. She's e'en setting on water to scald such chickens as you are. Would we could see you at Corinth!

Apem. Good! gramercy.

Enter PAGE.

Fool. Look you, here comes my master's page. 75

Page. [To the Fool.] Why, how now, captain! what do you in this wise company? How dost thou, Apemantus?

Apem. Would I had a rod in my mouth, that I might answer thee profitably. 80

Page. Prithee, Apemantus, read me the superscription of these letters; I know not which is which.

Apem. Canst not read?

Apem. There will little learning die then, that day thou art hang'd. This is to Lord Timon; this to Alcibiades. Go; thou wast born a bastard, and thou 'lt die a bawd. 89

Page. Thou wast whelp'd a dog, and thou shalt famish a dog's death. Answer not; I am gone. [Exit.]

Apem. E'en so thou outrunn'st grace. Fool,

I will go with you to Lord Timon's.

Fool. Will you leave me there? 95

Apem. If Timon stay at home. You three serve three usurers?

All [Serv.]. Ay; would they serv'd us!

Apem. So would I, — as good a trick as ever hanganman serv'd thief. 100

Fool. Are you three usurers' men?

All [Serv.]. Ay, Fool.

Fool. I think no usurer but has a fool to his servant; my mistress is one, and I am her fool. When men come to borrow of your masters, they approach sadly, and go away merry; but they enter my master's house merrily, and go away sadly. The reason of this? 105

Var. [Serv.] I could render one.

Apem. Do it then, that we may account thee a whoremaster and a knave; which notwithstanding, thou shalt be no less esteemed.

Var. [Serv.] What is a whoremaster, Fool? 115

Fool. A fool in good clothes, and something like thee. 'T is a spirit; sometime 't appears like a lord, sometime like a lawyer, sometime like a philosopher, with two stones more than 's artificial one. He is very often like a knight; and, generally, in all shapes that man goes up and down in from fourscore to thirteen, this spirit walks in. 121

Var. [Serv.] Thou art not altogether a fool.

Fool. Nor thou altogether a wise man. As much foolery as I have, so much wit thou lack'st.

Apem. That answer might have become Apemantus. 126

All [Serv.]. Aside, aside; here comes Lord Timon.

Re-enter TIMON and Steward [FLAVIUS].

Apem. Come with me, Fool, come.

Fool. I do not always follow, lover, elder brother, and woman, sometime the philosopher. [Exeunt Apemantus and Fool.] 131

[Flav.] Pray you, walk near; I'll speak with you anon. [Exeunt [Servants].]

Tim. You make me marvel. Wherefore ere this time

Had you not fully laid my state before me,
 That I might so have rated my expense 135
 As I had leave of means?

[Flav.] You would not hear me,
At many leisures I propos'd.

Tim. Go to!
Perchance some single vantages you took,
When my indisposition put you back;
And that unaptness made your minister 140
Thus to excuse yourself.

[Flav.] O my good lord,
At many times I brought in my accounts,
Laid them before you; you would throw them
off,

And say you found them in mine honesty.
When, for some trifling present, you have bid
me 145

Return so much, I have shook my head and wept;

Yea, 'gainst the authority of manners, pray'd
you

To hold your hand more close. I did endure
Not seldom, nor no slight checks, when I have Prompted you in the ebb of your estate 150
And your great flow of debts. My lov'd lord, Though you hear now, too late, — yet now 's a
time, —

The greatest of your having lacks a half
To pay your present debts.

Tim. Let all my land be sold.
[Flav.] 'T is all engag'd, some forfeited and
gone; 155

And what remains will hardly stop the mouth
Of present dues. The future comes apace;
What shall defend the interim? and at length
How goes our reck'ning?

Tim. To Lacedæmon did my land extend. 160

[Flav.] O my good lord, the world is but a word;

Were it all yours to give it in a breath,
How quickly were it gone!

Tim. You tell me true.
[Flav.] If you suspect my husbandry, or falsehood,

Call me before the exactest auditors 165
And set me on the proof. So the gods bless me,
When all our offices have been oppress'd
With riotous feeders, when our vaults have wept

With drunken spilth of wine, when every room
Hath blaz'd with lights and bray'd with minstrelys; 170

I have retir'd me to a wasteful cock,
And set mine eyes at flow.

Tim. Prithee, no more.
[Flav.] Heavens, have I said, the bounty of this lord!

How many prodigal bits have slaves and peasants

This night englutted! Who is not Timon's? 175
What heart, head, sword, force, means, but is Lord Timon's?

Great Timon, noble, worthy, royal Timon!
Ah, when the means are gone that buy this
praise,

The breath is gone whereof this praise is made.
Feast-won, fast-lost; one cloud of winter showers, 180

These flies are couch'd.

Tim. Come, sermon me no further.

No villainous bounty yet hath pass'd my heart;
Unwisely, not ignobly, have I given.

Why dost thou weep? Canst thou the conscience lack

To think I shall lack friends? Secure thy
heart; 185

If I would broach the vessels of my love,
And try the argument of hearts by borrowing,
Men and men's fortunes could I frankly use
As I can bid thee speak.

[Flav.] Assurance bless your thoughts!

Tim. And, in some sort, these wants of mine are crown'd, 190

That I account them blessings; for by these Shall I try friends. You shall perceive how you Mistake my fortunes; I am wealthy in my friends.

Within there! [Flaminius!] Servilius!

Enter three SERVANTS [FLAMINIUS, Servilius, and another].

Servants. My lord? my lord? 195

Tim. I will dispatch you severally; you to Lord Lucius; to Lord Lucullus you, I hunted with his honour to-day; you, to Sempronius.
Commend me to their loves, and, I am proud,
say, that my occasions have found time to use
'em toward a supply of money. Let the request be fifty talents. 202

Flam. As you have said, my lord.

[Flav. Aside.] Lord Lucius and Lucullus!
Hum!

Tim. Go you, sir, to the senators — 205
Of whom, even to the state's best health, I have

Deserv'd this hearing — bid 'em send o' the instant

A thousand talents to me.

[Flav.] I have been bold —
For that I knew it the most general way —
To them to use your signet and your name; 210
But they do shake their heads, and I am here
No richer in return.

Tim. Is 't true? Can 't be?

[Flav.] They answer, in a joint and corporate voice,

That now they are at fall, want treasure, can-
not

Do what they would; are sorry — you are honourable, — 215

But yet they could have wish'd — they know
not —

Something hath been amiss — a noble nature
May catch a wrench — would all were well —
't is pity; —

And so, intending other serious matters,
After distasteful looks and these hard frac-
tions, 220

With certain half-caps and cold-moving nods
They froze me into silence.

Tim. You gods, reward them!
Prithee, man, look cheerly. These old fellows

Have their ingratitude in them hereditary.
Their blood is cak'd, 'tis cold, it seldom flows; 225

'T is lack of kindly warmth they are not kind;

And nature, as it grows again toward earth,
Is fashion'd for the journey, dull and heavy.
[To a Serv.] Go to Ventidius. [To Flav.]

Prithce, be not sad,
Thou art true and honest; ingeniously I speak, ²³⁰

No blame belongs to thee. [To Ser.] Ventidius lately

Buried his father, by whose death he's stepp'd
Into a great estate. When he was poor,
Imprison'd, and in scarcity of friends,
I clear'd him with five talents. Greet him from me; ²³⁵

Bid him suppose some good necessity
Touches his friend, which craves to be remember'd

With those five talents. [Exit Ser.] [To Flav.]
That had, give 't these fellows

To whom 't is instant due. Never speak, or think,

That Timon's fortunes 'mong his friends can sink. ²⁴⁰

[Flav.] I would I could not think it! That thought is bounty's foe;

Being free itself, it thinks all others so.
[Exeunt.]

[ACT III]

[SCENE I. A room in Lucullus's house.]

FLAMINIUS waiting to speak with a Lord from his master. Enter a SERVANT to him.

Serv. I have told my lord of you; he is coming down to you.

Flam. I thank you, sir.

Enter LUCULLUS.

Serv. Here 's my lord. ³

Lucul. [Aside.] One of Lord Timon's men?
A gift, I warrant. Why, this hits right; I dream'd of a silver basin and ewer to-night.
Flaminius, honest Flaminius; you are very respectively welcome, sir. Fill me some wine.
[Exit Servant.] And how does that honourable, complete, free-hearted gentleman of Athens,
thy very bountiful good lord and master? ¹¹

Flam. His health is well, sir.

Lucul. I am right glad that his health is well, sir; and what hast thou there under thy cloak,
pretty Flaminius? ¹⁵

Flam. Faith, nothing but an empty box, sir;
which, in my lord's behalf, I come to entreat your honour to supply; who, having great and instant occasion to use fifty talents, hath sent to your lordship to furnish him, nothing doubting your present assistance therein. ²¹

Lucul. La, la, la, la! "nothing doubting," says he? Alas, good lord! a noble gentleman
't is, if he would not keep so good a house.
Many a time and often I ha' din'd with him, and told him on 't, and come again to supper to him, of purpose to have him spend less, and ²⁶ yet he would embrace no counsel, take no warning by my coming. Every man has his fault, and honesty is his. I ha' told him on 't, but I could ne'er get him from 't. ³¹

Re-enter SERVANT, with wine.

Serv. Please your lordship, here is the wine.
Lucul. Flaminius, I have noted these always wise. Here 's to thee.

Flam. Your lordship speaks your pleasure. ³⁵

Lucul. I have observed thee always for a towardly prompt spirit—give thee thy due—and one that knows what belongs to reason, and canst use the time well, if the time use thee well; good parts in thee. [To Serv.] Get you gone, sirrah. [Exit Serv.] Draw nearer, honest Flaminius. Thy lord 's a bountiful gentleman; but thou art wise, and thou know'st well enough, although thou com'st to me, that this is no time to lend money, especially upon bare friendship, without security. Here 's three ⁴⁰ solidaires for thee; good boy, wink at me, and say thou saw'st me not. Fare thee well.

Flam. Is 't possible the world should so much differ,

And we alive that lived? Fly, damned baseness,
To him that worships thee! ⁴⁵

[Throwing the money back.]
Lucul. Ha! now I see thou art a fool, and fit for thy master. [Exit.]

Flam. May these add to the number that may scald thee!

Let molten coin be thy damnation, ⁵⁵
Thou disease of a friend, and not himself!
Has friendship such a faint and milky heart,
It turns in less than two nights? O you gods,
I feel my master's passion! This slave,
Unto his honour, has my lord's meat in him; ⁶⁰
Why should it thrive and turn to nutriment
When he is turn'd to poison?
O, may diseases only work upon 't!
And, when he's sick to death, let not that part of nature

Which my lord paid for, be of any power ⁶⁵
To expel sickness, but prolong his hour!

[Exit.]

[SCENE II. A public place.]

Enter LUCIUS, with three STRANGERS.

Luc. Who, the Lord Timon? He is my very good friend, and an honourable gentleman.

1. Stran. We know him for no less, though we are but strangers to him. But I can tell you one thing, my lord, and which I hear from common rumours: now Lord Timon's happy hours are done and past, and his estate shrinks from him. ⁸

Luc. Fie, no, do not believe it; he cannot want for money.

2. Stran. But believe you this, my lord, that, not long ago, one of his men was with the Lord Lucullus to borrow so many talents, nay, urg'd extremely for 't and showed what necessity be-long'd to 't, and yet was deni'd. ¹⁵

Luc. How!

2. Stran. I tell you, deni'd, my lord.

Luc. What a strange case was that! Now, before the gods, I am asham'd on 't. Denied that honourable man! There was very little ²⁰ honour show'd in 't. For my own part, I must needs confess, I have received some small kindnesses from him, as money, plate, jewels, and such-like trifles, nothing comparing to his; yet, had he mistook him and sent to me, I should ne'er have denied his occasion so many talents. 26

Enter SERVILIUS.

Ser. See, by good hap, yonder's my lord; I have sweat to see his honour. My honour'd lord, —

Luc. Servilius! you are kindly met, sir. Fare thee well; commend me to thy honourable virtuous lord, my very exquisite friend. 32

Ser. May it please your honour, my lord hath sent —

Luc. Ha! what has he sent? I am so much endeared to that lord; he's ever sending. How shall I thank him, think'st thou? And what has he sent now? 38

Ser. Has only sent his present occasion now, my lord; requesting your lordship to supply his instant use with so many talents. 41

Luc. I know his lordship is but merry with me;

He cannot want fifty-five hundred talents.

Ser. But in the meantime he wants less, my lord.

If his occasion were not virtuous, 45
I should not urge it half so faithfully.

Luc. Dost thou speak seriously, Servilius?

Ser. Upon my soul, 't is true, sir.

Luc. What a wicked beast was I to disfigure myself against such a good time, when I might ha' shown myself honourable! How 50 unluckily it happ'ned, that I should purchase the day before for a little part, and undo a great deal of honour! Servilius, now, before the gods, I am not able to do, — the more beast, I say: — I was sending to use Lord Timon 55 myself, these gentlemen can witness; but I would not, for the wealth of Athens, I had done't now. Commend me bountifully to his good lordship; and I hope his honour will conceive the fairest of me, because I have no 60 power to be kind. And tell him this from me, I count it one of my greatest afflictions, say, that I cannot pleasure such an honourable gentleman. Good Servilius, will you befriend me so far, as to use mine own words to him? 65

Ser. Yes, sir, I shall.

Luc. I'll look you out a good turn, Servilius. [Exit Servilius.]

True, as you said, Timon is shrunk indeed; And he that's once deni'd will hardly speed. [Exit.]

1. Stran. Do you observe this, Hostilius?

2. Stran. Ay, too well.

1. Stran. Why, this is the world's soul; and just of the same piece 71

Is every flatterer's spirit. Who can call him His friend that dips in the same dish? for, in My knowing, Timon has been this lord's father, And kept his credit with his purse, 75
Supported his estate; nay, Timon's money Has paid his men their wages. He ne'er drinks, But Timon's silver treads upon his lip; And yet — O, see the monstrousness of man

When he looks out in an ungrateful shape! — 69
He does deny him, in respect of his,
What charitable men afford to beggars.

3. Stran. Religion groans at it.

1. Stran. For mine own part, I never tasted Timon in my life, Nor came any of his bounties over me 85
To mark me for his friend; yet, I protest, For his right noble mind, illustrious virtue, And honourable carriage, Had his necessity made use of me, I would have put my wealth into donation, 90
And the best half should have return'd to him,

So much I love his heart. But, I perceive, Men must learn now with pity to dispense, For policy sits above conscience. [Ezeunt.]

[SCENE III. A room in Sempronius' house.]

Enter a third SERVANT with SEMPRONIUS, another of Timon's friends.

Sem. Must he needs trouble me in 't, — hum! — 'bove all others?

He might have tried Lord Lucius or Lucullus; And now Ventidius is wealthy too, Whom he redeem'd from prison. All these Owe their estates unto him.

Serv. My lord, 8
They have all been touch'd and found base metal, for
They have all denied him.

Sem. How! have they deni'd him? Has Ventidius and Lucullus deni'd him? And does he send to me? Three? hum! It shows but little love or judgement in him. 10
Must I be his last refuge? His friends, like physicians,

Thrice give him over; must I take the cure upon me?

Has much disgrac'd me in 't; I'm angry at him,

That might have known my place. I see no sense for 't,

But his occasions might have wooed me first; 15
For, in my conscience, I was the first man

That e'er received gift from him;

And does he think so backwardly of me now, That I'll requite it last? No!

So I may prove an argument of laughter 20
To the rest, and 'mongst lords be thought a fool.

I'd rather than the worth of thrice the sum, Had sent to me first, but for my mind's sake;

I'd such a courage to do him good. But now return,

And with their faint reply this answer join; 25
Who bates mine honour shall not know my coin.

[Exit.]

Serv. Excellent! Your lordship's a goodly villain. The devil knew not what he did when he made man politic; he crossed himself by 't; and I cannot think but, in the end, the villainies of man will set him clear. How fairly 30 this lord strives to appear foul! takes virtuous copies to be wicked, like those that under hot ardent zeal would set whole realms on fire;

Of such a nature is his politic love. 35
 This was my lord's best hope; now all are fled,
 Save only the gods. Now his friends are dead, Doors, that were ne'er acquainted with their
 wards

Many a bounteous year, must be employ'd
 Now to guard sure their master. 40
 And this is all a liberal course allows;
 Who cannot keep his wealth must keep his house. [Exit.]

[SCENE IV. The same. A hall in Timon's house.]

Enter VARRO'S MEN, meeting [TITUS and] others, all [servants of] Timon's creditors, to wait for his coming out. Then enter LUCIUS and HOR- TENSIVS.

[L. Var. Serv. Well met; good morrow,
 Titus and Hortensius.

Tit. The like to you, kind Varro.

Hor. Lucius,

What, do we meet together?

Luc. Ay, and I think
 One business does command us all; for mine
 Is money. 5

Tit. So is theirs and ours.

Enter PHILOTUS.

Luc. And Sir Philotus too!

Phi. Good day at once.

Luc. Welcome, good brother.

What do you think the hour?

Phi. Labouring for nine.

Luc. So much?

Phi. Is not my lord seen yet?

Luc. Not yet.

Phi. I wonder on 't; he was wont to shine at seven. 10

Luc. Ay, but the days are wax'd shorter with him.

You must consider that a prodigal course
 Is like the sun's; but not, like his, recoverable.
 I fear 't is deepest winter in Lord Timon's
 purse;

That is, one may reach deep enough, and yet 's find little.

Phi. I am of your fear for that.

Tit. I'll show you how to observe a strange event.

Your lord sends now for money.

Hor. Most true, he does.

Tit. And he wears jewels now of Timon's gift,

For which I wait for money. 20

Hor. It is against my heart.

Luc. Mark, how strange it shows,
 Timon in this should pay more than he owes;
 And e'en as if your lord should wear rich jewels,
 And send for money for 'em.

Hor. I'm weary of this charge, the gods can witness. 25

I know my lord hath spent of Timon's wealth;
 And now ingratitude makes it worse than stealth.

[L. Var. [Serv.] Yes, mine 's three thousand crowns; what's yours?

Luc. Five thousand mine.

[L. Var. [Serv.] 'T is much deep: and it should seem by the sum, 30
 Your master's confidence was above mine;
 Else, surely, his had equal'd.

Enter FLAMINIUS.

Tit. One of Lord Timon's men.

Luc. Flaminius! Sir, a word. Pray, is my lord ready to come forth? 35

Flam. No, indeed, he is not.

Tit. We attend his lordship; pray, signify so much.

Flam. I need not tell him that; he knows you are too diligent. [Exit.] 40

Enter Steward [FLAVIUS] in a cloak, muffled.

Luc. Ha! is not that his steward muffled
 so?

He goes away in a cloud; call him, call him.

Tit. Do you hear, sir?

2. Var. [Serv.] By your leave, sir, —

[Flav.] What do ye ask of me, my friend? 45

Tit. We wait for certain money here, sir.

[Flav.] Ay,

If money were as certain as your waiting,
 'T were sure enough.

Why then prefer'd' you not your sums and
 bills,

When your false masters eat of my lord's meat? 50

Then they could smile and fawn upon his debts,
 And take down the interest into their glutton-ous maws.

You do yourselves but wrong to stir me up;

Let me pass quietly.

Believe 't, my lord and I have made an end; 55
 I have no more to reckon, he to spend.

Luc. Ay, but this answer will not serve.

[Flav.] If 't will not serve, 't is not so base
 as you;

For you serve knaves.

[Exit.]

1. Var. [Serv.] How! what does his cash-ier'd worship mutter? 61

2. Var. [Serv.] No matter what; he's poor, and that's revenge enough. Who can speak broader than he that has no house to put his head in? Such may rail against great buildings. 65

Enter SERVILIUS.

Tit. O, here 's Servilius; now we shall know some answer.

Ser. If I might beseech you, gentlemen, to repair some other hour, I should derive much from 't; for, take 't of my soul, my lord leans wondrously to discontent. His comfortable temper has forsook him; he's much out of health, and keeps his chamber. 73

Luc. Many do keep their chambers are not sick;

And, if it be so far beyond his health,
 Methinks he should the sooner pay his debts,
 And make a clear way to the gods.

Ser. Good gods!

Tit. We cannot take this for answer, sir.

Flam. (Within.) Servilius, help! My lord!
 my lord!

Enter TIMON, in a rage [FLAMINIUS following].

Tim. What, are my doors oppos'd against my passage? 80

Have I been ever free, and must my house Be my retentive enemy, my gaol?

The place which I have feasted, does it now, Like all mankind, show me an iron heart?

Luc. Put in now, Titus. 85

Tit. My lord, here is my bill.

Luc. Here 's mine.

1. Var. [Serv.] And mine, my lord.

2. Var. [Serv.] And ours, my lord.

Phi. All our bills. 90

Tim. Knock me down with 'em; cleave me to the girdle.

Luc. Alas, my lord, —

Tim. Cut my heart in sums.

Tit. Mine, fifty talents.

Tim. Tell out my blood. 95

Luc. Five thousand crowns, my lord.

Tim. Five thousand drops pays that. What yours? and yours?

1. Var. [Serv.] My lord, —

2. Var. [Serv.] My lord, —

Tim. Tear me, take me, and the gods fall upon you! [Exit. 100

Hor. Faith, I perceive our masters may throw their caps at their money. These debts may well be call'd desperate ones, for a madman owes 'em. [Exeunt.

Re-enter TIMON [and FLAVIUS].

Tim. They have e'en put my breath from me, the slaves.

Creditors? Devils! 105

[Flav.] My dear lord, —

Tim. What if it should be so?

[Flav.] My lord, —

Tim. I'll have it so. My steward!

[Flav.] Here, my lord. 110

Tim. So fitly? Go, bid all my friends again, Lucius, Lucullus, and Sempronius; [Ventidius,] all:

I'll once more feast the rascals.

[Flav.] O my lord,

You only speak from your distracted soul. 115

There is not so much left to furnish out A moderate table.

Tim. Be it not in thy care; go, I charge thee, invite them all. Let in the tide Of knaves once more; my cook and I'll provide. [Exeunt.

[SCENE V. The same. The senate-house.]

Enter three SENATORS at one door, ALCIBIADES meeting them, with Attendants.

1. Sen. My lord, you have my voice to it; the fault's—

Bloody; 't is necessary he should die.

Nothing emboldens sin so much as mercy.

2. Sen. Most true; the law shall bruise him.

Alcib. Honour, health, and compassion to the Senate! 5

1. Sen. Now, captain?

Alcib. I am an humble suitor to your virtues,

For pity is the virtue of the law, And none but tyrants use it cruelly.

It pleases time and fortune to lie heavy 10

Upon a friend of mine, who, in hot blood,

Hath stepp'd into the law, which is past depth

To those that, without heed, do plunge into 't.

He is a man, setting his fate aside,

Of comely virtues; 15

Nor did he soil the fact with cowardice —

An honour in him which buys out his fault —

But with a noble fury and fair spirit,

Seeing his reputation touch'd to death,

He did oppose his foe; 20

And with such sober and unnoted passion

He did behave his anger, ere 't was spent,

As if he had but prov'd an argument.

1. Sen. You undergo too strict a paradox,

Striving to make an ugly deed look fair. 25

Your words have took such pains as if they labour'd

To bring manslaughter into form, and set quarrelling

Upon the head of valour; which indeed

Is valour misbegot and came into the world

When sects and factions were newly born. 30

He's truly valiant that can wisely suffer

The worst that man can breathe, and make his wrongs

His outides, to wear them like his raiment, carelessly,

And ne'er prefer his injuries to his heart,

To bring it into danger. 35

If wrongs be evils and enforce us kill,

What folly 't is to hazard life for ill!

Alcib. My lord, —

1. Sen. You cannot make gross sins look clear;

To revenge is no valour, but to bear.

Alcib. My lords, then, under favour, pardon me 40

If I speak like a captain.

Why do fond men expose themselves to battle,

And not endure all threats, sleep upon 't,

And let the foes quietly cut their throats

Without repugnancy? If there be 45

Such valour in the bearing, what make we

Abroad? Why then, women are more valiant

That stay at home, if bearing carry it,

And the ass more captain than the lion, the felon

Loaden with irons wiser than the judge, 50

If wisdom be in suffering. O my lords,

As you are great, be pitifully good.

Who cannot condemn rashness in cold blood?

To kill, I grant, is sin's extremest gust;

But, in defence, by mercy, 't is most just. 55

To be in anger is impiety;

But who is man that is not angry?

Weigh but the crime with this.

2. Sen. You breathe in vain.

Alcib. In vain! his service done At Lacedæmon and Byzantium 60

Were a sufficient briber for his life.

1. Sen. What 's that?

Alcib. I say, my lords, he has done fair service,

And slain in fight many of your enemies.

How full of valour did he bear himself 65
In the last conflict, and made plenteous wounds!

2. Sen. He has made too much plenty with
'em.

He's a sworn rioter; he has a sin that often
Drowns him, and takes his valour prisoner;
If there were no foes, that were enough 70
To overcome him. In that beastly fury
He has been known to commit outrages,
And cherish factions. 'Tis infer'd to us,
His days are foul and his drink dangerous.

1. Sen. He dies.

Alcib. Hard fate! he might have died in war. 75

My lords, if not for any parts in him —
Though his right arm might purchase his own
time

And be in debt to none — yet, more to move you,
Take my deserts to his, and join 'em both;
And, for I know your reverend ages love 80
Security, I'll pawn my victories, all
My honour to you, upon his good returns.
If by this crime he owes the law his life,
Why, let the war receive 't in valiant gore;
For law is strict, and war is nothing more. 85

1. Sen. We are for law. He dies; urge it no
more,

On height of our displeasure. Friend or brother,
He forfeits his own blood that spills another.

Alcib. Must it be so? It must not be. My lords,

I do beseech you, know me. 90

2. Sen. How?

Alcib. Call me to your remembrances.

3. Sen. What?

Alcib. I cannot think but your age has forgot me;

It could not else be, I should prove so base,
To sue, and be deni'd such common grace. 95
My wounds ache at you,

1. Sen. Do you dare our anger?
'Tis in few words, but spacious in effect;
We banish thee for ever.

Alcib. Banish me!

Banish your dotage! Banish usury,
That makes the Senate ugly! 100

1. Sen. If, after two days' shine, Athens contain thee,

Attend our weightier judgement. And, not to swell our spirit,

He shall be executed presently.

[Eteunt [Senators].]

Alcib. Now the gods keep you old enough;
that you may live

Only in bone, that none may look on you! 105
I'm worse than mad. I have kept back their foes,

While they have told their money and let out
Their coin upon large interest, I myself

Rich only in large hurts. All those for this?
Is this the balsam that the usuring Senate 110

Pours into captains' wounds? Banishment!
It comes not ill; I hate not to be banish'd;

It is a cause worthy my spleen and fury,
That I may strike at Athens. I'll cheer up

My discontented troops, and lay for hearts. 115

'Tis honour with most lands to be at odds;
Soldiers should brook as little wrongs as gods.
[Exit.]

[SCENE VI. The same. A banqueting-room in Timon's house.]

[Music. Tables set out: Servants attending.]
Enter divers friends [LUCIUS, LUCULLUS,
SEMPRONIUS, VENTIDIUS, and other LORDS,
Senators and others,] at several doors.

1. Lord. The good time of day to you, sir.

2. Lord. I also wish it to you. I think this honourable lord did but try us this other day.

1. Lord. Upon that were my thoughts tiring when we encount'ed. I hope it is not so low with him as he made it seem in the trial of his several friends. 7

2. Lord. It should not be, by the persuasion of his new feasting.

1. Lord. I should think so. He hath sent me an earnest inviting, which many my near occasions did urge me to put off; but he hath conjur'd me beyond them, and I must needs appear. 14

2. Lord. In like manner was I in debt to my importunate business, but he would not hear my excuse. I am sorry, when he sent to borrow of me, that my provision was out.

1. Lord. I am sick of that grief too, as I understand how all things go. 20

2. Lord. Every man here's so. What would he have borrowed of you?

1. Lord. A thousand pieces.

2. Lord. A thousand pieces!

1. Lord. What of you? 25

2. Lord. He sent to me, sir, — Here he comes.

Enter TIMON and Attendants.

Tim. With all my heart, gentlemen both;
and how fare you?

1. Lord. Ever at the best, hearing well of your lordship. 30

2. Lord. The swallow follows not summer more willing than we your lordship.

Tim. [Aside.] Nor more willingly leaves winter; such summer birds are men. — Gentlemen, our dinner will not recompense this long stay; feast your ears with the music a while, 35
if they will fare so harshly. O' the trumpet's sound we shall to't presently.

1. Lord. I hope it remains not unkindly with your lordship that I return'd you an empty messenger. 41

Tim. O, sir, let it not trouble you.

2. Lord. My noble lord, —

Tim. Ah, my good friend, what cheer? 44

[The banquet brought in.]

2. Lord. My most honourable lord, I am e'en sick of shame, that, when your lordship this other day sent to me, I was so unfortunate a beggar.

Tim. Think not on't, sir.

2. Lord. If you had sent but two hours before, — 51

Tim. Let it not cumber your better remembrance. Come, bring in all together!

2. Lord. All cover'd dishes ! 55
 1. Lord. Royal cheer, I warrant you.
 3. Lord. Doubt not that, if money and the season can yield it.

1. Lord. How do you ? What's the news ?
 3. Lord. Alcibiades is banish'd : hear you of it ? 61

1. and 2. Lord. Alcibiades banish'd !
 3. Lord. 'T is so, be sure of it.
 1. Lord. How ! how !
 2. Lord. I pray you, upon what ? 65
Tim. My worthy friends, will you draw near ?
 3. Lord. I'll tell you more anon. Here's a noble feast toward.

2. Lord. This is the old man still.
 3. Lord. Will 't hold ? Will 't hold ? 70
 2. Lord. It does ; but time will — and so —
 3. Lord. I do conceive.
Tim. Each man to his stool, with that spur as he would to the lip of his mistress ; your diet shall be in all places alike. Make not a city 75 feast of it, to let the meat cool ere we can agree upon the first place ; sit, sit. The gods require our thanks.

You great benefactors, sprinkle our society with thankfulness. For your own gifts make 80 yourselves prais'd ; but reserve still to give, lest your deities be despised. Lend to each man enough, that one need not lend to another ; for, were your godheads to borrow of men, men would forsake the gods. Make the meat be beloved more than the man that gives it. 85
 Let no assembly of twenty be without a score of villains ; if there sit twelve women at the table, let a dozen of them be — as they are. The rest of your foes, O gods — the senators of Athens, together with the common lag of 90 people — what is amiss in them, you gods, make suitable for destruction. For these my present friends, as they are to me nothing, so in nothing bless them, and to nothing are they welcome.

Uncover, dogs, and lap ! 95
[The dishes are uncovered and seen to be full of warm water.]

Some speak. What does his lordship mean ?
 Some other. I know not.

Tim. May you a better feast never behold,
 You knot of mouth-friends ! Smoke and lukewarm water

Is your perfection. This is Timon's last ; 100
 Who stuck and spangled you with flatteries,
 Washes it off, and sprinkles in your faces
 Your reeking villainy.

[Throwing the water in their faces.]
 Live loath'd and long.

Most smiling, smooth, detested parasites,
 Courteous destroyers, affable wolves, meek
 bears, 105

You fools of fortune, trencher-friends, time's
 flies,

Cap-and-knee slaves, vapours, and minute-jacks !

Of man and beast the infinite malady
 Crust you quite o'er ! What, dost thou go ?

Soft ! take thy physic first — thou too — and
 thou ; — 110

Stay, I will lend thee money, borrow none.
[Throws the dishes at them, and drives them out.]

What, all in motion ? Henceforth be no feast,
 Whereat a villain's not a welcome guest.
 Burn, house ! sink, Athens ! henceforth hated
 be

Of Timon man and all humanity ! [Exit. 115]
 Re-enter the SENATORS, with other LORDS.

1. Lord. How now, my lords !
 2. Lord. Know you the quality of Lord
 Timon's fury ?

3. Lord. Push ! did you see my cap ?
 4. Lord. I have lost my gown. 120

1. Lord. He's but a mad lord, and nought but humours sways him. He gave me a jewel the other day, and now he has beat it out of my hat. Did you see my jewel ?

3. Lord. Did you see my cap ? 125
 2. Lord. Here 't is.

4. Lord. Here lies my gown.
 1. Lord. Let's make no stay.

2. Lord. Lord Timon's mad.
 3. Lord. I feel 't upon my bones. 130

4. Lord. One day he gives us diamonds, next day stones. [Exeunt.]

(ACT IV)

[SCENE I. Without the walls of Athens.]

Enter TIMON.

Tim. Let me look back upon thee. O thou
 wall,
 That girdles in those wolves, dive in the earth,
 And fence not Athens ! Matrons, turn incon-
 tent !

Obedience fail in children ! Slaves and fools, Pluck the grave wrinkled Senate from the bench, 5

And minister in their steads ! To general filths
 Convert o' the instant green virginity !
 Do 't in your parents' eyes ! Bankrupts, hold fast ;

Rather than render back, out with your knives,
 And cut your trusters' throats ! Bound servants, steal ! 10

Large-handed robbers your grave masters are,
 And pill by law. Maid, to thy master's bed ;
 Thy mistress is o' the brothel ! Son of sixteen, Pluck the lin'd crutch from thy old limping
 sire ;

With it beat out his brains ! Piety, and fear, 15
 Religion to the gods, peace, justice, truth,

Domestic awe, night-rest, and neighbourhood,
 Instruction, manners, mysteries, and trades,
 Degrees, observances, customs, and laws,
 Decline to your confounding contraries, 20

And let confusion live ! — Plagues incident to
 men,

Your potent and infectious fevers heap
 On Athens, ripe for stroke ! Thou cold sciatica,
 Cripple our senators, that their limbs may halt

As lamely as their manners! Lust and liberty
Creep in the minds and marrows of our youth,
That 'gainst the stream of virtue they may strive,

And drown themselves in riot! Itches, blains,
Sow all the Athenian bosoms; and their crop
Be general leprosy! Breath infect breath,
That their society, as their friendship, may Be merely poison! Nothing I'll bear from
thee

But nakedness, thou detestable town!
Take thou that too, with multiplying bans!
Timon will to the woods, where he shall find
The unkindest beast more kinder than mankind.

The gods conduct — hear me, you good gods
all,

The Athenians both within and out that wall!
And grant, as Timon grows, his hate may grow
To the whole race of mankind, high and low!
Amen. [Exit.]

[SCENE II. Athens. A room in Timon's house.]

Enter Steward [FLAVIUS,] with two or three SERVANTS.

1. Serv. Hear you, master steward, where's our master?

Are we undone? cast off? nothing remaining?
[Flav.] Alack, my fellows, what should I say to you?

Let me be recorded by the righteous gods,
I am as poor as you.

1. Serv. Such a house broke!
So noble a master fallen! All gone! and not
One friend to take his fortune by the arm,
And go along with him!

2. Serv. As we do turn our backs
From our companion thrown into his grave,
So his familiars to his buried fortunes
Sink all away, leave their false vows with
him,

Like empty purses pick'd; and his poor self,
A dedicated beggar to the air,
With his disease of all-shunn'd poverty,
Walks, like contempt, alone. More of our fellows. [Exit.]

Enter other SERVANTS.

[Flav.] All broken implements of a ruin'd
house.

3. Serv. Yet do our hearts wear Timon's livery;

That see I by our faces; we are fellows still,
Serving alike in sorrow. Leak'd is our bark,
And we, poor mates, stand on the dying deck,
Hearing the surges threat. We must all part
Into this sea of air.

[Flav.] Good fellows all,
The latest of my wealth I'll share amongst
you.

Wherever we shall meet; for Timon's sake,
Let's yet be fellows; let's shake our heads,
and say,

As 't were a knell unto our master's fortunes,
"We have seen better days." Let each take some;

Nay, put out all your hands. Not one word
more!

Thus part we rich in sorrow, parting poor.
[Servants embrace, and part several ways.]

O, the fierce wretchedness that glory brings
us!

Who would not wish to be from wealth exempt,
Since riches point to misery and contempt?
Who 'd be so mock'd with glory, or to live
But in a dream of friendship?

To have his pomp and all what state compounds

But only painted, like his varnish'd friends?
Poor honest lord, brought low by his own
heart,

Undone by goodness! Strange, unusual blood,
When man's worst sin is, he does too much
good!

Who, then, dares to be half so kind again?
For bounty, that makes gods, does still mar
men.

My dearest lord, bless'd to be most accurs'd,
Rich only to be wretched, thy great fortunes
Are made thy chief afflictions. Alas, kind
lord!

He's flung in rage from this ingrateful seat
Of monstrous friends, nor has he with him to Supply his life, or that which can command it.
I'll follow and inquire him out.

I'll ever serve his mind with my best will;
Whilst I have gold, I'll be his steward still. [Exit.]

[SCENE III.] Woods [and cave, near the seashore].

Enter TIMON [from the cave].

Tim. O blessed breeding sun, draw from the earth

Rotten humidity; below thy sister's orb
Infect the air! Twinn'd brothers of one womb,
Whose procreation, residence, and birth
Scarcely is dividant, touch them with several
fortunes,

The greater scores the lesser; not nature,
To whom all sours lay siege, can bear great fortune

But by contempt of nature.
Raise me this beggar, and deny 't that lord;
The senator shall bear contempt hereditary,
The beggar native honour.

It is the pasture lards the rother's sides,
The want that makes him lean. Who dares,
who dares,

In purity of manhood stand upright,
And say, "This man 's a flatterer"? If one
be,

So are they all; for every grise of fortune
Is smooth'd by that below. The learned pate
Ducks to the golden fool; all is oblique;
There's nothing level in our cursed natures,
But direct villainy. Therefore, be abhorr'd
All feasts, societies, and throngs of men!
His semblable, yea, himself, Timon disdains:
Destruction fang mankind! Earth, yield me roots! [Digging.]

Who seeks for better of thee, sauce his palate With thy most operant poison! What is here? 25

Gold? Yellow, glittering, precious gold! No,
gods,

I am no idle votarist; roots, you clear heavens!
Thus much of this will make black white, foul
fair,

Wrong right, base noble, old young, coward valiant.

Ha, you gods! why this? What this, you gods?
Why, this 30

Will lug your priests and servants from your
sides,

Pluck stout men's pillows from below their heads.

This yellow slave

Will knit and break religions, bless the accurs'd,

Make the hoar leprosy ador'd, place thieves 35
And give them title, knee, and approbation
With senators on the bench. This is it

That makes the wappen'd widow wed again;
She, whom the spital-house and ulcerous sores

Would cast the gorge at, this embalms and spices 40

To the April day again. Come, damn'd earth, Thou common whore of mankind, that puts
odds

Among the rout of nations, I will make thee
Do thy right nature. (March afar off.) Ha! a drum? Thou 'rt quick,

But yet I'll bury thee; thou 'lt go, strong thief, 45

When gouty keepers of thee cannot stand.

Nay, stay thou out for earnest.

[Keeping some gold.]

Enter ALCEBIADES, with drum and fife, in warlike manner; PHRYNIA and TIMANDRA.

Alcib. What art thou there? Speak.

Tim. A beast, as thou art. The canker gnaw thy heart,

For showing me again the eyes of man! 50

Alcib. What is thy name? Is man so hateful to thee

That art thyself a man?

Tim. I am misanthropos, and hate mankind.

For thy part, I do wish thou wert a dog, 54

That I might love thee something.

Alcib. I know thee well;
But in thy fortunes am unlearn'd and strange.

Tim. I know thee too; and more than that I know thee,

I not desire to know. Follow thy drum;
With man's blood paint the ground, gules,
gules.

Religious canons, civil laws are cruel; 60

Then what should war be? This fell whore of
thine

Hath in her more destruction than thy sword,
For all her cherubin look.

Phry. Thy lips rot off!
Tim. I will not kiss thee; then the rot returns

To thine own lips again. 65

Alcib. How came the noble Timon to this change?

Tim. As the moon does, by wanting light to give:

But then renew I could not, like the moon;
There were no suns to borrow of.

Alcib. Noble Timon,
What friendship may I do thee?

Tim. None, but to 70
Maintain my opinion.

Alcib. What is it, Timon?

Tim. Promise me friendship, but perform none. If thou wilt not promise, the gods plague thee, for thou art a man! If thou dost perform, confound thee, for thou art a man! 75

Alcib. I have heard in some sort of thy miseries.

Tim. Thou saw'st them, when I had prosperity.

Alcib. I see them now; then was a blessed
time.

Tim. As thine is now, held with a brace of harlots.

Timan. Is this the Athenian minion, whom the world 80

Voice'd so regardfully?

Tim. Art thou Timandra?

Timan. Yes.

Tim. Be a whore still. They love thee not that use thee;

Give them diseases, leaving with thee their lust.
Make use of thy salt hours; season the slaves

For tubs and baths; bring down rose-cheek'd youth 85

To the tub-fast and the diet.

Timan. Hang thee, monster!

Alcib. Pardon him, sweet Timandra; for his wits

Are drown'd and lost in his calamities.
I have but little gold of late, brave Timon, 90

The want whereof doth daily make revolt
In my penurious band. I have heard, and griev'd,

How curs'd Athens, mindless of thy worth,
Forgetting thy great deeds, when neighbour states,

But for thy sword and fortune, trod upon
them, — 95

Tim. I prithee, beat thy drum, and get thee
gone.

Alcib. I am thy friend, and pity thee, dear
Timon.

Tim. How dost thou pity him whom thou dost trouble?

I had rather be alone.

Alcib. Why, fare thee well:
Here is some gold for thee.

Tim. Keep it, I cannot eat it.

Alcib. When I have laid proud Athens on a heap, — 102

Tim. Warr'st thou 'gainst Athens?

Alcib. Ay, Timon, and have cause.

Tim. The gods confound them all in thy conquest;

And thee after, when thou hast conquer'd!
Alcib. Why me, Timon?

Tim. That, by killing of villains,

Thou wast born to conquer my country. 100
 Put up thy gold! Go on, — here's gold, — go on;
 Be as a planetary plague, when Jove
 Will o'er some high-vic'd city hang his poison
 In the sick air. Let not thy sword skip one.
 Pity not honour'd Age for his white beard; 111
 He is an usurer. Strike me the counterfeit matron;
 It is her habit only that is honest,
 Herself's a bawd. Let not the virgin's cheek Make soft thy trenchant sword; for those milkpaps, 115
 That through the window-bars bore at men's
 eyes,
 Are not within the leaf of pity writ,
 But set them down horrible traitors. Spare not the babe,
 Whose dimpled smiles from fools exhaust their
 mercy;
 Think it a bastard, whom the oracle 120
 Hath doubtfully pronounced thy throat shall cut,
 And mince it sans remorse. Swear against objects;
 Put armour on thine ears and on thine eyes;
 Whose proof, nor yells of mothers, maids, nor babes,
 Nor sight of priests in holy vestments bleed-
 ing, 125
 Shall pierce a jot. There's gold to pay thy soldiers.
 Make large confusion; and, thy fury spent,
 Confounded be thyself! Speak not, be gone.
Alcib. Hast thou gold yet? I'll take the gold thou givest me;
 Not all thy counsel. 130
Tim. Dost thou, or dost thou not, Heaven's curse upon thee!
Phr. and Timan. Give us some gold, good
 Timon; hast thou more?
Tim. Enough to make a whore forswear her trade,
 And to make whores, a bawd. Hold up, you
 sluts, 134
 Your aprons mountant. You are not oathable, —
 Although, I know, you'll swear, terribly swear
 Into strong shudders and to heavenly agues
 The immortal gods that hear you, — spare your oaths,
 I'll trust to your conditions. Be whores still;
 And he whose pious breath seeks to convert
 you, 140
 Be strong in whore, allure him, burn him up;
 Let your close fire predominate his smoke,
 And be no turncoats; yet may your pains, six months,
 Be quite contrary: and thatch your poor thin roofs
 With burdens of the dead — some that were hang'd, 145
 No matter; — wear them, betray with them.
 Whore still;
 Paint till a horse may mire upon your face;
 A pox of wrinkles!
Phr. and Timan. Well, more gold; what
 then?
 Believe 't, that we'll do anything for gold. 150

Tim. Consumptions sow
 In hollow bones of man; strike their sharp
 shins,
 And mar men's spurring. Crack the lawyer's voice,
 That he may never more false title plead,
 Nor sound his quillets shrilly; hoar the flamen,
 That scolds against the quality of flesh, 150
 And not believes himself. Down with the nose,
 Down with it flat; take the bridge quite away
 Of him that, his particular to foresee,
 Smells from the general weal. Make curl'dpate ruffians bald; 155
 And let the unscarr'd braggarts of the war
 Derive some pain from you. Plague all,
 That your activity may defeat and quell
 The source of all erection. There's more gold;
 Do you damn others, and let this damn you, 160
 And ditches grave you all!
Phr. and Timan. More counsel with more money, bounteous Timon.
Tim. More whore, more mischief first; I have given you earnest.
Alcib. Strike up the drum toward Athens!
 Farewell, Timon!
 If I thrive well, I'll visit thee again. 170
Tim. If I hope well, I'll never see thee
 more.
Alcib. I never did thee harm.
Tim. Yes, thou spok'st well of me.
Alcib. Call'st thou that harm?
Tim. Men daily find it. Get thee away, and take
 Thy beagles with thee.
Alcib. We but offend him. Strike!
 [Drum beats.] Ereunt [Alcibiades,
Phrynia, and Timandra].
Tim. That nature, being sick of man's unkindness, 175
 Should yet be hungry! Common mother, thou, [Digging.]
 Whose womb unmeasurable and infinite breast
 Teems and feeds all; whose self-same mettle, Whereof thy proud child, arrogant man, is puff'd, 180
 Engenders the black toad and adder blue,
 The gilded newt and eyeless venom'd worm,
 With all the abhorred births below crisp heaven
 Whereon Hyperion's quick'ning fire doth shine;
 Yield him, who all thy human sons doth hate, 185
 From forth thy plenteous bosom, one poor root!
 Ensear thy fertile and conception womb,
 Let it no more bring out ingrateful man!
 Go great with tigers, dragons, wolves, and
 bears;
 Teem with new monsters, whom thy upward
 face 190
 Hath to the marbled mansion all above
 Never presented! — O, a root: dear thanks! —
 Dry up thy marrows, vines, and plough-torn leas;
 Whereof ingrateful man, with liquorish
 draughts
 And morsels unctuous, greases his pure mind,
 That from it all consideration slips! 195

Enter APEMANTUS.

More man? Plague, plague!

Apem. I was directed hither. Men report
Thou dost affect my manners, and dost use
• them.

Tim. 'Tis, then, because thou dost not keep a dog, 200
Whom I would imitate. Consumption catch
thee!

Apem. This is in thee a nature but infected;
A poor unmanly melancholy sprung
From change of fortune. Why this spade?
this place?

This slave-like habit? and these looks of care?
Thy flatterers yet wear silk, drink wine, lie soft; 206

Hug their diseases'd perfumes, and have forgot
That ever Timon was. Shame not these woods
By putting on the cunning of a carper.

Be thou a flatterer now, and seek to thrive 210
By that which has undone thee; hinge thy knee,

And let his very breath, whom thou 'lt observe,
Blow off thy cap; praise his most vicious strain,
And call it excellent. Thou wast told thus;
Thou gav'st thine ears like tapsters that bade
welcome 215

To knaves and all approachers. 'Tis most just
That thou turn rascal; hadst thou wealth again, Rascals should have 't. Do not assume my like-
ness.

Tim. Were I like thee, I'd throw away myself.

Apem. Thou hast cast away thyself, being like thyself; 220

A madman so long, now a fool. What, think'st
That the bleak air, thy boisterous chamberlain,
Will put thy shirt on warm? Will these moss'd trees,

That have outliv'd the eagle, page thy heels,
And skip when thou point'st out? Will the cold brook, 225

Candied with ice, caudle thy morning taste,
To cure thy o'er-night's surfeit? Call the creatures

Whose naked natures live in all the spite
Of weakful heaven, whose bare unhoused trunks,

To the conflicting elements expos'd, 230
Answer mere nature; bid them flatter thee.
O, thou shalt find—

Tim. A fool of thee. Depart.
Apem. I love thee better now than ere I did.

Tim. I hate thee worse.

Apem. Why?

Tim. Thou flatter'st misery.
Apem. I flatter not; but say thou art a cattiff. 235

Tim. Why dost thou seek me out?

Apem. To vex thee.

Tim. Always a villain's office or a fool's.
Dost please thyself in 't?

Apem. Ay.

Tim. What! a knave too?
Apem. If thou didst put this sour cold habit
on

To castigate thy pride, 't were well; but thou 240
Dost it enforcedly; thou 'dst courtier be again,
Wert thou not beggar. Willing misery
Outlives incertain pomp, is crown'd before;
The one is filling still, never complete;
The other, at high wish: best state, content-
less, 245

Hath a distracted and most wretched being,
Worse than the worst, content.

Thou shouldst desire to die, being miserable.

Tim. Not by his breath that is more miserable.

Thou art a slave, whom Fortune's tender arm 250
With favour never clasp'd; but bred a dog.
Hadst thou, like us from our first swath, proceeded

The sweet degrees that this brief world affords
To such as may the passive drugs of it Freely command, thou wouldst have plung'd
thyself 255

In general riot; melted down thy youth
In different beds of lust; and never learn'd
The icy precepts of respect, but followed
The sug'red game before thee. But myself,
Who had the world as my confectionary, 260
The mouths, the tongues, the eyes, and hearts
of men

At duty, more than I could frame employment,
That numberless upon me stuck as leaves
Do on the oak, have with one winter's brush
Fell from their boughs and left me open, bare
For every storm that blows; I, to bear this, 266
That never knew but better, is some burden:
Thy nature did commence in sufferance, time Hath made thee hard in 't. Why shouldst thou hate men?

They never flatter'd thee. What hast thou given? 270

If thou wilt curse, thy father, that poor rag,
Must be thy subject, who in spite put stuff
To some she-beggar and compounded thee
Poor rogue hereditary. Hence, be gone! 274
If thou hadst not been born the worst of men,
Thou hadst been a knave and flatterer.

Apem. Art thou proud yet?

Tim. Ay, that I am not thee.

Apem. I, that I was No prodigal.

Tim. I, that I am one now.

Were all the wealth I have shut up in thee,
I'd give thee leave to hang it. Get thee gone.
That the whole life of Athens were in this! 281
Thus would I eat it. [Eating a root.]

Apem. Here; I will mend thy feast.
[Offering him a root.]

Tim. First mend my company; take away
thyself.

Apem. So I shall mend mine own, by the lack of thine.

Tim. 'T is not well mended so, it is but botch'd; 286

If not, I would it were.

Apem. What wouldst thou have to Athens?

Tim. Thee thither in a whirlwind. If thou wilt,

Tell them there I have gold; look, so I have.

Apem. Here is no use for gold.

Tim. The best and truest;
For here it sleeps, and does no hired harm. 291

Apem. Where liest o' nights, Timon?

Tim. Under that's above me.
Where feed'st thou o' days, Apemantus?

Apem. Where my stomach finds meat; or,
rather, where I eat it. 295

Tim. Would poison were obedient and knew my mind!

Apem. Where wouldst thou send it?

Tim. To sauce thy dishes. 299

Apem. The middle of humanity thou never knewest, but the extremity of both ends. When thou wast in thy gilt and thy perfume, they mock'd thee for too much curiosity; in thy rags thou know'st none, but art despis'd for the contrary. There's a medlar for thee, eat it.

Tim. On what I hate I feed not. 300

Apem. Dost hate a medlar?

Tim. Ay, though it look like thee.

Apem. An thou'dst hated meddlers sooner, thou shouldst have loved thyself better now.
What man didst thou ever know unthrift that was beloved after his means? 312

Tim. Who, without those means thou talk'st of, didst thou ever know belov'd?

Apem. Myself.

Tim. I understand thee; thou hadst some means to keep a dog.

Apem. What things in the world canst thou nearest compare to thy flatterers? 319

Tim. Women nearest; but men, men are the things themselves. What wouldst thou do with the world, Apemantus, if it lay in thy power?

Apem. Give it the beasts, to be rid of the
men. 324

Tim. Wouldst thou have thyself fall in the confusion of men, and remain a beast with the beasts?

Apem. Ay, Timon. 328

Tim. A beastly ambition, which the gods grant thee to attain to! If thou wert the lion, the fox would beguile thee. If thou wert the lamb, the fox would eat thee. If thou wert the fox, the lion would suspect thee, when peradventure thou wert accus'd by the ass. If thou wert the ass, thy dulness would torment thee, and still thou liv'st but as a breakfast to [335]
the wolf. If thou wert the wolf, thy greediness would afflict thee, and oft thou shouldst hazard thy life for thy dinner. Wert thou the unicorn, pride and wrath would confound thee and make thine own self the conquest of thy fury. [340]
Wert thou a bear, thou wouldst be kill'd by the horse. Wert thou a horse, thou wouldst be seiz'd by the leopard. Wert thou a leopard, thou wert germane to the lion and the spots of thy kindred were jurors on thy life; all thy safety were remotion and thy defence ab- [345] sence. What beast couldst thou be, that were not subject to a beast? And what a beast art thou already, that seest not thy loss in transformation! 349

Apem. If thou couldst please me with speaking to me, thou mightest have hit upon it here.
The commonwealth of Athens is become a forest of beasts.

Tim. How has the ass broke the wall, that thou art out of the city? 355

Apem. Yonder comes a poet and a painter;
the plague of company light upon thee! I will fear to catch it, and give way. When I know not what else to do, I'll see thee again. 359

Tim. When there is nothing living but thee, thou shalt be welcome. I had rather be a beggar's dog than Apemantus.

Apem. Thou art the cap of all the fools alive.

Tim. Would thou wert clean enough to spit upon!

Apem. A plague on thee! thou art too bad to curse. 365

Tim. All villains that do stand by thee are pure.

Apem. There is no leprosy but what thou
speak'st.

Tim. If I name thee.

I'll beat thee, but I should infect my hands.

Apem. I would my tongue could rot them off!

Tim. Away, thou issue of a mangy dog! 371
Choler does kill me that thou art alive;
I swoond to see thee.

Apem. Would thou wouldst burst!

Tim. Away,
Thou tedious rogue! I am sorry I shall lose
A stone by thee. [Throws a stone at him.]

Apem. Beast!

Tim. Slave!

Apem. Toad!

Tim. Rogue, rogue, rogue!
I am sick of this false world, and will love
nought 376

But even the mere necessities upon't.
Then, Timon, presently prepare thy grave;
Lie where the light foam of the sea may beat
Thy grave-stone daily; make thine epitaph 380
That death in me at others' lives may laugh.
[To the gold.] O thou sweet king-killer, and
dear divorce

'Twixt natural son and sire! thou bright defler

Of Hymen's purest bed! thou valiant Mars!
Thou ever young, fresh, loved, and delicate wooer, 385
Whose blush doth thaw the consecrated snow
That lies on Dian's lap! thou visible god,
That sold'st rest close impossibilities,
And makest them kiss! that speak'st with every tongue,

To every purpose! O thou touch of hearts! 390
Think, thy slave man rebels, and by thy virtue
Set them into confounding odds, that beasts
May have the world in empire!

Apem. Would't were so!
But not till I am dead. I'll say thou hast
gold;

Thou wilt be throng'd to shortly.

Tim. Throng'd to!

Apem. Ay. 395

Tim. Thy back, I prithee.

Apem. Live, and love thy misery.

Tim. Long live so, and so die. I am quit.

Moe things like men! Eat, Timon, and abhor them. [Exit Apemantus.]

Enter BANDITTI.

1. Ban. Where should he have this gold ? It is some poor fragment, some slender ort of his remainder. The mere want of gold, and [400] the falling-from of his friends, drove him into this melancholy.

2. Ban. It is nois'd he hath a mass of treasure. 405

3. Ban. Let us make the assay upon him. If he care not for 't, he will supply us easily ; if he covetously reserve it, how shall 's get it ?

2. Ban. True ; for he bears it not about him, 't is hid. 410

1. Ban. Is not this he ?

Banditti. Where ?

2. Ban. 'T is his description.

3. Ban. He ; I know him.

Banditti. Save thee, Timon.

Tim. Now, thieves ? 415

Banditti. Soldiers, not thieves.

Tim. Both too ; and women's sons.

Banditti. We are not thieves, but men that much do want.

Tim. Your greatest want is, you want much of meat.

Why should you want ? Behold, the earth hath roots ; 420

Within this mile break forth a hundred springs ; The oaks bear mast, the briers scarlet hips ; The bounteous housewife, Nature, on each bush Lays her full mess before you. Want ! why want ?

1. Ban. We cannot live on grass, on berries, water, 425

As beasts and birds and fishes.

Tim. Nor on the beasts themselves, the birds and fishes ;

You must eat men. Yet thanks I must you con That you are thieves profess'd, that you work not

In holier shapes ; for there is boundless theft 430

In limited professions. Rascal thieves, Here's gold. Go, suck the subtle blood o' the grape

Till the high fever seethe your blood to froth, And so scape hanging. Trust not the physician ; His antidotes are poison, and he slays 435

Moe than you rob. Take wealth and lives together ;

Do villainy, do, since you protest to do 't, Like workmen. I'll example you with thievery :

The sun 's a thief, and with his great attraction 439

Robs the vast sea ; the moon 's an arrant thief, And her pale fire she snatches from the sun ;

The sea 's a thief, whose liquid surge resolves The moon into salt tears ; the earth 's a thief,

That feeds and breeds by a composture stolen From general excrement ; each thing 's a thief ;

The laws, your curb and whip, in their rough power 440

Has uncheck'd theft. Love not yourselves ; away,

Rob one another. There's more gold. Cut throats ;

All that you meet are thieves. To Athens go,

Break open shops ; nothing can you steal, 450
But thieves do lose it. Steal [no] less for this I give you ; and gold confound you howsoe'er ! Amen.

3. Ban. Has almost charm'd me from my profession, by persuading me to it. 455

1. Ban. 'T is in the malice of mankind that he thus advises us ; not to have us thrive in our mystery.

2. Ban. I'll believe him as an enemy, and give over my trade. 460

1. Ban. Let us first see peace in Athens. There is no time so miserable but a man may be true. [Exeunt Banditti.]

Enter the Steward [FLAVIUS, who remains at a distance].

[Flav.] O you gods !

Is yond despis'd and ruinous man my lord ? 465
Full of decay and failing ? O monument

And wonder of good deeds evilly bestow'd !

What an alteration of honour

Has desperate want made ! 469

What viler thing upon the earth than friends

Who can bring noblest minds to basest ends !

How rarely does it meet with this time's guise,

When man was wish'd to love his enemies !

Grant I may ever love, and rather woo

Those that would mischief me than those that do ! 475

Has caught me in his eye. I will present My honest grief unto him ; and, as my lord,

Still serve him with my life. [Coming forward.]

My dearest master !

Tim. Away ! what art thou ?

[Flav.] Have you forgot me, sir ?

Tim. Why dost ask that ? I have forgot all men ; 480

Then, if thou grant'st thou 'rt a man, I have forgot thee.

[Flav.] An honest poor servant of yours.

Tim. Then I know thee not.

I never had honest man about me, I ; all I kept were knaves, to serve in meat to villains. 485

[Flav.] The gods are witness,

Never did poor steward wear a truer grief For his undone lord than mine eyes for you.

Tim. What, dost thou weep ? Come nearer.

Then I love thee,

Because thou art a woman, and disclaim'st 490

Flinty mankind, whose eyes do never give But thorough lust and laughter. Pity's sleeping :

Strange times, that weep with laughing, not with weeping !

[Flav.] I beg of you to know me, good my lord,

To accept my grief, and whilst this poor wealth lasts 495

To entertain me as your steward still.

Tim. Had I a steward

So true, so just, and now so comfortable ? It almost turns my dangerous nature mild.

Let me behold thy face. Surely, this man 500

Was born of woman. Forgive my general and exceptless rashness, You perpetual-sober gods ! I do proclaim

One honest man — mistake me not — but one;
No more, I pray, — and he's a steward. 506
How fain would I have hated all mankind,
And thou redeem'st thyself; but all, save thee,
I fell with curses.

Methinks thou art more honest now than wise;
For, by oppressing and betraying me, 510
Thou mightst have sooner got another service;
For many so arrive at second masters,
Upon their first lord's neck. But tell me true —
For I must ever doubt, though ne'er so sure —
Is not thy kindness subtle, covetous, 515
If not a usuring kindness, and, as rich men
deal gifts,

Expecting in return twenty for one?

[Flav.] No, my most worthy master, in whose breast

Doubt and suspect, alas, are plac'd too late;
You should have fear'd false times when you did feast. 520

Suspect still comes where an estate is least.
That which I show, Heaven knows, is merely
love,

Duty, and zeal to your unmatched mind,
Care of your food and living; and, believe it,
My most honour'd lord, 525
For any benefit that points to me,
Either in hope or present, I'd exchange
For this one wish, that you had power and wealth

To requite me, by making rich yourself.

Tim. Look thee, 't is so! Thou singly honest
man, 530

Here, take; the gods out of my misery
Ha' sent thee treasure. Go, live rich and happy;
But thus condition'd: thou shalt build from
men;

Hate all, curse all, show charity to none,
But let the famish'd flesh slide from the bone,
Ere thou relieve the beggar; give to dogs 535
What thou deniest to men. Let prisons swallow 'em,

Debts wither 'em to nothing; be men like blasted woods,

And may diseases lick up their false bloods!
And so farewell and thrive.

[Flav.] O, let me stay, 540
And comfort you, my master.

Tim. If thou hat'st curses,
Stay not; fly, whilst thou art blest and free.
Ne'er see thou man, and let me ne'er see thee.

[Exit [Flavius. Timon retires to his cave].]

[ACT V]

[SCENE I. The woods. Before Timon's cave.]

Enter POET and PAINTER.

Pain. As I took note of the place, it cannot be far where he abides.

Poet. What's to be thought of him? Does the rumour hold for true, that he's so full of gold? 4

Pain. Certain. Alcibiades reports it; Phry-nia and Timandra had gold of him. He likewise enrich'd poor straggling soldiers with great quantity. 'T is said he gave unto his steward a mighty sum.

Poet. Then this breaking of his has been but a try for his friends. 11

Pain. Nothing else. You shall see him a palm in Athens again, and flourish with the highest. Therefore 't is not amiss we tender our loves to him, in this suppos'd distress of his. It will show honestly in us; and is very likely to load our purposes with what they travail for, if it be a just and true report that goes of his having. 18

Poet. What have you now to present unto
him?

Pain. Nothing at this time but my visitation; only I will promise him an excellent piece.

Poet. I must serve him so too, tell him of an intent that's coming toward him. 23

Pain. Good as the best. Promising is the very air o' the time; it opens the eyes of expectation. Performance is ever the duller for his act; and, but in the plainer and simpler kind of people, the deed of saying is quite out of use.
To promise is most courtly and fashionable;
performance is a kind of will or testament which argues a great sickness in his judgement that makes it. 31

Enter TIMON from his cave.

Tim. [Aside.] Excellent workman! thou canst not paint a man so bad as is thyself.

Poet. I am thinking what I shall say I have provided for him. It must be a personating of himself; a satire against the softness of prosperity, with a discovery of the infinite flatteries that follow youth and opulency. 38

Tim. [Aside.] Must thou needs stand for a villain in thine own work? Wilt thou whip thine own faults in other men? Do so, I have gold for thee.

Poet. Nay, let's seek him. 43

Then do we sin against our own estate,
When we may profit meet, and come too late.

Pain. True;
When the day serves, before black-corner'd
night,

Find what thou want'st by free and offer'd
light. 49

Come.
Tim. [Aside.] I'll meet you at the turn.

What a god's gold,
That he is worshipp'd in a baser temple
Than where swine feed!
'T is thou that rigg'st the bark and plough'st
the foam,

Settled admired reverence in a slave.
To thee be worship and thy saints for aye! 55
Be crown'd with plagues that thee alone obey!
Fit I meet them. [Coming forward.]

Poet. Hail, worthy Timon!

Pain. Our late noble master!
Tim. Have I once liv'd to see two honest
men?

Poet. Sir, 60
Having often of your open bounty tasted,

Hearing you were retir'd, your friends fallen off,

Whose thankless natures—O abhorred spirits!
Not all the whips of heaven are large enough.
What! to you,

Whose star-like nobleness gave life and influence

To their whole being! I am rapt and cannot cover

The monstrous bulk of this ingratitude
With any size of words.

Tim. Let it go naked, men may see 't the better.

You that are honest, by being what you are
Make them best seen and known.

Pain. He and myself
Have travail'd in the great shower of your gifts,
And sweetly felt it.

Tim. Ay, you are honest men.

Pain. We are hither come to offer you our service.

Tim. Most honest men! Why, how shall I requite you?

Can you eat roots and drink cold water? No?

Both. What we can do, we'll do, to do you service.

Tim. Ye're honest men; ye've heard that I have gold;

I am sure you have. Speak truth; ye're honest men.

Pain. So it is said, my noble lord; but therefore

Came not my friend nor I.

Tim. Good honest men! Thou draw'st a counterfeit

Best in all Athens; thou'rt, indeed, the best;
Thou counterfeit'st most lively.

Pain. So, so, my lord.

Tim. E'en so, sir, as I say.—And, for thy fiction,

Why, thy verse swells with stuff so fine and smooth

That thou art even natural in thine art.

But, for all this, my honest-natur'd friends,
I must needs say you have a little fault.

Marry, 't is not monstrous in you, neither wish I
You take much pains to mend.

Both. Beseech your honour

To make it known to us.

Tim. You'll take it ill.

Both. Most thankfully, my lord.

Tim. Will you, indeed?

Both. Doubt it not, worthy lord.

Tim. There's never a one of you but trusts
a knave,

That mightily deceives you.

Both. Do we, my lord?

Tim. Ay, and you hear him cog, see him dissemble.

Know his gross patchery, love him, feed him,
Keep in your bosom; yet remain assur'd

That he's a made-up villain.

Pain. I know none such, my lord.

Poet. Nor I.

Tim. Look you, I love you well; I'll give you gold.

Rid me these villains from your companies;
Hang them or stab them, drown them in a draught,

Confound them by some course, and come to
me,

I'll give you gold enough.

Both. Name them, my lord, let's know them.

Tim. You that way and you this, but two in company,

Each man apart, all single and alone,
Yet an arch-villain keeps him company.

If where thou art two villains shall not be,
[To one.]

Come not near him.—If thou wouldst not reside

But where one villain is, then him abandon.—
[To the other.]

Hence, pack! there's gold; you came for gold, ye slaves.

[To Painter.] You have work for me; there's payment for you; hence!

[To Poet.] You are an alchemist; make gold of that.

Out, rascal dogs!

[Beats them out, and then retires to his cave.]

Enter Steward [FLAVIUS] and two SENATORS.

[Flav.] It is in vain that you would speak with Timon;

For he is set so only to himself
That nothing but himself which looks like man
Is friendly with him.

1. Sen. Bring us to his cave;

It is our part and promise to the Athenians
To speak with Timon.

2. Sen. At all times alike Men are not still the same. 'T was time and griefs

That fram'd him thus; time, with his fairer
hand

Offering the fortunes of his former days,
The former man may make him. Bring us to
him,

And chance it as it may.

[Flav.] Here is his cave.
Peace and content be here! Lord Timon!

Timon!

Look out, and speak to friends. The Athenians,
By two of their most reverend Senate, greet
thee.

Speak to them, noble Timon.

Enter TIMON out of his cave.

Tim. Thou sun, that comforts, burn! Speak, and be hang'd.

For each true word, a blister! and each false
Be as a cauterizing to the root o' the tongue,

Consuming it with speaking!

1. Sen. Worthy Timon,—

Tim. Of none but such as you, and you of Timon.

1. Sen. The senators of Athens greet thee,
Timon.

Tim. I thank them; and would send them back the plague,

Could I but catch it for them.

1. Sen. O, forget
What we are sorry for ourselves in thee.
The senators with one consent of love
Treat thee back to Athens; who have thought
On special dignities, which vacant lie — 145
For thy best use and wearing.

2. Sen. They confess
Toward thee forgetfulness too general, gross;
Which now the public body, which doth seldom
Play the recanter, feeling in itself
A lack of Timon's aid, hath sense withal 150
Of its own fall, restraining aid to Timon;
And send forth us, to make their sorrowed render,
Together with a recompense more fruitful
Than their offence can weigh down by the dram;
Ay, even such heaps and sums of love and
wealth 155
As shall to thee blot out what wrongs were theirs,
And write in thee the figures of their love,
Ever to read them thine.

Tim. You witch me in it,
Surprise me to the very brink of tears.
Lend me a fool's heart and a woman's eyes, 160
And I'll bewep these comforts, worthy senators.

1. Sen. Therefore, so please thee to return
with us,
And of our Athens, thine and ours, to take
The captainship, thou shalt be met with thanks, Allowed with absolute power, and thy good
name 165

Live with authority; so soon we shall drive back
Of Alcibiades the approaches wild,
Who, like a boar too savage, doth root up
His country's peace.

2. Sen. And shakes his threat'ning sword
Against the walls of Athens.

1. Sen. Therefore, Timon, —
Tim. Well, sir, I will; therefore, I will, sir;
thus: 171

If Alcibiades kill my countrymen,
Let Alcibiades know this of Timon,
That Timon cares not. But if he sack fair
Athens,

And take our goodly aged men by the beards,
Giving our holy virgins to the stain 175
Of contumelious, beastly, mad-brain'd war,
Then let him know, and tell him Timon speaks
it,

In pity of our aged and our youth,
I cannot choose but tell him, that I care not, 180
And let him take 't at worst; for their knives care not,

While you have throats to answer. For myself,
There's not a whittle in the unruly camp
But I do prize it at my love before
The reverend'st throat in Athens. So I leave
you 185

To the protection of the prosperous gods,
As thieves to keepers.

[Flav.] Stay not, all's in vain.

Tim. Why, I was writing of my epitaph;
It will be seen to-morrow. My long sickness
Of health and living now begins to mend, 190

And nothing brings me all things. Go, live still;
Be Alcibiades your plague, you his,
And last so long enough!

1. Sen. We speak in vain.
Tim. But yet I love my country, and am not
One that rejoices in the common wreck, 195
As common bruit doth put it.

1. Sen. That's well spoke.
Tim. Commend me to my loving country-
men, —

1. Sen. These words become your lips as they pass thorough them.

2. Sen. And enter in our ears like great triumphers 199
In their applauding gates.

Tim. Commend me to them,
And tell them that, to ease them of their griefs,
Their fears of hostile strokes, their aches,
losses,

Their pangs of love, with other incident throes
That nature's fragile vessel doth sustain
In life's uncertain voyage, I will some kindness do them: 205

I'll teach them to prevent wild Alcibiades'— wrath.

1. Sen. I like this well; he will return again.

Tim. I have a tree, which grows here in my close,

That mine own use invites me to cut down,
And shortly must I fell it. Tell my friends, 210
Tell Athens, in the sequence of degree
From high to low throughout, that whoso
please

To stop affliction, let him take his haste,
Come hither, ere my tree hath felt the axe,
And hang himself. I pray you, do my greet-
ing. 215

[Flav.] Trouble him no further; thus you still shall find him.

Tim. Come not to me again; but say to Athens,

Timon hath made his everlasting mansion
Upon the beached verge of the salt flood;
Who once a day with his embossed froth 220
The turbulent surge shall cover; thither come,
And let my grave-stone be your oracle.

Lips, let sour words go by and language end!
What is amiss plague and infection mend!
Graves only be men's works, and death their gain! 225

Sun, hide thy beams! Timon hath done his reign. [Exit.]

1. Sen. His discontents are unremoveably
Coupled to nature.

2. Sen. Our hope in him is dead. Let us return,
And strain what other means is left unto us 230
In our dear peril.

1. Sen. It requires swift foot.
[Exeunt.]

[SCENE II. Before the walls of Athens.]

Enter two other SENATORS and a MESSENGER.

1. Sen. Thou hast painfully discover'd. Are his files

As full as thy report?

Mess. I have spoke the least ;
Besides, his expedition promises
Present approach.

2. Sen. We stand much hazard, if they bring not Timon.

Mess. I met a courier, one mine ancient
friend ;

Whom, though in general part we were oppos'd,
Yet our old love made a particular force,
And made us speak like friends. This man was riding

From Alcibiades to Timon's cave 10
With letters of entreaty, which imported
His fellowship i' the cause against your city,
In part for his sake mov'd.

Enter the other SENATORS.

1. Sen. Here come our brothers.

3. Sen. No talk of Timon, nothing of him expect.

The enemies' drum is heard, and fearful scour-
ing 15

Doth choke the air with dust. In, and prepare ;
Ours is the fall, I fear ; our foes' the snare.

[Exeunt.]

[SCENE III.] The woods [near the sea. Timon's cave, and a rude tomb seen].

Enter a SOLDIER, seeking Timon.

Sold. By all description this should be the place.

Who's here ? speak, ho ! No answer ! What is this ?

Timon is dead, who hath outstretch'd his span.
Some beast rear'd this ; there does not live a
man.

Dead, sure ; and this his grave. What's on this tomb 5

I cannot read ; the character I'll take with wax ;

Our captain hath in every figure skill,
An ag'd interpreter, though young in days.

Before proud Athens he 's set down by this,
Whose fall the mark of his ambition is. 10

[Exit.]

[SCENE IV.] Before Athens.

Trumpets sound. Enter ALCIBIADES with his powers.

Alcib. Sound to this coward and lascivious town

Our terrible approach. [A parley sounded.]

The SENATORS appear upon the walls.

Till now you have gone on and fill'd the time
With all licentious measure, making your wills
The scope of justice ; till now myself and
such 5

As slept within the shadow of your power
Have wander'd with our travelers' arms and breath'd

Our sufferance vainly ; now the time is flush,
When crouching marrow in the bearer strong Cries of itself, "No more !" Now breathless
Wrong 10

Shall sit and pant in your great chairs of ease,
And pury Insolence shall break his wind
With fear and horrid flight.

1. Sen. Noble and young,
When thy first griefs were but a mere conceit, Ere thou hadst power or we had cause of
fear, 15

We sent to thee to give thy rages balm,
To wipe out our ingratitude with loves
Above their quantity.

2. Sen. So did we woo
Transformed Timon to our city's love
By humble message and by promis'd means. 20
We were not all unkind, nor all deserve
The common stroke of war.

1. Sen. These walls of ours
Were not erected by their hands from whom You have receiv'd your grief ; nor are they such

That these great towers, trophies, and schools should fall 25

For private faults in them.

2. Sen. Nor are they living
Who were the motives that you first went out ;
Shame, that they wanted cunning, in excess
Hath broke their hearts. March, noble lord,
Into our city with thy banners spread. 30
By decimation, and a tithed death —
If thy revenges hunger for that food
Which nature loathes — take thou the destin'd tenth,

And by the hazard of the spotted die
Let die the spotted.

1. Sen. All have not offended ; 35
For those that were, it is not square to take
On those that are, revenge ; crimes, like lands,
Are not inherited. Then, dear countryman, Bring in thy ranks, but leave without thy
rage ;

Spare thy Athenian cradle and those kin 40
Which in the bluster of thy wrath must fall
With those that have offended ; like a shepherd,
Approach the fold and cull the infected forth,
But kill not all together.

2. Sen. What thou wilt,
Thou rather shalt enforce it with thy smile 45
Than hew to 't with thy sword.

1. Sen. Set but thy foot
Against our rampir'd gates, and they shall open ;
So thou wilt send thy gentle heart before,
To say thou 'lt enter friendly.

2. Sen. Throw thy glove,
Or any token of thine honour else, 50
That thou wilt use the wars as thy redress
And not as our confusion, all thy powers Shall make their harbour in our town, till we Have seal'd thy full desire.

Alcib. Then there 's my glove ; 55
Descend, and open your uncharged ports.
Those enemies of Timon's and mine own
Whom you yourselves shall set out for reproof
Fall and no more ; and, to atone your fears
With my more noble meaning, not a man
Shall pass his quarter, or offend the stream 60
Of regular justice in your city's bounds,
But shall be render'd to your public laws
At heaviest answer.

Both. 'Tis most nobly spoken.

Alcib. Descend, and keep your words.

[The Senators descend, and open the gates.]

Enter [SOLDIER].

Sold. My noble general, Timon is dead, 65

Entomb'd upon the very hem o' the sea;

And on his grave-stone this insculpture, which

With wax I brought away, whose soft impression

Interprets for my poor ignorance.

Alcib. (Reads the epitaph.) "Here lies a wretched corse, of wretched soul bereft. 70

Seek not my name: a plague consume you wicked caitiffs left!

Here lie I, Timon; who, alive, all living men did hate.

Pass by and curse thy fill, but pass and stay not here thy gait."

These well express in thee thy latter spirits:

Though thou abhorr'dst in us our human 75

griefs,

Scorn'dst our brain's flow and those our drop-lets which

From niggard nature fall, yet rich conceit

Taught thee to make vast Neptune weep for aye

On thy low grave, on faults forgiven. Dead

Is noble Timon, of whose memory 80

Hereafter more. Bring me into your city,

And I will use the olive with my sword,

Make war breed peace, make peace stint war, make each

Prescribe to other as each other's leech.

Let our drums strike.

[Exeunt. 85]

THE TRAGEDY OF ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA

ON May 20, 1608, Edward Blount entered in the Stationers' Register A Book called Antony and Cleopatra, which does not seem to have been actually issued. Blount was one of the publishers of the First Folio; and in spite of the fact that Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra was registered in 1623 along with the other plays "not formerly entered to any man," it seems likely that the 1608 entry refers to it. We have no other external evidence as to the time of composition; but verse, style, and method of treatment all agree in making 1607-8 the probable date. The First Folio text is the basis of all other editions.

Cleopatra had frequently been made the subject of dramatic treatment in the sixteenth century, but none of these earlier plays seems to have influenced Shakespeare. His sole source was Sir Thomas North's translation of Amyot's version of Plutarch's Life of Marcus Antonius, and this he followed with remarkable fidelity. Not only are practically all the incidents of the plot found in the biography, and in almost the same order, but there are numerous passages in the play — and these among the most brilliant — which follow the very diction of North as closely as verse can follow prose. Yet no play of Shakespeare's is less prosaic in style, and in none is the splendor of his imagination more superbly exhibited in the presentation of human character.

But the appreciation of Shakespeare does not demand the belittling of the merits of his source. In the work of Plutarch, and especially in this Life of Marcus Antonius, he had material to deal with vastly differing from the bald annals of Holinshed which formed the foundation of the English historical plays. The Greek writer was an artist in expression and in the selection of detail, and had an intense appreciation of greatness; so that in matters of characterization and choice of incident the dramatist found much of his work done for him. Yet between the Life and the tragedy there are contrasts of the greatest significance. In the treatment of the whole action, Shakespeare discarded long series of events, like Antony's campaigns against the Parthians, which occurred during the period dealt with, but which had no bearing on the tragic theme; and he relegated to the background important figures such as Caesar and Octavia. Thus he suppresses the fact that Octavia won Antony away from Cleopatra for a number of years, and he reduces Antony's protracted stay in Rome to a short visit.

To Plutarch, the love of Antony for Cleopatra was merely a baneful spell which stirred up the evil elements in his character and quenched what was left of good; and Cleopatra herself was a sensual coquette, full of trickery and deceit, whose grief for Antony at the end was genuine enough, but was disfigured by petulance, fear, and vacillation. Shakespeare ignored the more vulgar libertine elements in Antony's character, and presented him as a man with a genius for friendship, a splendid practical capacity, and a highly sensuous temperament, who is subdued by a passion which, however unworthy in some aspects, is redeemed from meanness by its magnificent intensity. The picture of the Egyptian queen is equally skilful and even more subtle. Shakespeare preserves nearly all the characteristics of selfishness and guile that are found in Plutarch's sketch, and, save that he condenses and omits some ugly physical details, spares us nothing of the weakness and falsehood that are constantly appearing almost to the last. But he alternates these with amazing flashes of a magical fascination that render the creation unique; and he closes with a scene which, without any inconsistency with previous revelations of character, lifts both her and her Herculean Roman into the sphere of loftiest tragedy.

Of the minor characters Enobarbus is the most important Shakespearean invention. He is, of course, a historical personage; yet his prominent function as the friendly but caustic observer of Antony's gradual downfall, and the pathos of his own desertion and death, are original. The characterization of Octavius and his sister, while purposely unsympathetic, is not lacking in vigor and clearness, and is based on a skilful selection of the qualities attributed to them by Plutarch. The vivid suggestion of oriental luxury in the Alexandrian scenes is due in part to Shakespeare's imagination, in part to Plutarch, who gives here great wealth of detail, some of it derived from his own grandfather, who had it from eye-witnesses.

ACT I

SCENE I. [Alexandria. A room in Cleopatra's palace.]

Enter DEMETRIUS and PHILO.

Phi. Nay, but this dotage of our general's O'erflows the measure. Those his goodly eyes,
That o'er the files and musters of the war
Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now
turn,

The office and devotion of their view
Upon a tawny front; his captain's heart,
Which in the scuffles of great fights hath burst
The buckles on his breast, reneges all temper,
And is become the bellows and the fan
To cool a gipsy's lust.

Flourish. Enter ANTONY, CLEOPATRA, her
Ladies, the train, with Eunuchs fanning her.

Look, where they come!
Take but good note, and you shall see in him
The triple pillar of the world transform'd
Into a strumpet's fool. Behold and see.

Cleo. If it be love indeed, tell me how much.
Ant. There's beggary in the love that can be reckon'd.

Cleo. I'll set a bourn how far to be belov'd.
Ant. Then must thou needs find out new heaven, new earth.

Enter a MESSENGER.

Mess. News, my good lord, from Rome.
Ant. Grates me: the sum.
Cleo. Nay, hear them, Antony.
Fulvia perchance is angry; or, who knows

If the scarce-bearded Cæsar have not sent His powerful mandate to you: "Do this, or
this;

Take in that kingdom, and enfranchise that;
Perform 't, or else we damn thee."

Ant. How, my love!

Cleo. Perchance! nay, and most like.

You must not stay here longer, your dismissal

Is come from Cæsar; therefore hear it, Antony.
Where's Fulvia's process? — Cæsar's, I would say. Both?

Call in the messengers. As I am Egypt's
queen,

Thou bluest, Antony, and that blood of
thine

Is Cæsar's homager; else so thy cheek pays
shame

When shrill-tongu'd Fulvia scolds. The messengers!

Ant. Let Rome in Tiber melt, and the wide arch

Of the rang'd empire fall! Here is my space.
Kingdoms are clay; our dungy earth alike
Feeds beast as man; the nobleness of life
Is to do thus, when such a mutual pair

And such a twain can do 't, in which I bind,
On pain of punishment, the world to wit
We stand up peerless.

Cleo. Excellent falsehood! Why did he marry Fulvia, and not love her?
I'll seem the fool I am not; Antony
Will be himself.

Ant. But stirr'd by Cleopatra.
Now, for the love of Love and her soft hours,

Cleo. wants to know the quality + quantity of

Thou dost not stay here longer

It is my space

Let's not confound the time with conference harsh. 45

There's not a minute of our lives should stretch Without some pleasure now. What sport tonight?

Cleo. Hear the ambassadors.

Ant. Fie, wrangling queen!
Whom everything becomes, to chide, to laugh,
To weep; whose every passion fully strives 50
To make itself, in thee, fair and admir'd!
No messenger but thine; and all alone
To-night we'll wander through the streets and note

The qualities of people. Come, my queen; 54
Last night you did desire it. — Speak not to us.

[Exeunt [Ant. and Cleo.] with their train.]

Dem. Is Cæsar with Antony priz'd so slight?

Phi. Sir, sometimes, when he is not Antony,
He comes too short of that great property
Which still should go with Antony.

Dem. I am full sorry
That he approves the common liar, who 60
Thus speaks of him at Rome; but I will hope
Of better deeds to-morrow. Rest you happy!

[Exeunt.]

[SCENE II. The same. Another room.]

Enter ENOBARBUS, Lamprius, a SOOTHSAYER, Rannius, Lucilius, CHARMIAN, IRAS, Mar-
dian the Eunuch, and ALEXAS.

Char. Lord Alexas, sweet Alexas, most anything Alexas, almost most absolute Alexas, where's the soothsayer that you prais'd so to the Queen? O, that I knew this husband, which, you say, must charge his horns with garlands! 5

Alex. Soothsayer!

Sooth. Your will?

Char. Is this the man? Is 't you, sir, that know things?

Sooth. In nature's infinite book of secrecy
A little I can read.

Alex. Show him your hand. 10

Eno. Bring in the banquet quickly; wine
enough

Cleopatra's health to drink.

Char. Good sir, give me good fortune.

Sooth. I make not, but foresee.

Char. Pray, then, foresee me one. 15

Sooth. You shall be yet far fairer than you are.

Char. He means in flesh.

Iras. No, you shall part when you are old.

Char. Wrinkles forbid!

Alex. Vex not his prescience; be attentive. 20

Char. Hush!

Sooth. You shall be more loving than beloved.

Char. I had rather heat my liver with drinking.

Alex. Nay, hear him. 24

Char. Good now, some excellent fortune!
Let me be married to three kings in a forenoon, and widow them all. Let me have a child at fifty, to whom Herod of Jewry may do homage. Find me to marry me with Octavius Cæsar, and companion me with my mistress. 30

Sooth. You shall outlive the lady whom you serve.

Char. O excellent! I love long life better than figs.

Sooth. You have seen and proved a fairer former fortune

Than that which is to approach. 34

Char. Then belike my children shall have no names. Prithee, how many boys and wenches must I have?

Sooth. If every of your wishes had a womb,
And fertile every wish, a million.

Char. Out, fool! I forgive thee for a witch. 40

Alex. You think none but your sheets are privy to your wishes.

Char. Nay, come, tell Iras hers.

Alex. We'll know all our fortunes.

Eno. Mine and most of our fortunes to-night shall be — drunk to bed. 46

Iras. There's a palm presages chastity, if nothing else.

Char. E'en as the o'erflowing Nilus presageth famine. 50

Iras. Go, you wild bedfellow, you cannot soothsay.

Char. Nay, if an oily palm be not a fruitful prognostication, I cannot scratch mine ear.
Prithee, tell her but a work-a-day fortune. 55

Sooth. Your fortunes are alike.

Iras. But how, but how? Give me particulars.

Sooth. I have said.

Iras. Am I not an inch of fortune better than she? 60

Char. Well, if you were but an inch of fortune better than I, where would you choose it?

Iras. Not in my husband's nose.

Char. Our worse thoughts heavens mend!
Alexas, — come, his fortune, his fortune! O, let him marry a woman that cannot go, 65
sweet Isis, I beseech thee! and let her die too, and give him a worse! and let worse follow worse, till the worst of all follow him laughing to his grave, fifty-fold a cuckold! Good Isis, hear me this prayer, though thou deny me a matter of more weight; good Isis, I beseech
thee! 72

Iras. Amen. Dear goddess, hear that prayer of the people! for, as it is a heart-breaking to see a handsome man loose-wiv'd, so it is a deadly sorrow to behold a foul knave unuck-olded; therefore, dear Isis, keep decorum, and fortune him accordingly! 78

Char. Amen.

Alex. Lo, now, if it lay in their hands to make me a cuckold, they would make themselves whores, but they'd do 't!

Enter CLEOPATRA.

Eno. Hush! here comes Antony.

Char. Not he; the Queen. 83

Cleo. Saw you my lord?

Eno. No, lady.

Cleo. Was he not here?

Char. No, madam.

Cleo. He was dispos'd to mirth, but on the sudden
A Roman thought hath struck him. Enobarbus!

Eno. Madam?

Cleo. Seek him, and bring him hither.
Where's Alexas?

Alex. Here, at your service. My lord approaches.

Enter ANTONY with a MESSENGER [and ATTENDANTS].

Cleo. We will not look upon him. Go with us.

[Exeunt Cleo. and train].

Mess. Fulvia thy wife first came into the field.

Ant. Against my brother Lucius?

Mess. Ay;

But soon that war had end, and the time's state
Made friends of them, jointing their force
'gainst Cæsar;

Whose better issue in the war, from Italy,
Upon the first encounter, drave them.

Ant. Well, what worst?

Mess. The nature of bad news infects the teller.

Ant. When it concerns the fool or coward.

On:

Things that are past are done with me. 'Tis thus;

Who tells me true, though in his tale lie death,
I hear him as he flatter'd.

Mess. Labienus—

This is stiff news—hath, with his Parthian force,

Extended Asia from Euphrates;

His conquering banner shook from Syria

To Lydia and to Ionia,

Whilst—

Ant. Antony, thou wouldst say,—

Mess. O, my lord!

Ant. Speak to me home, mince not the general tongue.

Name Cleopatra as she is call'd in Rome;

Rail thou in Fulvia's phrase; and taunt my faults

With such full license as both truth and malice
Have power to utter. O, then we bring forth weeds

When our quick minds lie still; and our ills told us

Is as our earring. Fare thee well a while.

Mess. At your noble pleasure.

Ant. From Sicyon, ho, the news! Speak there!

1. [Att.] The man from Sicyon,—is there such an one?

2. [Att.] He stays upon your will.

Ant. Let him appear.

These strong Egyptian fetters I must break, 120
Or lose myself in dotage.

Enter another MESSENGER with a letter.

What are you?

[2.] Mess. Fulvia thy wife is dead.

Ant.

Where died she?

[2.] Mess. In Sicyon:

Her length of sickness, with what else more serious

Importeth thee to know, this bears.

[Gives a letter.]

Ant.

Forbear me.

[Exit 2. Messenger.]

There's a great spirit gone! Thus did I desire it.

What our contempts doth often hurl from us,
We wish it ours again; the present pleasure,
By revolution low ring, does become
The opposite of itself. She's good, being gone;
The hand could pluck her back that shov'd her on.

I must from this enchanting queen break off;
Ten thousand harms, more than the ills I know,
My idleness doth hatch.

Re-enter ENOBARBUS.

How now! Enobarbus!

Eno. What's your pleasure, sir?

Ant. I must with haste from hence.

Eno. Why, then, we kill all our women. We see how mortal an unkindness is to them; if they suffer our departure, death's the word.

Ant. I must be gone.

Eno. Under a compelling occasion, let women die. It were pity to cast them away for nothing; though, between them and a great cause, they should be esteemed nothing. Cleopatra, catching but the least noise of this, dies instantly; I have seen her die twenty times upon far poorer moment. I do think there is mettle in Death, which commits some loving act upon her, she hath such a celerity in dying.

Ant. She is cunning past man's thought.

Eno. Alack, sir, no; her passions are made of nothing but the finest part of pure love. We cannot call her winds and waters sighs and tears; they are greater storms and tempests than almanacs can report. This cannot be cunning in her; if it be, she makes a shower of rain as well as Jove.

Ant. Would I had never seen her!

Eno. O, sir, you had then left unseen a wonderful piece of work; which not to have been blest withal would have discredited your travel.

Ant. Fulvia is dead.

Eno. Sir?

Ant. Fulvia is dead.

Eno. Fulvia!

Ant. Dead.

Eno. Why, sir, give the gods a thankful sacrifice. When it pleaseth their deities to take the wife of a man from him, it shows to man the tailors of the earth; comforting therein, that when old robes are worn out, there are members to make new. If there were no more women but Fulvia, then had you indeed a cut, and the case to be lamented. This grief is crown'd with consolation; your old smock brings forth a new petticoat; and indeed the tears live in an onion that should water this sorrow.

Ant. The business she hath broached in the state
Cannot endure my absence.

Eno. And the business you have broach'd here cannot be without you; especially that of Cleopatra's, which wholly depends on your abode. 182

Ant. No more light answers. Let our officers

Have notice what we purpose. I shall break The cause of our expedience to the Queen, 185
And get her leave to part. For not alone The death of Fulvia, with more urgent touches, Do strongly speak to us; but the letters too Of many our contriving friends in Rome Petition us at home. Sextus Pompeius 190
Hath given the dare to Cæsar, and commands The empire of the sea. Our slippery people, Whose love is never link'd to the deserver Till his deserts are past, begin to throw Pompey the Great and all his dignities 195
Upon his son; who, high in name and power, Higher than both in blood and life, stands up For the main soldier; whose quality, going on, The sides o' the world may danger. Much is breeding,
Which, like the courser's hair, hath yet but life, 200

And not a serpent's poison. Say, our pleasure, To such whose place is under us, requires Our quick remove from hence.

Eno. I shall do 't. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE III. The same. Another room.]

Enter CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, Iras, and Alexas.

Cleo. Where is he?

Char. I did not see him since.

Cleo. See where he is, who 's with him, what he does.

I did not send you. If you find him sad, Say I am dancing; if in mirth, report That I am sudden sick. Quick, and return. 5
[Exit Alexas.]

Char. Madam, methinks, if you did love him dearly,

You do not hold the method to enforce The like from him.

Cleo. What should I do, I do not?

Char. In each thing give him way, cross him in nothing.

Cleo. Thou teachest like a fool: the way to lose him. 10

Char. Tempt him not so too far; I wish, forbear.

In time we hate that which we often fear.

Enter ANTONY.

But here comes Antony.

Cleo. I am sick and sullen.

Ant. I am sorry to give breathing to my purpose, —

Cleo. Help me away, dear Charmian; I shall fall. 15

It cannot be thus long, the sides of nature Will not sustain it.

Ant. Now, my dearest queen, —

Cleo. Pray you, stand farther from me.

Ant. What 's the matter?

Cleo. I know, by that same eye, there 's some good news.

What says the married woman? You may go. 20
Would she had never given you leave to come! Let her not say 't is I that keep you here; I have no power upon you; hers you are.

Ant. The gods best know, —

Cleo. O, never was there queen So mightily betrayed! Yet at the first 25
I saw the treasons planted.

Ant. Cleopatra, —

Cleo. Why should I think you can be mine and true,

Though you in swearing shake the throned gods, Who have been false to Fulvia? Riotous madness, 30

To be entangled with those mouth-made vows, Which break themselves in swearing!

Ant. Most sweet queen, —

Cleo. Nay, pray you, seek no colour for your going,

But bid farewell, and go. When you sued staying,

Then was the time for words; no going then; Eternity was in our lips and eyes, 35

Bliss in our brows' bent; none our parts so poor,

But was a race of heaven. They are so still, Or thou, the greatest soldier of the world, Art turn'd the greatest liar.

Ant. How now, lady!

Cleo. I would I had thy inches; thou shouldst know 40

There were a heart in Egypt.

Ant. Hear me, Queen.

The strong necessity of time commands Our services a while; but my full heart

Remains in use with you. Our Italy Shines o'er with civil swords; Sextus Pom- 45

peius Makes his approaches to the port of Rome; Equality of two domestic powers

Breed scrupulous faction; the hated, grown to strength,

Are newly grown to love; the condemn'd Pompey,

Rich in his father's honour, creeps apace 50

Into the hearts of such as have not thrived Upon the present state, whose numbers threaten;

And quietness, grown sick of rest, would purge By any desperate change. My more particu- 55

lar, And that which most with you should safe my going,

Is Fulvia's death.

Cleo. Though age from folly could not give me freedom,

It does from childishness. Can Fulvia die?

Ant. She 's dead, my queen.

Look here, and at thy sovereign leisure read 60

The garbolls she awak'd: at the last, best; See when and where she died.

Cleo. O most false love!

Where be the sacred vials thou shouldst fill With sorrowful water? Now I see, I see,

In Fulvia's death, how mine receiv'd shall be.

Ant. Quarrel no more, but be prepar'd to know 66

The purposes I bear; which are, or cease,
As you shall give the advice. By the fire
That quickens Nilus' slime, I go from hence
Thy soldier, servant; making peace or war 70
As thou affects.

Cleo. Cut my lace, Charmian, come!
But let it be; I am quickly ill and well,
So Antony loves.

Ant. My precious queen, forbear;
And give true evidence to his love, which stands
An honourable trial.

Cleo. So Fulvia told me. 75
I prithee, turn aside and weep for her;
Then bid adieu to me, and say the tears
Belong to Egypt. Good now, play one scene
Of excellent dissembling; and let it look Like perfect honour.

Ant. You'll heat my blood. No more.
Cleo. You can do better yet; but this is meetly. 81

Ant. Now, by my sword, —
Cleo. And target. — Still he mends;
But this is not the best. Look, prithee, Char-
mian,
How this Herculean Roman does become
The carriage of his chafe. 85

Ant. I'll leave you, lady.

Cleo. Courteous lord, one word.
Sir, you and I must part, but that's not it;
Sir, you and I have lov'd, but there's not it;
That you know well. Something it is I would, —
O, my oblivion is a very Antony, 90
And I am all forgotten.

Ant. But that your royalty
Holds idleness your subject, I should take you
For idleness itself.

Cleo. 'Tis sweating labour
To bear such idleness so near the heart
As Cleopatra this. But, sir, forgive me, 95
Since my becomings kill me when they do
not

Eye well to you. Your honour calls you hence;
Therefore be deaf to my unpitied folly,
And all the gods go with you! Upon your sword

Sit laurel'd victory, and smooth success 100
Be strew'd before your feet!

Ant. Let us go. — Come;
Our separation so abides, and flies,
That thou, residing here, goes yet with me,
And I, hence fleeting, here remain with thee.
Away! [Exeunt. 105]

[SCENE IV. Rome. Cæsar's house.]

Enter OCTAVIUS CÆSAR, reading a letter, LEP-IDUS, and their train.

Cæs. You may see, Lepidus, and henceforth
know,

It is not Cæsar's natural vice to hate
Our great competitor. From Alexandria
This is the news: he fishes, drinks, and wastes
The lamps of night in revel; is not more man-
like 5

Than Cleopatra; nor the queen of Ptolemy

More womanly than he; hardly gave audience, or Vouchsaf'd to think he had partners. You shall find there

A man who is the abstract of all faults
That all men follow.

Lep. I must not think there are
Evils enow to darken all his goodness. 11

His faults in him seem as the spots of heaven,
More fiery by night's blackness; hereditary,
Rather than purchas'd; what he cannot change,
Than what he chooses. 16

Cæs. You are too indulgent. Let's grant it is not

Amiss to tumble on the bed of Ptolemy;
To give a kingdom for a mirth; to sit
And keep the turn of tipping with a slave;
To reel the streets at noon, and stand the buffet 20

With knaves that smell of sweat: say this becomes him, —

As his composure must be rare indeed
Whom these things cannot blemish, — yet must
Antony

No way excuse his soils, when we do bear
So great weight in his lightness. If he fill'd 25
His vacancy with his voluptuousness,
Full surfeits and the dryness of his bones
Call on him for't; but to confound such time
That drums him from his sport and speaks as loud

As his own state and ours, 't is to be chid 30
As we rate boys, who, being mature in knowledge,

Pawn their experience to their present pleasure,

And so rebel to judgement.

Enter a MESSENGER.

Lep. Here's more news.

Mess. Thy biddings have been done; and every hour,

Most noble Cæsar, shalt thou have report 35

How 't is abroad. Pompey is strong at sea;
And it appears he is belov'd of those

That only have fear'd Cæsar. To the ports
The discontents repair; and men's reports 39
Give him much wrong'd.

Cæs. I should have known no less.
It hath been taught us from the primal state,
That he which is was wish'd until he were;
And the ebb'd man, ne'er loved till ne'er worth
love,

Comes dear'd by being lack'd. This common
body,

Like to a vagabond flag upon the stream, 45
Goes to and back, lackeying the varying tide,
To rot itself with motion.

Mess. Cæsar, I bring thee word,
Meneceates and Menas, famous pirates,
Makes the sea serve them, which they ear and wound

With keels of every kind. Many hot inroads 50
They make in Italy; the borders maritime Lack blood to think on 't, and flush youth revolt.

No vessel can peep forth, but 't is as soon

Taken as seen; for Pompey's name strikes
more
Than could his war resisted.

Cæs. Antony. 55
Leave thy lascivious wassails. When thou
once

Was beaten from Modena, where thou slew'st
Hirtius and Pansa, consuls, at thy heel
Did famine follow; whom thou fought'st against,

Though daintily brought up, with patience
more 60

Than savages could suffer. Thou didst drink
The stale of horses, and the gilded puddle
Which beasts would cough at; thy palate then did deign

The roughest berry on the rudest hedge;
Yea, like the stag, when snow the pasture sheets, 65

The barks of trees thou brows'd; on the Alps
It is reported thou didst eat strange flesh,
Which some did die to look on; and all this—
It wounds thine honour that I speak it now—
Was borne so like a soldier, that thy cheek 70
So much as lank'd not.

Lep. 'T is pity of him.

Cæs. Let his shames quickly
Drive him to Rome. 'T is time we twain
Did show ourselves i' the field, and to that end Assemble we immediate council. Pompey 75
Thrives in our idleness.

Lep. To-morrow, Cæsar,
I shall be furnish'd to inform you rightly Both what by sea and land I can be able
To front this present time.

Cæs. Till which encounter,
It is my business too. Farewell. 80

Lep. Farewell, my lord. What you shall know meantime
Of stirs abroad, I shall beseech you, sir,
To let me be partaker.

Cæs. Doubt not, sir;
I knew it for my bond. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE V. Alexandria. Cleopatra's palace.]

Enter CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, IRAS, and MARDIAN.

Cleo. Charmian!

Char. Madam?

Cleo. Ha, ha!

Give me to drink mandragora.

Char.

Cleo. That I might sleep out this great gap of time 5

My Antony is away.

Char. You think of him too much.

Cleo. O, 't is treason!

Char. Madam, I trust not so.

Cleo. Thou, eunuch Mardian!

Mar. What's your Highness' pleasure?

Cleo. Not now to hear thee sing; I take no pleasure

In aught an eunuch has. 'T is well for thee, 10
That, being unseminar'd, thy freer thoughts
May not fly forth of Egypt. Hast thou affections?

Mar. Yes, gracious madam.

Cleo. Indeed!

Mar. Not in deed, madam, for I can do nothing 15

But what indeed is honest to be done;

Yet have I fierce affections, and think

What Venus did with Mars.

Cleo. O Charmian,

Where think'st thou he is now? Stands he, or sits he?

Or does he walk? Or is he on his horse? 20

O happy horse, to bear the weight of Antony!

Do bravely, horse! for wot'st thou whom thou mov'st?

The demi-Atlas of this earth, the arm
And burget of men. He's speaking now,

Or murmuring, "Where's my serpent of old Nile?" 25

For so he calls me. Now I feed myself

With most delicious poison. Think on me,

That am with Phæbus' amorous pinches black,

And wrinkled deep in time? Broad-fronted
Cæsar,

When thou wast here above the ground, I was 30

A morsel for a monarch; and great Pompey

Would stand and make his eyes grow in my brow;

There would he anchor his aspect and die

With looking on his life.

Enter ALEXAS.

Alex. Sovereign of Egypt, hail!

Cleo. How much unlike art thou Mark An-
tony! 35

Yet, coming from him, that great medicine hath

With his tinct gild'd thee.

How goes it with my brave Mark Antony?

Alex. Last thing he did, dear queen,
He kiss'd,—the last of many doubled
kisses, — 40

This orient pearl. His speech sticks in my
heart.

Cleo. Mine ear must pluck it thence.

Alex. "Good friend," quoth he,

"Say, the firm Roman to great Egypt sends

This treasure of an oyster; at whose foot,

To mend the petty present, I will piece 45

Her opulent throne with kingdoms. All the East,

Say thou, shall call her mistress." So he nodded,

And soberly did mount an arm-gaunt steed,

Who neigh'd so high that what I would have spoke

Was beastly dumb'd by him.

Cleo. What, was he sad or merry?

Alex. Like to the time o' the year between the extremes 51

Of hot and cold, he was nor sad nor merry.

Cleo. O well-divided disposition! Note him,

Note him, good Charmian, 't is the man; but note him:

He was not sad, for he would shine on those 55

That make their looks by his; he was not merry,

In which seem'd to tell them his remembrance lay

In Egypt with his joy; but between both.

O heavenly mingle! Be'st thou sad or merry,

The violence of either thee becomes, 50
So does it no man else. Met'st thou my posts?

Alex. Ay, madam, twenty several messengers:

Why do you send so thick?

Cleo. Who's born that day

When I forget to send to Antony,

Shall die a beggar. Ink and paper, Charmian. 55

Welcome, my good Alexas. Did I, Charmian,

Ever love Cæsar so?

Char. O that brave Cæsar!

Cleo. Be chok'd with such another emphasis!

Say, the brave Antony!

Char. The valiant Cæsar!

Cleo. By Isis, I will give thee bloody teeth, 70

If thou with Cæsar paragon again

My man of men.

Char. By your most gracious pardon,

I sing but after you.

Cleo. My salad days,

When I was green in judgement; cold in blood,

To say as I said then! But, come, away; 75

Get me ink and paper.

He shall have every day a several greeting,

Or I'll unpeople Egypt. [Exeunt.]

[ACT II]

[SCENE I. Messina. Pompey's house.]

Enter POMPEY, MENECRATES, and MENAS, in warlike manner.

Pom. If the great gods be just, they shall assist
The deeds of justest men.

Mene. Know, worthy Pompey,

That what they do delay, they not deny.

Pom. Whiles we are suitors to their throne,

decays

The thing we sue for.

Mene. We, ignorant of ourselves,

Beg often our own harms, which the wise

powers

Deny us for our good; so find we profit

By losing of our prayers.

Pom. I shall do well.

The people love me, and the sea is mine;

My powers are crescent, and my auguring

hope 10

Says it will come to the full. Mark Antony

In Egypt sits at dinner, and will make

No wars without-doors. Cæsar gets money where He loses hearts. Lepidus flatters both,

Of both is flatter'd; but he neither loves, 15

Nor either cares for him.

Mene. Cæsar and Lepidus

Are in the field; a mighty strength they carry.

Pom. Where have you this? 'T is false.

Mene. From Silvius, sir.

Pom. He dreams. I know they are in Rome

together,

Looking for Antony. But all the charms of

love, 20

Salt Cleopatra, soften thy wan'd lip!

Let witchcraft join with beauty, lust with both!

Tie up the libertine in a field of feasts,
Keep his brain fuming; Epicurean cooks
Sharpen with cloyless sauce his appetite; 25
That sleep and feeding may prorogue his honour
Even till a Lethe'd dulness!

Enter VARRIUS.

How now, Varrius!
Var. This is most certain that I shall deliver:

Mark Antony is every hour in Rome
Expected; since he went from Egypt 't is 30
A space for farther travel.

Pom. I could have given less matter

A better ear. Menas, I did not think

This amorous surfeiter would have donn'd his helm

For such a petty war. His soldiership

Is twice the other twain; but let us rear 35

The higher our opinion, that our stirring

Can from the lap of Egypt's widow pluck

The ne'er-lust-weared Antony.

Mene. I cannot hope

Cæsar and Antony shall well greet together.

His wife that's dead did trespasses to Cæsar; 40

His brother warr'd upon him, although, I

think,

Not mov'd by Antony.

Pom. I know not, Menas,

How lesser enmities may give way to greater.

Were 't not that we stand up against them all,

'T were pregnant they should square between 45

themselves;

For they have entertained cause enough

To draw their swords; but how the fear of us

May cement their divisions and bind up

The petty difference, we yet not know.

Be 't as our gods will have 't! It only stands 50

Our lives upon to use our strongest hands.

Come, Menas. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE II. Rome. The house of Lepidus.]

Enter ENOBARBUS and LEPIDUS.

Lep. Good Enobarbus, 't is a worthy deed,
And shall become you well, to entreat your

captain

To soft and gentle speech.

Eno. I shall entreat him

To answer like himself. If Cæsar move him, 5

Let Antony look over Cæsar's head

And speak as loud as Mars. By Jupiter,

Were I the wearer of Antonius' beard,

I would not shave 't to-day.

Lep. 'T is not a time

For private stomaching.

Eno. Every time

Serves for the matter that is then born in 't. 10

Lep. But small to greater matters must give way.

Eno. Not if the small come first.

Lep. Your speech is passion;

But, pray you, stir no embers up. Here comes

The noble Antony.

Enter ANTONY and Ventidius.

Eno. And yonder, Cæsar.

Enter CÆSAR, MÆCENAS, and AGRIPPA.

Ant. If we compose well here, to Parthia! 15
Hark, Ventidius.

Cæs. I do not know,
Mæcenas; ask Agrippa.

Lep. Noble friends,
That which combin'd us was most great, and let not

A leaner action rend us. What's amiss,
May it be gently heard; when we debate 20
Our trivial difference loud, we do commit
Murder in healing wounds; then, noble partners,

The rather, for I earnestly beseech,
Touch you the sourest points with sweetest
terms,

Nor curstness grow to the matter.

Ant. 'Tis spoken well.
Were we before our armies, and to fight, 25
I should do thus. [Flourish.]

Cæs. Welcome to Rome.

Ant. Thank you.

Cæs. Sit.

Ant. Sit, sir.

Cæs. Nay, then.

Ant. I learn you take things ill which are not so,

Or being, concern you not.

Cæs. I must be laugh'd at,
If, or for nothing or a little, I 31
Should say myself offended, and with you Chiefly i' the world; more laugh'd at, that I should

Once name you derogately, when to sound your name

It not concern'd me.

Ant. My being in Egypt, Cæsar,
What was 't to you? 35

Cæs. No more than my residing here at
Rome

Might be to you in Egypt; yet, if you there
Did practise on my state, your being in Egypt
Might be my question.

Ant. How intend you, practis'd?
Cæs. You may be pleas'd to catch at mine intent 41

By what did here befall me. Your wife and
brother

Made wars upon me; and their contestation
Was theme for you, you were the word of war.

Ant. You do mistake your business; my brother never 45

Did urge me in his act. I did inquire it,
And have my learning from some true reports
That drew their swords from you. Did he not rather

Discredit my authority with yours, 49
And make the wars alike against my stomach,
Having alike your cause? Of this my letters
Before did satisfy you. If you'll patch a quarrel,

As matter whole you have not to make it with,
It must not be with this.

Cæs. You praise yourself
By laying defects of judgement to me; but 55
You patch'd up your excuses.

Ant.

Not so, not so.

I know you could not lack, I am certain on 't,
Very necessity of this thought, that I,
Your partner in the cause 'gainst which he fought,

Could not with graceful eyes attend those wars Which fronted mine own peace. As for my wife, 61

I would you had her spirit in such another.
The third o' the world is yours, which with a snaffle

You may pace easy, but not such a wife.

Eno. Would we had all such wives, that the men might go to wars with the women! 64

Ant. So much uncurbable her garboils,
Cæsar,

Made out of her impatience, which not wanted
Shrewdness of policy too, I grieving grant
Did you too much disquiet. For that you must
But say, I could not help it.

Cæs. I wrote to you 71

When rioting in Alexandria; you
Did pocket up my letters, and with taunts
Did gibe my missive out of audience.

Ant. Sir,
He fell upon me ere admitted. Then 75
Three kings I had newly feasted, and did want

Of what I was i' the morning; but next day
I told him of myself, which was as much
As to have ask'd him pardon. Let this fellow
Be nothing of our strife; if we contend, 80
Out of our question wipe him.

Cæs. You have broken
The article of your oath; which you shall never Have tongue to charge me with.

Lep. Soft, Cæsar!

Ant. No,

Lepidus, let him speak.
The honour is sacred which he talks on now, 85
Supposing that I lack'd it. But, on, Cæsar:
The article of my oath.

Cæs. To lend me arms and aid when I requir'd them;

The which you both denied.

Ant. Neglected, rather;
And then when poisoned hours had bound me
up 90

From mine own knowledge. As nearly as I may,
I'll play the penitent to you; but mine honesty Shall not make poor my greatness, nor my power

Work without it. Truth is, that Fulvia,
To have me out of Egypt, made wars here; 95
For which myself, the ignorant motive, do
So far ask pardon as befits mine honour
To stoop in such a case.

Lep. 'Tis noble spoken.

Mæc. If it might please you, to enforce no
further

The griefs between ye. To forget them quite 100
Were to remember that the present need
Speaks to atone you.

Lep. Worthily spoken, Mæcenas.

Eno. Or, if you borrow one another's love for the instant, you may, when you hear no more words of Pompey, return it again. You shall have time to wrangle in when you have nothing else to do. 107

Ant. Thou art a soldier only; speak no more.

Eno. That truth should be silent I had almost forgot.

Ant. You wrong this presence; therefore speak no more. 111

Eno. Go to, then; your considerate stone.

Cæs. I do not much dislike the matter, but The manner of his speech; for 't cannot be We shall remain in friendship, our conditions 115 So differing in their acts. Yet, if I knew What hoop should hold us staunch, from edge to edge

O' the world I would pursue it.

Agri. Give me leave, Cæsar, —

Cæs. Speak, Agrippa.

Agri. Thou hast a sister by the mother's side, 120

Admir'd Octavia. Great Mark Antony Is now a widower.

Cæs. Say not so, Agrippa.

If Cleopatra heard you, your reproof Were well deserved of rashness.

Ant. I am not married, Cæsar; let me hear Agrippa further speak. 126

Agri. To hold you in perpetual amity,

To make you brothers, and to knit your hearts With an unslipping knot, take Antony Octavia to his wife; whose beauty claims 130 No worse a husband than the best of men; Whose virtue and whose general graces speak That which none else can utter. By this marriage,

All little jealousies, which now seem great, And all great fears, which now import their dangers, 135

Would then be nothing. Truths would be tales, Where now half-tales be truths; her love to both

Would each to other and all loves to both Draw after her. Pardon what I have spoke; For 'tis a studied, not a present thought, 140 By duty ruminated.

Ant. Will Cæsar speak?

Cæs. Not till he hears how Antony is touch'd With what is spoke already.

Ant. What power is in Agrippa, If I would say, "Agrippa, be it so," To make this good?

Cæs. The power of Cæsar, and His power unto Octavia.

Ant. May I never 146

To this good purpose, that so fairly shows, Dream of impediment! Let me have thy hand. Further this act of grace; and from this hour The heart of brothers govern in our loves 150 And sway our great designs!

Cæs. There 's my hand.

A sister I bequeath you, whom no brother Did ever love so dearly. Let her live To join our kingdoms and our hearts; and never Fly off our loves again!

Lep. Happily, amen! 155

Ant. I did not think to draw my sword 'gainst Pompey;

For he hath laid strange courtesies and great Of late upon me. I must thank him only, Lest my remembrance suffer ill report; At heel of that, defy him.

Lep. Time calls upon 's. Of us must Pompey presently be sought, 161 Or else he seeks out us.

Ant. Where lies he?

Cæs. About the mount Misenum.

Ant. What is his strength by land?

Cæs. Great and increasing; but by sea 165 He is an absolute master.

Ant. So is the fame.

Would we had spoke together! Haste we for it;

Yet, ere we put ourselves in arms, dispatch we The business we have talk'd of.

Cæs. With most gladness; And do invite you to my sister's view, 170 Whither straight I'll lead you.

Ant. Let us, Lepidus

Not lack your company.

Lep. Noble Antony,

Not sickness should detain me.

[Flourish. Exeunt Cæsar, Antony, Lepidus, and Ventidius.]

Mæc. Welcome from Egypt, sir. 174

Eno. Half the heart of Cæsar, worthy Mæcenas! My honourable friend, Agrippa!

Agri. Good Enocharbus!

Mæc. We have cause to be glad that matters are so well digested. You stay'd well by 't in Egypt. 180

Eno. Ay, sir; we did sleep day out of countenance, and made the night light with drinking.

Mæc. Eight wild boars roasted whole at a breakfast, and but twelve persons there; is this true? 185

Eno. This was but as a fly by an eagle. We had much more monstrous matter of feast, which worthily deserved noting.

Mæc. She's a most triumphant lady, if report be square to her. 190

Eno. When she first met Mark Antony, she purs'd up his heart, upon the river of Cydnus.

Agri. There she appear'd indeed, or my reporter devis'd well for her.

Eno. I will tell you. 195

The barge she sat in, like a burnish'd throne, Burn'd on the water. The poop was beaten gold;

Purple the sails, and so perfumed that

The winds were love-sick with them. The oars were silver,

Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke, and made 200

The water which they beat to follow faster, As amorous of their strokes. For her own person,

It beggar'd all description: she did lie

In her pavilion — cloth-of-gold of tissue —

O'er-picturing that Venus where we see 205

The fancy outwork nature. On each side her

Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids,

With divers-colour'd fans, whose wind did seem

To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool,
And what they undid did.

Ag. O, rare for Antony!

Eno. Her gentlewomen, like the Nereides,
So many mermaids, tended her i' the eyes,
And made their bends adornings. At the helm
A seeming mermaid steers; the silken tackle Swell with the touches of those flower-soft
hands,

That rarely frame the office. From the barge
A strange invisible perfume hits the sense
Of the adjacent wharfs. The city cast
Her people out upon her; and Antony
Enthron'd i' the market-place, did sit alone,
Whistling to the air, which, but for vacancy,
Had gone to gaze on Cleopatra too
And made a gap in nature.

Ag. Rare Egyptian!

Eno. Upon her landing, Antony sent to her,
Invited her to supper. She replied,
It should be better he became her guest;
Which she entreated. Our courteous Antony, Whom ne'er the word of "No" woman heard
speak,
Being barber'd ten times o'er, goes to the feast,
And for his ordinary pays his heart
For what his eyes eat only.

Ag. Royal wench!
She made great Cæsar lay his sword to bed.
He plough'd her, and she cropp'd.

Eno. I saw her once
Hop forty paces through the public street;
And having lost her breath, she spoke, and panted,

That she did make defect perfection,
And, breathless, power breathe forth.

Mec. Now Antony must leave her utterly.

Eno. Never; he will not.
Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale
Her infinite variety. Other women cloy
The appetites they feed, but she makes hungry
Where most she satisfies, for vilest things
Become themselves in her, that the holy priests
Bless her when she is riggish.

Mec. If beauty, wisdom, modesty, can settle
The heart of Antony, Octavia is
A blessed lottery to him.

Ag. Let us go.
Good Enobarbus, make yourself my guest
Whilst you abide here.

Eno. Humbly, sir, I thank you.
[Exeunt.]

[SCENE III. The same. Cæsar's house.]

Enter ANTONY, CÆSAR, OCTAVIA between them
[and Attendants.]

Ant. The world and my great office will sometimes
Divide me from your bosom.

Octa. All which time
Before the gods my knee shall bow my prayers
To them for you.

Ant. Good-night, sir. My Octavia,
Read not my blemishes in the world's report. I
I have not kept my square; but that to come

Shall all be done by the rule. Good-night, dear lady.

Good-night, sir.

Cæs. Good-night.
[Exeunt [Cæsar and Octavia].]

Enter SOTHUSAYER.

Ant. Now, sirrah; you do wish yourself in Egypt?

Sooth. Would I had never come from thence,
nor you

Thither!

Ant. If you can, your reason?
Sooth. I see it in

My motion, have it not in my tongue; but yet
Hie you to Egypt again.

Ant. Say to me,
Whose fortunes shall rise higher, Cæsar's or
mine?

Sooth. Cæsar's.
Therefore, O Antony, stay not by his side.
Thy demon, that thy spirit which keeps thee, is Noble, courageous, high, unmatchable,
Where Cæsar's is not; but, near him, thy angel Becomes a fear, as being o'erpower'd: therefore

Make space between you.

Ant. Speak this no more.
Sooth. To none but thee; no more, but when to thee.

If thou dost play with him at any game,
Thou art sure to lose; and, of that natural luck,
He beats thee 'gainst the odds. Thy lustre thickens

When he shines by. I say again, thy spirit
Is all afraid to govern thee near him;
But, he away, 't is noble.

Ant. Get thee gone. —
Say to Ventidius I would speak with him;
[Exit [Soothsayer].]

He shall to Parthia. — Be it art or hap,
He hath spoken true. The very dice obey him;
And in our sports my better cunning faints
Under his chance. If we draw lots, he speeds; so
His cocks do win the battle still of mine,
When it is all to nought; and his quails ever
Beat mine, inhoop'd, at odds. I will to Egypt;
And though I make this marriage for my peace,
I' the East my pleasure lies.

Enter Ventidius.

O, come, Ventidius.
You must to Parthia. Your commission's ready;
Follow me, and receive 't. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE IV. The same. A street.]

Enter LEPIDUS, MÆCENAS, and AGRIPPA.
Lep. Trouble yourselves no further; pray you, hasten
Your generals after.

Ag. Sir, Mark Antony
Will e'en but kiss Octavia, and we'll follow.

Lep. Till I shall see you in your soldier's dress,
Which will become you both, farewell.

Mec. We shall,
As I conceive the journey, be at the Mount
Before you, Lepidus.

Lep. Your way is shorter;
My purposes do draw me much about.
You'll win two days upon me.

Mec. Sir, good success!

Ag.

Lep. Farewell.

[Exeunt. 10]

[SCENE V. Alexandria. Cleopatra's palace.]

Enter CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, IRAS, and ALEXAS.

Cleo. Give me some music; music, moody
food

Of us that trade in love.

All. The music, ho!

Enter MARDIAN the Eunuch.

Cleo. Let it alone; let's to billiards. Come,
Charmian.

Char. My arm is sore; best play with Mar-
dian.

Cleo. As well a woman with an eunuch play'd

As with a woman. Come, you'll play with me,
sir?

Mar. As well as I can, madam.

Cleo. And when good will is showed, though
't come too short,

The actor may plead pardon. I'll none now.

Give me mine angle, we'll to the river; there, 10
My music playing far off, I will betray

Tawny-finn'd fishes; my bended hook shall pierce

Their slimy jaws; and, as I draw them up,
I'll think them every one an Antony,

And say, "Ah, ha! you're caught."

Char. 'T was merry when You wager'd on your angling; when your diver

Did hang a salt-fish on his hook, which he
With fervency drew up.

Cleo. That time, — O times! —
I laugh'd him out of patience; and that
night

I laugh'd him into patience; and next morn, 20
Like the ninth hour, I drunk him to his bed;

Then put my tires and mantles on him, whilst
I wore his sword Philippan.

Enter a MESSENGER.

O, from Italy!

Ram thou thy fruitful tidings in mine ears,
That long time have been barren.

Mess.

Cleo. Madam, madam, —
Antonio's dead! — If thou say so, vil-
lain,

Thou kill'st thy mistress; but well and free,
If thou so yield him, there is gold, and here

My bluest veins to kiss; a hand that kings
Have lipp'd, and trembled kissing.

Mess. First, madam, he is well.

Cleo. Why, there's more gold.
But, sirrah, mark, we use

To say the dead are well. Bring it to that,

The gold I give thee will I melt and pour Down thy ill-uttering throat.

Mess. Good madam, hear me.

Cleo.

Well, go to, I will.
But there's no goodness in thy face; if Antony

Be free and healthful, — so tart a favour
To trumpet such good tidings! If not well,

Thou shouldst come like a Fury crown'd with snakes,

Not like a formal man.

Mess. Will 't please you hear me?

Cleo. I have a mind to strike thee ere thou
speak'st;

Yet, if thou say Antony lives, 't is well,
Or friends with Cæsar, or not captive to him,

I'll set thee in a shower of gold, and hail 40
Rich pearls upon thee.

Mess.

Madam, he's well.

Cleo.

Well said.

Mess. And friends with Cæsar.

Cleo.

Thou'rt an honest man.

Mess. Cæsar and he are greater friends than ever.

Cleo. Make thee a fortune from me.

Mess. But yet, madam, —

Cleo. I do not like "But yet," 't does allay 50
The good precedence; fie upon "But yet!"

"But yet" is as a gaoler to bring forth
Some monstrous malefactor. Prithce, friend,

Pour out the pack of matter to mine ear,
The good and bad together. He's friends with

Cæsar; 60
In state of health thou say'st; and thou say'st free.

Mess. Free, madam! no; I made no such report.

He's bound unto Octavia.

Cleo. For what good turn?

Mess. For the best turn 't the bed.

Cleo. I am pale, Charmian.

Mess. Madam, he's married to Octavia. 60

Cleo. The most infectious pestilence upon thee! [Strikes him down.]

Mess. Good madam, patience.

Cleo. What say you? Hence,
[Strikes him again.]

Horrible villain! or I'll spurn thine eyes
Like balls before me; I'll unhair thy head.

[She hales him up and down.]
Thou shalt be whipp'd with wire, and stew'd in brine,

Smarting in ling'ring pickle. 65

Mess.

Gracious madam,
I that do bring the news made not the match.

Cleo. Say 't is not so, a province I will give
thee,

And make thy fortunes proud; the blow thou hadst

Shall make thy peace for moving me to rage; 70
And I will boot thee with what gift beside

Thy modesty can beg.

Mess.

He's married, madam.

Cleo. Rogue, thou hast liv'd too long.
[Draws a knife.]

Mess.

Nay, then I'll run.
What mean you, madam? I have made no fault.

[Exit.]

Char. Good madam, keep yourself within yourself:
The man is innocent.

Cleo. Some innocents scape not the thunder-bolt.

Melt Egypt into Nile! and kindly creatures
Turn all to serpents! Call the slave again.
Though I am mad, I will not bite him; call.

Char. He is afraid to come.

Cleo. I will not hurt him.
[Exit Charmian.]

These hands do lack nobility that they strike
A meaner than myself, since I myself
Have given myself the cause.

Re-enter [CHARMIAN and] MESSENGER.

Come hither, sir.

Though it be honest, it is never good
To bring bad news. Give to a gracious message

An host of tongues; but let ill tidings tell
Themselves when they be felt.

Mess. I have done my duty.

Cleo. Is he married?
I cannot hate thee worse than I do,
If thou again say yes.

Mess. He's married, madam.

Cleo. The gods confound thee! dost thou hold there still?

Mess. Should I lie, madam?

Cleo. O, I would thou didst,
So half my Egypt were submerg'd and made
A cistern for scald snakes! Go, get thee hence!
Hadst thou Narcissus in thy face, to me
Thou wouldst appear most ugly. He is married?

Mess. I crave your Highness' pardon.

Cleo. He is married?

Mess. Take no offence that I would not offend you.

To punish me for what you make me do
Seems much unequal. He's married to Octavia.

Cleo. O, that his fault should make a knave
of thee,

That art not what thou'rt sure of. Get thee
hence;

The merchandise which thou hast brought from
Rome

Are all too dear for me. Lie they upon thy
hand,

And be undone by 'em! [Exit Messenger.]

Char. Good your Highness, patience.

Cleo. In praising Antony, I have disprais'd
Cæsar.

Char. Many times, madam.

Cleo. I am paid for 't now.
Lead me from hence;

I faint, O Iras, Charmian! 'T is no matter.

Go to the fellow, good Alexas; bid him
Report the feature of Octavia, her years,

Her inclination; let him not leave out
The colour of her hair. Bring me word quickly.

Let him for ever go;—let him not—
Charmian,

Though he be painted one way like a Gorgon,
The other way's a Mars. Bid you Alexas

[To Mardian.]

Bring me word how tall she is. Pity me, Char-
mian,
But do not speak to me. Lead me to my chamber. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE VI. Near Misenum.]

Flourish. Enter POMPEY and MENAS at one door, with drum and trumpet: at another,
CÆSAR, ANTONY, LEPIDUS, ENOBARBUS,
Mæcenas, Agrippa, with Soldiers marching.

Pom. Your hostages I have, so have you
mine;

And we shall talk before we fight.

Cæs. Most meet
That first we come to words, and therefore have we

Our written purposes before us sent;
Which, if thou hast considered, let us know
If 't will tie up thy discontented sword,
And carry back to Sicily much tall youth
That else must perish here.

Pom. To you all three,
The senators alone of this great world,
Chief factors for the gods, I do not know
Wherefore my father should revengers want,
Having a son and friends; since Julius Cæsar,
Who at Philippi the good Brutus ghosted,
There saw you labouring for him. What was 't That mov'd pale Cassius to conspire; and
what

Made the all-honour'd, honest Roman, Brutus,
With the arm'd rest, courtiers of beauteous
freedom,

To drench the Capitol, but that they would Have one man but a man? And that is it
Hath made me rig my navy, at whose burden
The anger'd ocean foams; with which I meant
To scourge the ingratitude that despiteful Rome
Cast on my noble father.

Cæs. Take your time.
Ant. Thou canst not fear us, Pompey, with thy sails;

We'll speak with thee at sea. At land, thou know'st

How much we do o'er-count thee.

Pom. At land, indeed,
Thou dost o'er-count me of my father's house;
But, since the cuckoo builds not for himself,
Remain in 't as thou mayst.

Lep. Be pleas'd to tell us—
For this is from the present—how you take
The offers we have sent you.

Cæs. There's the point.
Ant. Which do not be entreated to, but weigh

What it is worth embrac'd.

Cæs. And what may follow,
To try a larger fortune.

Pom. You have made me offer
Of Sicily, Sardinia; and I must Rid all the sea of pirates; then, to send Measures of wheat to Rome. This'greed upon,
To part with unback'd edges, and bear back
Our targes undinted.

Cæs. Ant. Lep. That's our offer.
Pom. Know, then,

I came before you here a man prepar'd 41
To take this offer; but Mark Antony
Put me to some impatience. — Though I lose
The praise of it by telling, you must know,
When Cæsar and your brother were at blows, 42
Your mother came to Sicily and did find
Her welcome friendly.

Ant. I have heard it, Pompey;
And am well studied for a liberal thanks
Which I do owe you.

Pom. Let me have your hand.
I did not think, sir, to have met you here. 50

Ant. The beds i' the East are soft; and thanks to you,

That call'd me timelier than my purpose
hither,

For I have gain'd by 't.

Cæs. Since I saw you last,
There is a change upon you.

Pom. Well, I know not What counts harsh Fortune casts upon my face; 55

But in my bosom shall she never come,
To make my heart her vassal.

Lep. Well met here.
Pom. I hope so, Lepidus. Thus we are agreed.

I crave our composition may be written,
And seal'd between us.

Cæs. That 's the next to do.
Pom. We 'll feast each other ere we part;
and let 's 61

Draw lots who shall begin.

Ant. That will I, Pompey.

Pom. No, Antony, take the lot; but, first
Or last, your fine Egyptian cookery

Shall have the fame. I have heard that Julius Cæsar 65

Grew fat with feasting there.

Ant. You have heard much.

Pom. I have fair meanings, sir.

Ant. And fair words to them.

Pom. Then so much have I heard;

And I have heard, Apollodorus carried —

Eno. No more of that; he did so.

Pom. What, I pray you?

Eno. A certain queen to Cæsar in a mattress. 71

Pom. I know thee now. How far'st thou, soldier?

Eno. Well;

And well am like to do; for, I perceive,
Four feasts are toward.

Pom. Let me shake thy hand;
I never hated thee. I have seen thee fight, 75

When I have envied thy behaviour.

Eno. Sir,

I never lov'd you much; but I ha' prais'd
ye,

When you have well deserv'd ten times as
much

As I have said you did.

Pom. Enjoy thy plainness, 80
It nothing ill becomes thee.

Aboard my galley I invite you all:
Will you lead, lords?

Cæs. Ant. Lep. Show us the way, sir.

Pom.

Come.

[Exeunt all but Menas and Enobarbus.]

Men. [Aside.] Thy father, Pompey, would ne'er have made this treaty. — You and I have known, sir. 85

Eno. At sea, I think.

Men. We have, sir.

Eno. You have done well by water.

Men. And you by land. 90

Eno. I will praise any man that will praise me; though it cannot be denied what I have done by land.

Men. Nor what I have done by water. 94

Eno. Yes, something you can deny for your own safety. You have been a great thief by sea.

Men. And you by land.

Eno. There I deny my land service. But give me your hand, Menas. If our eyes had authority, here they might take two thieves kiss-
ing. 101

Men. All men's faces are true, whate'er their hands are.

Eno. But there is never a fair woman has a true face. 105

Men. No slander; they steal hearts.

Eno. We came hither to fight with you.

Men. For my part, I am sorry it is turn'd to a drinking. Pompey doth this day laugh away his fortune. 110

Eno. If he do, sure, he cannot weep 't back
again.

Men. You've said, sir. We look'd not for Mark Antony here. Pray you, is he married to Cleopatra? 115

Eno. Cæsar's sister is called Octavia.

Men. True, sir; she was the wife of Caius
Marcellus.

Eno. But she is now the wife of Marcus An-tonius.

Men. Pray ye, sir? 120

Eno. 'Tis true.

Men. Then is Cæsar and he for ever knit together.

Eno. If I were bound to divine of this unity,
I would not prophesy so. 125

Men. I think the policy of that purpose made more in the marriage than the love of the parties.

Eno. I think so too. But you shall find the band that seems to tie their friendship together will be the very strangler of their amity. Octavia is of a holy, cold, and still conversation. 131

Men. Who would not have his wife so?

Eno. Not he that himself is not so; which is Mark Antony. He will to his Egyptian dish again. Then shall the sighs of Octavia blow the fire up in Cæsar; and, as I said before, 135 that which is the strength of their amity shall prove the immediate author of their variance.

Antony will use his affection where it is; he married but his occasion here. 140

Men. And thus it may be. Come, sir, will you aboard? I have a health for you.

Eno. I shall take it, sir; we have us'd our throats in Egypt.

Men. Come, let 's away.

[Exeunt. 145]

[SCENE VII. On board Pompey's galley, off Misenum.]

Music plays. Enter two or three SERVANTS with a banquet.

1. Serv. Here they'll be, man. Some o' their plants are ill-rooted already; the least wind i' the world will blow them down.

2. Serv. Lepidus is high-colour'd.

1. Serv. They have made him drink alms-drink.

2. Serv. As they pinch one another by the disposition, he cries out, "No more"; reconciles them to his entreaty, and himself to the drink.

1. Serv. But it raises the greater war between him and his discretion.

2. Serv. Why, this it is to have a name in great men's fellowship. I had as lief have a reed that will do me no service as a partisan I could not heave.

1. Serv. To be called into a huge sphere, and not to be seen to move in't, are the holes where eyes should be, which pitifully disaster the cheeks.

A sennet sounded. Enter CÆSAR, ANTONY, LEPIDUS, POMPEY, Agrippa, Mæcenæ, ENOBARBUS, MENAS, with other captains.

Ant. [To Cæsar.] Thus do they, sir: they take the flow o' the Nile

By certain scales i' the pyramid; they know, By the height, the lowness, or the mean, if dearth

Or foison follow. The higher Nilus swells, The more it promises; as it ebbs, the seedsman Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain, And shortly comes to harvest.

Lep. You've strange serpents there?

Ant. Ay, Lepidus.

Lep. Your serpent of Egypt is bred now of your mud by the operation of your sun. So is your crocodile.

Ant. They are so.

Pom. Sit,—and some wine! A health to Lepidus!

Lep. I am not so well as I should be, but I'll ne'er out.

Eno. Not till you have slept; I fear me you'll be in till then.

Lep. Nay, certainly, I have heard the Ptolemies' pyramids are very goodly things; without contradiction, I have heard that.

Men. [Aside to Pom.] Pompey, a word.

Pom. [Aside to Men.] Say in mine ear: what is't?

Men. [Aside to Pom.] Forsake thy seat, I do beseech thee, captain, And hear me speak a word.

Pom. (Whispers in's ear.) Forbear me till anon.—

This wine for Lepidus!

Lep. What manner o' thing is your crocodile?

Ant. It is shap'd, sir, like itself; and it is as broad as it hath breadth. It is just so high as it is, and moves with it own organs. It lives by that which nourisheth it; and the elements once out of it, it transmigrates.

Lep. What colour is it of?

Ant. Of it own colour too.

Lep. 'Tis a strange serpent.

Ant. 'Tis so. And the tears of it are wet.

Cæs. Will this description satisfy him?

Ant. With the health that Pompey gives him, else he is a very epicure.

Pom. [Aside to Men.] Go hang, sir, hang!

Tell me of that? Away!

Do as I bid you.—Where's this cup I call'd for?

Men. [Aside to Pom.] If for the sake of merit thou wilt hear me, Rise from thy stool.

Pom. [Aside to Men.] I think thou'rt mad.

The matter? [Rises, and walks aside.]

Men. I have ever held my cap off to thy fortunes.

Pom. Thou hast serv'd me with much faith.

What's else to say?

Be jolly, lords.

Ant. These quick-sands, Lepidus, Keep off them, for you sink.

Men. Wilt thou be lord of all the world?

Pom. What say'st thou?

Men. Wilt thou be lord of the whole world? That's twice.

Pom. How should that be?

Men. But entertain it, And, though thou think me poor, I am the man

Will give thee all the world.

Pom. Hast thou drunk well?

Men. No, Pompey, I have kept me from the cup.

Thou art, if thou dar'st be, the earthly Jove.

Whate'er the ocean pales, or sky inclips,

Is thine, if thou wilt ha't.

Pom. Show me which way.

Men. These three world-sharers, these competitors,

Are in thy vessel: let me cut the cable;

And, when we are put off, fall to their throats. All there is thine.

Pom. Ah, this thou shouldst have done, And not have spoke on't! In me't is villainy; In thee't had been good service. Thou must know,

'Tis not my profit that does lead mine honour; Mine honour, it. Repent that e'er thy tongue Hath so betray'd thine act. Being done unknown,

I should have found it afterwards well done; But must condemn it now. Desist, and drink.

Men. [Aside.] For this, I'll never follow thy pall'd fortunes more.

Who seeks, and will not take when once't is offer'd,

Shall never find it more.

Pom. This health to Lepidus!

Ant. Bear him ashore. I'll pledge it for him, Pompey.

Eno. Here's to thee, Menas!

Men. Enobarbus, welcome!

Pom. Fill till the cup be hid.

Eno. There 's a strong fellow, Menas.

[Pointing to the Attendant who carries off Lepidus.]

Men. Why?

Eno. 'A bears the third part of the world, man; see'st not?

Men. The third part, then, is drunk. Would it were all,

That it might go on wheels!

Eno. Drink thou; increase the reels. 100

Men. Come.

Pom. This is not yet an Alexandrian feast.

Ant. It ripens towards it. Strike the vessels, ho!

Here 's to Cæsar!

Cæs. I could well forbear 't.

It 's monstrous labour when I wash my brain 105
And it grows fowler,

Ant. Be a child o' the time.

Cæs. Possess it, I 'll make answer.

But I had rather fast from all, four days,
Than drink so much in one. 109

Eno. Ha, my brave emperor! [To Antony.]
Shall we dance now the Egyptian Bacchanals,
And celebrate our drink?

Pom. Let 's ha 't, good soldier.

Ant. Come, let 's all take hands,
Till that the conquering wine hath steep'd our sense

In soft and delicate Lethe.

Eno. All take hands.

Make battery to our ears with the loud music; 116

The while I 'll place you; then the boy shall sing.

The holding every man shall bear as loud
As his strong sides can volley.

[Music plays. Enobarbus places them hand in hand.]

THE SONG.

Come, thou monarch of the vine, 120

Plumpy Bacchus with pink eyne!

In thy vats our cares be drown'd,

With thy grapes our hairs be crown'd!

Cup us, till the world go round,

Cup us, till the world go round! 125

Cæs. What would you more? Pompey, good-night. Good brother,

Let me request you off; our graver business

Frowns at this levity. Gentle lords, let 's part;
You see we have burnt our cheeks. Strong

Enobarb

Is weaker than the wine, and mine own
tongue. 130

Splits what it speaks; the wild disguise hath almost

Antick'd us all. What needs more words?
Good-night.

Good Antony, your hand.

Pom. I 'll try you on the shore.

Ant. And shall, sir; give 's your hand.

Pom.

O Antony,

You have my father's house, — But, what?
we are friends. 135

Come, down into the boat.

Eno. Take heed you fall not.

[Exeunt all but Enobarbus and Menas.]

Menas, I 'll not on shore.

Men. No, to my cabin.

These drums! these trumpets, flutes! what!
Let Neptune hear we bid a loud farewell
To these great fellows. Sound and be hang'd, sound out!

[Sound a flourish, with drums.]

Eno. Ho! says 'a. There 's my cap. 141

Men. Ho! Noble captain, come. [Exeunt.]

[ACT III]

[SCENE I. A plain in Syria.]

Enter VENTIDIUS as if were in triumph [with SILIUS, and other Romans, Officers, and Soldiers;] the dead body of Pacorus borne before him.

Ven. Now, darting Parthia, art thou struck;
and now

Pleas'd Fortune does of Marcus Crassus' death
Make me revenger. Bear the King's son's body
Before our army. Thy Pacorus, Orodes, Pays this for Marcus Crassus.

[Sil.] Noble Ventidius, Whilst yet with Parthian blood thy sword is warm,

The fugitive Parthians follow. Spur through Media,

Mesopotamia, and the shelters whither
The routed fly; so thy grand captain Antony
Shall set thee on triumphant chariots and 10
Put garlands on thy head.

Ven. O Silius, Silius,
I have done enough; a lower place, note well,
May make too great an act. For learn this,
Silius;

Better to leave undone, than by our deed
Acquire too high a fame when him we serve 's
away. 15

Cæsar and Antony have ever won

More in their officer than person. Sossius,

One of my place in Syria, his lieutenant,

For quick accumulation of renown,

Which he achiev'd by the minute, lost his favour. 20

Who does it? the wars more than his captain can Becomes his captain's captain; and ambition,
The soldier's virtue, rather makes choice of loss,

Than gain which darkens him.

I could do more to do Antonius good, 25

But 't would offend him; and in his offence

Should my performance perish.

[Sil.] Thou hast, Ventidius, that Without the which a soldier and his sword Grants scarce distinction. Thou wilt write to Antony?

Ven. I 'll humbly signify what in his name, 30
That magical word of war, we have effected;
How, with his banners and his well-paid ranks,
The ne'er-yet-beaten horse of Parthia
We have jaded out o' the field.

Sil. Where is he now?
Ven. He purposeth to Athens; whither, with what haste ³⁵
 The weight we must convey with 's will permit.
 We shall appear before him. On, there; pass along! [Exeunt.]

[SCENE II. Rome. An ante-chamber in Cæsar's house.]

Enter AGRIPPA at one door, ENOBARBUS at another.

Agr. What, are the brothers parted?
Eno. They have dispatch'd with Pompey, he is gone;
 The other three are sealing. Octavia weeps
 To part from Rome; Cæsar is sad; and Lepi-dus,
 Since Pompey's feast, as Menas says, is troubled ⁵
 With the green sickness.

Agr. 'T is a noble Lepidus.
Eno. A very fine one. O, how he loves
 Cæsar!

Agr. Nay, but how dearly he adores Mark
 Antony!

Eno. Cæsar? Why, he's the Jupiter of men.

Agr. What's Antony? The god of Jupiter.
Eno. Spake you of Cæsar? How! the nonpareil! ¹¹

Agr. O Antony! O thou Arabian bird!
Eno. Would you praise Cæsar, say "Cæsar";
 go no further.

Agr. Indeed, he plied them both with excellent praises.

Eno. But he loves Cæsar best; yet he loves
 Antony. ¹⁵

Ho! hearts, tongues, figures, scribes, bards, poets, cannot

Think, speak, cast, write, sing, number, ho!
 His love to Antony. But as for Cæsar,
 Kneel down, kneel down, and wonder.

Agr. Both he loves.
Eno. They are his shards, and he their beetle. [Trumpets within.] So; ²⁰

This is to horse. Adieu, noble Agrippa.

Agr. Good fortune, worthy soldier; and farewell.

Enter CÆSAR, ANTONY, LEPIDUS, and OCTAVIA.

Ant. No further, sir.
Cæs. You take from me a great part of myself;

Use me well in 't. Sister, prove such a wife ²⁵
 As my thoughts make thee, and as my farthest
 band

Shall pass on thy approval. Most noble Antony,
 Let not the piece of virtue which is set
 Betwixt us as the cement of our love,
 To keep it builded, be the ram to batter ³⁰
 The fortress of it; for better might we Have lov'd without this mean, if on both parts
 This be not cherish'd.

Ant. Make me not offended
 In your distrust.

Cæs. I have said.
Ant. You shall not find,
 Though you be therein curious, the least cause ³⁵
 For what you seem to fear. So, the gods keep
 you,
 And make the hearts of Romans serve your ends!

We will here part.
Cæs. Farewell, my dearest sister, fare thee
 well!

The elements be kind to thee, and make ⁴⁰
 Thy spirits all of comfort! Fare thee well!

Oct. My noble brother!

Ant. The April's in her eyes; it is love's
 spring,

And these the showers to bring it on. Be cheerful.

Oct. Sir, look well to my husband's house;
 and—

Cæs. What, ⁴⁵
 Octavia?

Oct. I'll tell you in your ear.
Ant. Her tongue will not obey her heart, nor can

Her heart inform her tongue, — the swan's down-feather,

That stands upon the swell at full of tide,
 And neither way inclines.

Eno. [Aside to Agr.] Will Cæsar weep? ⁵⁰
Agr. [Aside to Agr.] He has a cloud in 's
 face.

Eno. [Aside to Agr.] He were the worse for that, were he a horse;

So is he, being a man.

Agr. [Aside to Eno.] Why, Enobarbus,
 When Antony found Julius Cæsar dead,

He cried almost to roaring; and he wept ⁵⁵
 When at Philippi he found Brutus slain.

Eno. [Aside to Agr.] That year, indeed, he was troubled with a rheum;

What willingly he did confound he wail'd,
 Believe 't, till I wept too.

Cæs. No, sweet Octavia,
 You shall hear from me still; the time shall not ⁶⁰

Out-go my thinking on you.

Ant. Come, sir, come;
 I'll wrestle with you in my strength of love.

Look, here I have you; thus I let you go,
 And give you to the gods.

Cæs. Adieu; be happy!

Lep. Let all the number of the stars give light ⁶⁵

To thy fair way!

Cæs. Farewell, farewell!
 [Kisses Octavia.]

Ant. Farewell!
 [Trumpets sound. Exeunt.]

[SCENE III. Alexandria. Cleopatra's palace.]

 ALEXAS.*

Cleo. Where is the fellow?

Alex. Half afraid to come.
Cleo. Go to, go to. Come hither, sir.

Enter the MESSENGER as before.

Alex. Good Majesty,
Herod of Jewry dare not look upon you
But when you are well pleas'd.

Cleo. That Herod's head
I'll have; but how, when Antony is gone Through whom I might command it? Come thou near.

Mess. Most gracious Majesty, —
Cleo. Didst thou behold Octavia?

Mess. Ay, dread queen.

Cleo. Where? 10

Mess. Madam, in Rome;
I look'd her in the face, and saw her led Between her brother and Mark Antony.

Cleo. Is she as tall as me?

Mess. She is not, madam.

Cleo. Didst hear her speak? Is she shrilltongu'd or low? 15

Mess. Madam, I heard her speak; she is lowvoic'd.

Cleo. That's not so good. He cannot like her long?

Char. Like her! O Isis! 't is impossible.

Cleo. I think so, Charmian. Dull of tongue, and dwarfish!

What majesty is in her gait? Remember, — 20
If e'er thou look'dst on majesty.

Mess. She creeps;
Her motion and her station are as one;
She shows a body rather than a life,
A statue than a breather.

Cleo. Is this certain? 24

Mess. Or I have no observance.

Char. Three in Egypt
Cannot make better note.

Cleo. He's very knowing;
I do perceive 't. There's nothing in her yet.
The fellow has good judgement.

Char. Excellent.

Cleo. Guess at her years, I prithee.

Mess. Madam,
She was a widow, —

Cleo. Widow! Charmian, hark.

Mess. And I do think she's thirty. 31

Cleo. Bear'st thou her face in mind? Is 't long or round?

Mess. Round even to faultiness.

Cleo. For the most part, too, they are foolish that are so.

Her hair, what colour? 35

Mess. Brown, madam; and her forehead
As low as she would wish it.

Cleo. There's gold for thee.
Thou must not take my former sharpness ill.
I will employ thee back again; I find thee
Most fit for business. Go make thee ready; 40
Our letters are prepar'd. [Exit Messenger.]

Char. A proper man.

Cleo. Indeed, he is so; I repent me much That so I harried him. Why, methinks, by
him,

This creature's no such thing.

Char. Nothing, madam.

Cleo. The man hath seen some majesty, and should know. 45

Char. Hath he seen majesty? Isis else defend,
And serving you so long!

Cleo. I have one thing more to ask him yet,
good Charmian:

But 't is no matter; thou shalt bring him to
me

Where I will write. All may be well enough. 50

Char. I warrant you, madam. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE IV. Athens. A room in Antony's house.]

Enter ANTONY and OCTAVIA.

Ant. Nay, nay, Octavia, not only that, —
That were excusable, that, and thousands more
Of semblable import, — but he hath wag'd
New wars 'gainst Pompey; made his will, and read it

To public ear;
Spoke scantily of me; when perforce he could
not

But pay me terms of honour, cold and sickly
He vented them; most narrow measure lent
me:

When the best hint was given him, he not took 't,

Or did it from his teeth.

Oct. O my good lord, 10

Believe not all; or, if you must believe,
Stomach not all. A more unhappy lady,

If this division chance, ne'er stood between,
Praying for both parts.

The good gods will mock me presently, 15

When I shall pray, "O, bless my lord and
husband!"

Undo that prayer, by crying out as loud,
"O, bless my brother!" Husband win, win
brother,

Prays, and destroys the prayer; no midway
'Twixt these extremes at all.

Ant. Gentle Octavia,

Let your best love draw to that point which seeks 21

Best to preserve it. If I lose mine honour,
I lose myself; better I were not yours

Than yours so branchless. But, as you requested,

Yourself shall go between's. The meantime, 25

I'll raise the preparation of a war
Shall stain your brother. Make your soonest
haste;

So your desires are yours.

Oct. Thanks to my lord.

The Jove of power make me most weak, most
weak,

Your reconciler! Wars 'twixt you twain would
be 30

As if the world should cleave, and that slain
men

Should solder up the rift.

Ant. When it appears to you where this begins,

Turn your displeasure that way; for our faults
Can never be so equal, that your love 35

Can equally move with them. Provide your going;

Choose your own company, and command what cost
Your heart has mind to. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE V. The same. Another room.]

Enter ENOBARBUS and EROS [meeting].

Eno. How now, friend Eros!

Eros. There's strange news come, sir.

Eros. What, man?

Eros. Cæsar and Lepidus have made wars upon Pompey.

Eno. This is old; what is the success?

Eros. Cæsar, having made use of him in the wars 'gainst Pompey, presently denied him rivalry, would not let him partake in the glory of the action; and not resting here, accuses him of letters he had formerly wrote to Pompey; upon his own appeal, seizes him. So the poor third is up, till death enlarge his confine.

Eno. Then, world, thou hast a pair of chaps,
no more;

And throw between them all the food thou
hast,

They'll grind the one the other. Where's An-
tony?

Eros. He's walking in the garden—thus;
and spurns

The rush that lies before him; cries, "Fool Lepidus!"

And threatens the throat of that his officer
That murd'ring Pompey.

Eno. Our great navy's rigg'd.

Eros. For Italy and Cæsar. More, Domitius;

My lord desires you presently; my news
I might have told hereafter.

Eno. 'T will be nought:

But let it be. Bring me to Antony.

Eros. Come, sir. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE VI. Rome. Cæsar's house.]

Enter CÆSAR, AGRIPPA, and MÆCENAS.

Cæs. Contemning Rome, he has done all this,
and more,

In Alexandria. Here's the manner of 't:
I' the market-place, on a tribunal silver'd,
Cleopatra and himself in chairs of gold
Were publicly enthron'd. At the feet sat
Cæsarion, whom they call my father's son,
And all the unlawful issue that their lust
Since then hath made between them. Unto her
He gave the stablishment of Egypt; made her
Of lower Syria, Cyprus, Lydia,
Absolute queen.

Mæc. This in the public eye?

Cæs. I' the common show-place, where they exercise.

His sons he there proclaim'd the kings of kings:
Great Media, Parthia, and Armenia,
He gave to Alexander; to Ptolemy he assign'd Syria, Cilicia, and Phœnicia. She
In the habiliments of the goddess Isis
That day appear'd; and oft before gave audience,

As 't is reported, so.

Mæc.

Let Rome be thus

Inform'd.

Agr. Who, queasy with his insolence Already, will their good thoughts call from
him.

Cæs. The people knows it; and have now
receiv'd
His accusations.

Agr. Who does he accuse?

Cæs. Cæsar; and that, having in Sicily
Sextus Pompeius spoil'd, we had not rated him
His part o' the isle. Then does he say, he lent
me

Some shipping unrestor'd. Lastly, he frets

That Lepidus of the triumvirate
Should be depos'd; and, being, that we detain
All his revenue.

Agr. Sir, this should be answer'd.

Cæs. 'T is done already, and the messenger
gone.

I have told him Lepidus was grown too cruel;
That he his high authority abus'd,
And did deserve his change. For what I have conquer'd,

I grant him part; but then, in his Armenia
And other of his conquer'd kingdoms, I Demand the like.

Mæc. He'll never yield to that.

Cæs. Nor must not then be yielded to in this.

Enter OCTAVIA with her train.

Oct. Hail, Cæsar, and my lord! Hail, most dear Cæsar!

Cæs. That ever I should call thee casta-
way!

Oct. You have not call'd me so, nor have you cause.

Cæs. Why have you stolen upon us thus?
You come not

Like Cæsar's sister. The wife of Antony
Should have an army for an usher, and
The neighs of horse to tell of her approach
Long ere she did appear; the trees by the way
Should have borne men, and expectation fainted,

Longing for what it had not; nay, the dust
Should have ascended to the roof of heaven, Rais'd by your populous troops. But you are
come

A market-maid to Rome, and have prevented
The ostentation of our love, which, left un-shown,

Is often left unlov'd. We should have met you
By sea and land; supplying every stage
With an augmented greeting.

Oct. Good my lord,

To come thus was I not constrain'd, but did
On my free will. My lord, Mark Antony,
Hearing that you prepar'd for war, acquainted
My griev'd ear withal; whereon, I begg'd
His pardon for return.

Cæs. Which soon he granted,
Being an obstruct 'tween his lust and him.

Oct. Do not say so, my lord.

Cæs. I have eyes upon him,
And his affairs come to me on the wind.
Where is he now?

Oct. My lord, in Athens.
Cæs. No, my most wronged sister; Cleopatra⁶⁵
 Hath nodded him to her. He hath given his empire
 Up to a whore; who now are levying
 The kings o' the earth for war. He hath assembled Boechus, the King of Libya; Archelaus,
 Of Cappadocia; Philadelphos, King⁷⁰
 Of Paphlagonia; the Thracian king, Adallas;
 King Malchus of Arabia; King of Pont;
 Herod of Jewry; Mithridates, King
 Of Comagene; Polemon and Amyntas,
 The Kings of Mede and Lycaonia,⁷⁵
 With a more larger list of seepres.

Oct. Ay me, most wretched,
 That have my heart parted betwixt two friends
 That do afflict each other!

Cæs. Welcome hither!
 Your letters did withhold our breaking forth,
 Till we perceiv'd both how you were wrong
 led⁸⁰

And we in negligent danger. Cheer your heart.
 Be you not troubled with the time, which drives
 O'er your content these strong necessities;
 But let determin'd things to destiny Hold unbewail'd their way. Welcome to Rome;⁸⁵

Nothing more dear to me. You are abus'd
 Beyond the mark of thought; and the high gods,
 To do you justice, make them ministers
 Of us and those that love you. Best of comfort,
 And ever welcome to us.

Ag. Welcome, lady.⁹⁰

Mæc. Welcome, dear madam.
 Each heart in Rome does love and pity you;
 Only the adulterous Antony, most large
 In his abominations, turns you off,
 And gives his potent regiment to a trull,⁹⁵
 That noises it against us.

Oct. Is it so, sir?
Cæs. Most certain. Sister, welcome. Pray you,
 Be ever known to patience. My dear'st sister!
 [Exeunt.]

[SCENE VII. Near Actium. Antony's camp.]

Enter CLEOPATRA and ENOBARBUS.

Cleo. I will be even with thee, doubt it not.
Eno. But why, why, why?
Cleo. Thou hast forspoke my being in these wars,
 And say'st it is not fit.

Eno. Well, is it, is it?
Cleo. If not denounc'd against us, why should not we⁵
 Be there in person?

Eno. Well, I could reply:
 If we should serve with horse and mares together,
 The horse were merely lost; the mares would bear
 A soldier and his horse.

Cleo. What is 't you say?¹⁰
Eno. Your presence needs must puzzle Antony;

Take from his heart, take from his brain,
 from's time,
 What should not then be spar'd. He is already Traduc'd for levity; and 't is said in Rome
 That Photinus an eunuch and your maids¹⁵
 Manage this war.

Cleo. Sink Rome, and their tongues rot
 That speak against us! A charge we bear i'
 the war,
 And, as the president of my kingdom, will Appear there for a man. Speak not against it;
 I will not stay behind.

Enter ANTONY and CANIDIUS.

Eno. Nay, I have done.²⁰
 Here comes the Emperor.

Ant. Is it not strange, Canidius,
 That from Tarentum and Brundisium
 He could so quickly cut the Ionian Sea,
 And take in Toryne? You have heard on 't,
 sweet?

Cleo. Celerity is never more admir'd²⁵
 Than by the negligent.

Ant. A good rebuke,
 Which might have well becom'd the best of
 men,

To taunt at slackness. Canidius, we
 Will fight with him by sea.

Cleo. By sea! what else?
Can. Why will my lord do so?

Ant. For that he dares us to 't.
Eno. So hath my lord dar'd him to single fight.³¹

Can. Ay, and to wage this battle at Pharsalia,

Where Cæsar fought with Pompey; but these offers,

Which serve not for his vantage, he shakes off;
 And so should you.

Eno. Your ships are not well mann'd;
 Your mariners are muleters, reapers, people³⁶
 Ingross'd by swift impress. In Cæsar's fleet
 Are those that often have 'gainst Pompey fought.

Their ships are yare; yours, heavy: no disgrace
 Shall fall you for refusing him at sea,⁴⁰
 Being prepar'd for land.

Ant. By sea, by sea.
Eno. Most worthy sir, you therein throw
 away

The absolute soldiership you have by land;
 Distract your army, which doth most consist
 Of war-mark'd footmen; leave unexecuted⁴⁵
 Your own renowned knowledge; quite forego
 The way which promises assurance; and Give up yourself merely to chance and hazard,
 From firm security.

Ant. I'll fight at sea.
Cleo. I have sixty sails, Cæsar none better.⁵⁰
Ant. Our overplus of shipping will we burn;
 And, with the rest full-mann'd, from the head of Actium

Beat the approaching Cæsar. But if we fail,
 We then can do 't at land.

Enter a MESSENGER.

Thy business?

Mess. The news is true, my lord; he is des-cried; 55
Cæsar has taken Toryne.

Ant. Can he be there in person? 'Tis impossible;
Strange that his power should be. Canidius,
Our nineteen legions thou shalt hold by land,
And our twelve thousand horse. We'll to our ship; 60
Away, my Thetis!

Enter a SOLDIER.

How now, worthy soldier!

Sold. O noble emperor, do not fight by sea;
Trust not to rotten planks! Do you mis-
doubt

This sword and these my wounds? Let the Egyptians

And the Phenicians go a-ducking; we 65
Have us'd to conquer, standing on the earth,
And fighting foot to foot.

Ant. Well, well: away!

[Exeunt Antony, Cleopatra, and Enobarbus.]

Sold. By Hercules, I think I am i' the right.

Can. Soldier, thou art; but his whole action grows
Not in the power on 't. So our leader's led, 70
And we are women's men.

Sold. You keep by land
The legions and the horse whole, do you not?

Can. Marcus Octavius, Marcus Justeius,
Publicola, and Cælius, are for sea;
But we keep whole by land. This speed of Cæsar's 75

Carries beyond belief.

Sold. While he was yet in Rome,
His power went out in such distractions as Beguill'd all spies.

Can. Who's his lieutenant, hear you?

Sold. They say, one Taurus.

Can. Well I know the man.

Enter a MESSENGER.

Mess. The Emperor calls Canidius, 80

Can. With news the time's with labour, and throes forth,
Each minute, some. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE VIII. A plain near Actium.]

Enter CÆSAR [and TAURUS], with his army, marching.

Cæs. Taurus!

Taur. My lord?

Cæs. Strike not by land; keep whole; provoke not battle

Till we have done at sea. Do not exceed
The prescript of this scroll. Our fortune lies 5
Upon this jump, [Exeunt.]

[SCENE IX. Another part of the plain.]

Enter ANTONY and Enobarbus.

Ant. Set we our squadrons on yond side o'
the hill,
In eye of Cæsar's battle; from which place

We may the number of the ships behold,
And so proceed accordingly. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE X. Another part of the plain.]

Canidius marcheth with his land army one way over the stage; and Taurus, the lieutenant of Cæsar, the other way. After their going in, is heard the noise of a sea-fight.

Alarum. Enter ENOBARBUS.

Eno. Nought, nought, all nought! I can behold no longer.

The Antoniad, the Egyptian admiral,
With all their sixty, fly and turn the rudder.
To see 't mine eyes are blasted.

Enter SCARUS.

Scar. Gods and goddesses,
All the whole synod of them!

Eno. What 's thy passion?

Scar. The greater cantle of the world is lost
With very ignorance; we have kiss'd away
Kingdoms and provinces.

Eno. How appears the fight?

Scar. On our side like the token'd pestilence,

Where death is sure. Yon ribaldried nag of Egypt, — 10

Whom leprosy o'ertake! — i' the midst o' the fight,

When vantage like a pair of twins appear'd,

Both as the same, or rather ours the elder,

The breese upon her, like a cow in June,
Hoists sails and flies. 15

Eno. That I beheld.

Mine eyes did sicken at the sight, and could
not

Endure a further view.

Scar. She once being loof'd,
The noble ruin of her magic, Antony,

Claps on his sea-wing, and, like a doting mallard, 20

Leaving the fight in height, flies after her.

I never saw an action of such shame;

Experience, manhood, honour, ne'er before

Did violate so itself.

Eno. Alack, alack! 24

Enter CANIDIUS.

Can. Our fortune on the sea is out of breath,
And sinks most lamentably. Had our general
Been what he knew himself, it had gone well.
O, he has given example for our flight,
Most grossly, by his own!

Eno. Ay, are you thereabouts?
Why, then, good-night indeed. 30

Can. Toward Peloponnesus are they fled.

Scar. 'T is easy to 't; and there I will attend

What further comes.

Can. To Cæsar will I render
My legions and my horse. Six kings already Show me the way of yielding;

Eno. I'll yet follow

The wounded chance of Antony, though my reason 36

Sits in the wind against me. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE XI. Alexandria. Cleopatra's palace.]Enter ANTONY with ATTENDANTS.

Ant. Hark ! the land bids me tread no more upon 't ;

It is asham'd to bear me ! Friends, come hither. I am so lated in the world, that I

Have lost my way for ever. I have a ship Laden with gold ; take that, divide it ; fly, 5 And make your peace with Cæsar.

All. Fly ! not we.

Ant. I have fled myself ; and have instructed cowards

To run and show their shoulders. Friends, be gone ;

I have myself resolv'd upon a course Which has no need of you ; be gone. 10

My treasure 's in the harbour, take it. O, I follow'd that I blush to look upon.

My very hairs do mutiny ; for the white Reprove the brown for rashness, and they them For fear and doting. Friends, be gone ; you shall 15

Have letters from me to some friends that will Sweep your way for you. Pray you, look not sad,

Nor make replies of loathness. Take the hint Which my despair proclaims ; let that be left Which leaves itself. To the sea-side straight-way ; 20

I will possess you of that ship and treasure. Leave me, I pray, a little ; pray you now.

Nay, do so ; for, indeed, I have lost command, Therefore I pray you. I'll see you by and by. [Sits down.]

Enter CLEOPATRA, led by CHARMIAN and [IRAS ;] EROS [following].

Eros. Nay, gentle madam, to him, comfort him. 25

Irás. Do, most dear queen.

Char. Do ! Why, what else ?

Cleo. Let me sit down. O Juno !

Ant. No, no, no, no, no.

Eros. See you here, sir ? 30

Ant. O fie, fie, fie !

Char. Madam !

Irás. Madam, O good empress !

Eros. Sir, sir, —

Ant. Yes, my lord, yes ; he at Philippi kept His sword e'en like a dancer, while I struck 35 The lean and wrinkled Cassius ; and 't was I That the mad Brutus ended. He alone Dealt on lieutenantantry, and no practice had In the brave squares of war ; yet now — No matter. 40

Cleo. Ah, stand by.

Eros. The Queen, my lord, the Queen.

Irás. Go to him, madam, speak to him ;

He is unqualified with very shame.

Cleo. Well then, sustain me. Oh ! 45

Eros. Most noble sir, arise ; the Queen approaches.

Her head 's declin'd, and death will seize her, but

Your comfort makes the rescue.

Ant. I have offended reputation, A most unnooble swerving.

Eros. Sir, the Queen. 55

Ant. O, whither hast thou led me, Egypt ? See,

How I convey my shame out of thine eyes By looking back what I have left behind 'Stroy'd in dishonour.

Cleo. O my lord, my lord, Forgive my fearful sails ! I little thought 55 You would have followed.

Ant. Egypt, thou knew'st too well My heart was to thy rudder tied by the strings, And thou shouldst tow me after. O'er my spirit Thy full supremacy thou knew'st, and that Thy beck might from the bidding of the gods 60 Command me.

Cleo. O, my pardon !

Ant. Now I must To the young man send humble treaties, dodge And palter in the shifts of lowness ; who With half the bulk o' the world play'd as I pleas'd, Making and marring fortunes. You did know 65 How much you were my conqueror ; and that My sword, made weak by my affection, would Obey it on all cause.

Cleo. Pardon, pardon !

Ant. Fall not a tear, I say ; one of them rates All that is won and lost. Give me a kiss. 70 Even this repays me. We sent our schoolmaster ;

Is 'a come back ? Love, I am full of lead. Some wine, within there, and our viands ! Fortune knows

We scorn her most when most she offers blows. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE XII. Egypt. Cæsar's camp.]

Enter CÆSAR, Agrippa, DOLABELLA, [THYREUS,] with others.

Cæs. Let him appear that 's come from Antony.

Know you him ?

Dol. Cæsar, 't is his schoolmaster ; An argument that he is pluck'd, when hither He sends so poor a pinion of his wing, Which had superfluous kings for messengers 5 Not many moons gone by.

Enter [EUPHRONIUS,] ambassador from Antony.

Cæs. Approach, and speak.

Euph. Such as I am, I come from Antony. I was of late as petty to his ends As is the morn-dew on the myrtle-leaf To his grand sea.

Cæs. Be 't so : declare thine office.

Euph. Lord of his fortunes he salutes thee, and 11 Requires to live in Egypt ; which not granted, He lessens his requests, and to thee sues To let him breathe between the heavens and earth,

A private man in Athens. This for him. 15 Next, Cleopatra does confess thy greatness ;

Submits her to thy might; and of thee craves
The circle of the Ptolemies for her heirs,
Now hazarded to thy grace.

Cæs. For Antony,
I have no ears to his request. The Queen 20
Of audience nor desire shall fail, so she
From Egypt drive her all-disgraced friend,
Or take his life there. This if she perform,
She shall not sue unheard. So to them both.
Euph. Fortune pursue thee!

Cæs. Bring him through the bands.

[Exit Euphronius.]

[To Thyreus.] To try thy eloquence, now 't is time; dispatch, 26

From Antony win Cleopatra; promise,
And in our name, what she requires; add
more,

From thine invention, offers. Women are not In their best fortunes strong; but want will perjure 30

The ne'er-touch'd vestal. Try thy cunning, Thyreus;

Make thine own edict for thy pains, which we
Will answer as a law.

Thyr. Cæsar, I go.

Cæs. Observe how Antony becomes his flaw,
And what thou think'st his very action speaks 35
In every power that moves.

Thyr. Cæsar, I shall.
[Exeunt.]

[SCENE XIII. *Alexandria. Cleopatra's
palace.*]

Enter CLEOPATRA, ENOBARBUS, Charmian, and Iras.

Cleo. What shall we do, Enobarbus?

Eno. Think, and die.

Cleo. Is Antony or we in fault for this?

Eno. Antony only, that would make his will Lord of his reason. What though you fled From that great face of war, whose several ranges 5

Frighted each other? Why should he follow?

The itch of his affection should not then

Have nick'd his captainship, at such a point,

When half to half the world oppos'd, he being

The mered question. 'T was a shame no less 10

Than was his loss, to course your flying flags,

And leave his navy gazing.

Cleo. Prithee, peace.

Enter ANTONY with [EUPHRONIUS,] the Ambassador.

Ant. Is that his answer?

Euph. Ay, my lord.

Ant. The Queen shall then have courtesy, so she 15

Will yield us up.

Euph. He says so.

Ant. Let her know 't.

To the boy Cæsar send this grizzled head,

And he will fill thy wishes to the brim

With principalities.

Cleo. That head, my lord?

Ant. To him again. Tell him he wears the rose 30

Of youth upon him, from which the world should note

Something particular. His coin, ships, legions, May be a coward's; whose ministers would prevail

Under the service of a child as soon

As i' the command of Cæsar. I dare him therefore 25

To lay his gay comparisons apart,

And answer me declin'd, sword against sword,
Ourselves alone. I'll write it. Follow me.

[Exeunt Antony and Euphronius.]

Eno. [Aside.] Yes, like enough high-bat-tl'd Cæsar will

Unstate his happiness, and be stag'd to the show, 30

Against a sworder! I see men's judgements are

A parcel of their fortunes; and things outward

Do draw the inward quality after them,

To suffer all alike. That he should dream,

Knowing all measures, the full Cæsar will 35

Answer his emptiness! Cæsar, thou hast sub-du'd

His judgement too.

Enter a SERVANT.

Serv. A messenger from Cæsar.

Cleo. What, no more ceremony? See, my women!

Against the blown rose may they stop their nose

That kneel'd unto the buds. Admit him, sir.

[Exit Servant.]

Eno. [Aside.] Mine honesty and I begin to square. 41

The loyalty well held to fools does make

Our faith mere folly; yet he that can endure

To follow with allegiance a fallen lord

Does conquer him that did his master conquer, 45

And earns a place i' the story.

Enter THYREUS.

Cleo. Cæsar's will?

Thyr. Hear it apart.

Cleo. None but friends: say boldly.

Thyr. So, haply, are they friends to Antony.

Eno. He needs as many, sir, as Cæsar has;
Or needs not us. If Cæsar please, our master 50

Will leap to be his friend; for us, you know
Whose he is we are, and that is, Cæsar's.

Thyr. So.

Thus then, thou most renown'd: Cæsar en-treats

Not to consider in what case thou stand'st

Further than he is Cæsar.

Cleo. Go on: right royal.

Thyr. He knows that you embrace not An-
tony 55

As you did love, but as you feared him.

Cleo. Oh!

Thyr. The scars upon your honour, therefore,
ha

Does pity, as constrained blemishes,

Not as deserved.

Cleo. He is a god, and knows 60

What is most right. Mine honour was not yielded,
But conquer'd merely.

Eno. [Aside.] To be sure of that,
I will ask Antony. Sir, sir, thou art so leaky,
That we must leave thee to thy sinking, for Thy dearest quit thee. [Exit.

Thyr. Shall I say to Cæsar 65
What you require of him? for he partly begs
To be desir'd to give. It much would please
him,

That of his fortunes you should make a staff
To lean upon; but it would warm his spirits,
To hear from me you had left Antony, 70
And put yourself under his shroud,
The universal landlord.

Cleo. What's your name?

Thyr. My name is Thyreus.

Cleo. Most kind messenger,
Say to great Cæsar this: in deputation
I kiss his conqu'ring hand. Tell him, I am prompt 75

To lay my crown at 's feet, and there to kneel.
Tell him, from his all-obeying breath I hear
The doom of Egypt.

Thyr. 'T is your noblest course.
Wisdom and fortune combating together,
If that the former dare but what it can, 80
No chance may shake it. Give me grace to lay
My duty on your hand.

Cleo. Your Cæsar's father oft,
When he hath mus'd of taking kingdoms in,
Bestow'd his lips on that unworthy place, 84
As it rain'd kisses.

Re-enter ANTONY and ENOBARBUS.

Ant. Favours, by Jove that thunders!
What art thou, fellow?

Thyr. One that but performs
The bidding of the fullest man, and worthiest
To have command obey'd.

Eno. [Aside.] You will be whipp'd.
Ant. Approach there! Ah, you kite! Now, gods and devils!

Authority melts from me. Of late, when I cried "Ho!" 90

Like boys unto a muss, kings would start forth,
And cry, "Your will?" Have you no ears?
I am

Antony yet.

Enter a SERVANT.

Take hence this Jack, and whip him.
Eno. [Aside.] 'T is better playing with a lion's whelp

Than with an old one dying.

Ant. Moon and stars!
Whip him! Were 't twenty of the greatest tributaries 95

That do acknowledge Cæsar, should I find them
So saucy with the hand of she here, — what's her name,

Since she was Cleopatra? Whip him, fellows,
Till, like a boy, you see him cringe his face, 100
And whine aloud for mercy. Take him hence.

Thyr. Mark Antony, —

Ant. Tug him away. Being whipp'd,

Bring him again; this Jack of Cæsar's shall Bear us an errand to him. —

[Exit Servant with Thyreus.
You were half blasted ere I knew you; ha! 105
Have I my pillow left unpress'd in Rome,
Forborne the getting of a lawful race,
And by a gem of women, to be abus'd
By one that looks on feeders?

Cleo. Good my lord, —
Ant. You have been a boggler ever: 110

And when we in our viciousness grow hard —
O misery on 't! — the wise gods seal our eyes;
In our own filth drop our clear judgements;
make us

Adore our errors; laugh at 's, while we strut
To our confusion.

Cleo. O, is 't come to this? 115

Ant. I found you as a morsel cold upon Dead Cæsar's trencher; nay, you were a fragment

Of Cneius Pompey's; besides what hotter
hours,

Unregist'ed in vulgar fame, you have
Luxuriously pick'd out; for, I am sure, 120
Though you can guess what temperance should
be,

You know not what it is.

Cleo. Wherefore is this?
Ant. To let a fellow that will take rewards
And say, "God quit you!" be familiar with My playfellow, your hand; this kingly seal 125
And plighter of high hearts! O, that I were Upon the hill of Basan, to outroar
The horned herd! For I have savage cause;
And to proclaim it civilly, were like
A halter'd neck which does the hangman thank
For being yare about him.

Re-enter SERVANT with Thyreus.

Is he whipp'd? 131

Serv. Soundly, my lord.
Ant. Cried he? and begg'd a pardon?
Serv. He did ask favour.

Ant. If that thy father live, let him repent
Thou wast not made his daughter; and be thou
sorry 135

To follow Cæsar in his triumph, since
Thou hast been whipp'd for following him.
Henceforth

The white hand of a lady fever thee,
Shake thou to look on 't. Get thee back to Cæsar,

Tell him thy entertainment. Look thou say 140
He makes me angry with him; for he seems Proud and disdainful, harping on what I am,
Not what he knew I was. He makes me angry;
And at this time most easy 't is to do 't,
When my good stars, that were my former guides, 145

Have empty left their orbs, and shot their fires
Into the abyss of hell. If he mislike
My speech and what is done, tell him he has Hipparchus, my enfranchised bondman, whom
He may at pleasure whip, or hang, or torture,
As he shall like, to quit me. Urge it thou. 150
Hence with thy stripes, begone!

[Exit Thyreus.

Cleo. Have you done yet?
Ant. Alack, our terrene moon
 Is now eclips'd; and it portends alone
 The fall of Antony!

Cleo. I must stay his time.
Ant. To flatter Cæsar, would you mingle
 eyes

With one that ties his points?

Cleo. Not know me yet?

Ant. Cold-hearted toward me?

Cleo. Ah, dear, if I be so,

From my cold heart let heaven engender hail

And poison it in the source, and the first stone

Drop in my neck; as it determines, so

Dissolve my life! The next Cæsarion smite!

Till by degrees the memory of my womb,

Together with my brave Egyptians all,

By the discarding of this pelleted storm,

Lie graveless, till the flies and gnats of Nile

Have buried them for prey!

Ant. I am satisfied.

Cæsar sits down in Alexandria; where

I will oppose his fate. Our force by land

Hath nobly held; our sever'd navy too

Have knit again, and fleet, threat'ning most sea-

like.

Where hast thou been, my heart? Dost thou hear, lady?

If from the field I shall return once more

To kiss these lips, I will appear in blood;

I and my sword will earn our chronicle.

There's hope in 't yet.

Cleo. That's my brave lord!

Ant. I will be treble-sinewed, hearted,

breath'd,

And fight maliciously; for when mine hours

Were nice and lucky, men did ransom lives

Of me for jests; but now I'll set my teeth,

And send to darkness all that stop me. Come,

Let's have one other gaudy night. Call to

me

All my sad captains; fill our bowls once more;

Let's mock the midnight bell.

Cleo. It is my birthday.

I had thought to have held it poor; but, since

my lord

Is Antony again, I will be Cleopatra.

Ant. We will yet do well.

Cleo. Call all his noble captains to my lord.

Ant. Do so, we'll speak to them; and tonight I'll force

The wine peep through their scars. Come on,

my queen;

There's sap in 't yet. The next time I do fight,

I'll make Death love me; for I will contend

Even with his pestilent scythe.

[Exeunt [all but Enobarbus].]

Eno. Now he'll outstare the lightning. To be furious,

Is to be frighted out of fear; and in that mood

The dove will peck the estridge; and I see

still,

A diminution in our captain's brain

Restores his heart. When valour preys on

reason,

It eats the sword it fights with. I will seek

Some way to leave him. [Exit.]

[ACT IV]

[SCENE I. Before Alexandria. Cæsar's camp.]

Enter CÆSAR, Agrippa, and MÆCENAS, with his Army; Cæsar reading a letter.

Cæs. He calls me boy; and chides as he had power

To beat me out of Egypt. My messenger

He hath whipp'd with rods; dares me to personal combat,

Cæsar to Antony. Let the old ruffian know

I have many other ways to die; meantime

Laugh at his challenge.

Mæc. Cæsar must think,

When one so great begins to rage, he's hunted

Even to falling. Give him no breath, but now

Make boot of his distraction. Never anger

Made good guard for itself.

Cæs. Let our best heads

Know that to-morrow the last of many battles

We mean to fight. Within our files there are,

Of those that serv'd Mark Antony but late,

Enough to fetch him in. See it done,

And feast the army; we have store to do 't,

And they have earn'd the waste. Poor Antony!

[Exeunt.]

[SCENE II. Alexandria. Cleopatra's palace.]

Enter ANTONY, CLEOPATRA, ENOBARBUS,

Charmian, Iras, Alexas, with others.

Ant. He will not fight with me, Domitius.

Eno. No?

Ant. Why should he not?

Eno. He thinks, being twenty times of better fortune,

He is twenty men to one.

Ant. To-morrow, soldier,

By sea and land I'll fight; or I will live,

Or bathe my dying honour in the blood

Shall make it live again. Woo 't thou fight

well?

Eno. I'll strike, and cry, "Take all!"

Ant. Well said; come on.

Call forth my household servants; let 's tonight

Be bounteous at our meal.

Enter three or four SERVITORS.

Give me thy hand,

Thou hast been rightly honest;—so hast

thou;—

Thou,—and thou,—and thou. You have serv'd me well,

And kings have been your fellows.

Cleo. [Aside to Eno.] What means this?

Eno. [Aside to Cleo.] 'T is one of those odd tricks which sorrow shoots

Out of the mind.

Ant. And thou art honest too.

I wish I could be made so many men,

And all of you clapp'd up together in

An Antony, that I might do you service

So good as you have done.

All. The gods forbid!

Ant. Well, my good fellows, wait on me to-night. 20

Scant not my cups; and make as much of me
As when mine empire was your fellow too,
And suffer'd my command.

Cleo. [Aside to Eno.] What does he mean?

Eno. [Aside to Cleo.] To make his followers weep.

Ant. Tend me to-night;
May be it is the period of your duty: 25
Haply you shall not see me more; or if,
A mangled shadow. Perchance to-morrow
You'll serve another master. I look on you
As one that takes his leave. Mine honest
friends,

I turn you not away; but, like a master 30
Married to your good service, stay till death.
Tend me to-night two hours, I ask no more,
And the gods yield you for 't!

Eno. What mean you, sir,
To give them this discomfort? Look, they 35
weep;

And I, an ass, am onion-ey'd. For shame,
Transform us not to women.

Ant. Ho, ho, ho!
Now the witch take me, if I meant it thus!
Grace grow where those drops fall! My hearty
friends,

You take me in too dolorous a sense;
For I spake to you for your comfort, did desire 40
you

To burn this night with torches. Know, my hearts,

I hope well of to-morrow; and will lead you
Where rather I'll expect victorious life
Than death and honour. Let's to supper, come,
And drown consideration. [Exeunt. 45

[SCENE III. The same. Before the palace.]

Enter [two] SOLDIERS [to their guard].

1. Sold. Brother, good-night; to-morrow is the day.

2. Sold. It will determine one way; fare you
well.

Heard you of nothing strange about the streets?

1. Sold. Nothing. What news?

2. Sold. Belike 't is but a rumour. Goodnight to you. 5

1. Sold. Well, sir, good-night.

They meet other SOLDIERS.

2. Sold. Soldiers, have careful watch.

[3.] Sold. And you. Good-night, good-night.
[They place themselves in every corner of the stage.]

[4.] Sold. Here we. And if to-morrow
Our navy thrive, I have an absolute hope 10
Our landmen will stand up.

[3.] Sold. 'T is a brave army,
And full of purpose.

[Music of the hautboys as under the stage.]

2. Sold. Peace! what noise?

1. Sold. List, list!

2. Sold. Hark!

1. Sold. Music! the air.

3. Sold. Under the earth.

4. Sold. It signs well, does it not?

3. Sold. No.

1. Sold. Peace, I say! 15

What should this mean?

2. Sold. 'T is the god Hercules, whom Antony loved,

Now leaves him.

1. Sold. Walk; let's see if other watchmen
Do hear what we do.

2. Sold. [They advance to another post.]

How now, masters!

[Speak together.]

How now!

How now! do you hear this?

1. Sold. Ay; is 't not strange?

3. Sold. Do you hear, masters? Do you
hear? 21

1. Sold. Follow the noise so far as we have quarter;

Let's see how it will give off.

Al. Content. 'T is strange.

[Exeunt.]

[SCENE IV. The same. A room in the palace.]

Enter ANTONY and CLEOPATRA, [CHARMIAN,] and others [attending].

Ant. Eros! mine armour, Eros!

Cleo. Sleep a little.

Ant. No, my chuck. Eros, come; mine armour, Eros!

Enter EROS [with armour].

Come, good fellow, put mine iron on.

If Fortune be not ours to-day, it is Because we brave her. Come. 4

Cleo. Nay, I'll help too.

What's this for?

[Ant.] Ah, let be, let be! thou art
The armourer of my heart. False, false; this,
this.

Cleo. Sooth, la, I'll help. Thus it must be.

Ant. Well, well;
We shall thrive now. Seest thou, my good fellow? 5

Go put on thy defences.

Eros. Briefly, sir. 10

Cleo. Is not this buckled well?

Ant. Rarely, rarely:
He that unbuckles this, till we do please

To daff 't for our repose, shall hear a storm.
Thou fumblest, Eros; and my queen's a squire

More tight at this than thou. Dispatch. O
love, 15

That thou couldst see my wars to-day, and knew'st

The royal occupation! Thou shouldst see
A workman in 't.

Enter an armed SOLDIER.

Good-morrow to thee; welcome.
Thou look'st like him that knows a warlike
charge.

To business that we love we rise betime 20
And go to 't with delight.

Sold. A thousand, sir;

Early though 't be, have on their riveted trim,
And at the port expect you.

[Shout. Trumpets flourish.]

Enter CAPTAINS and SOLDIERS.

Capt. The morn is fair. Good-morrow, general.

All. Good-morrow, general.

Ant. 'T is well blown, lads.
This morning, like the spirit of a youth
That means to be of note, begins betimes.
So, so; come, give me that. This way; well said.
Fare thee well, dame, whate'er becomes of me.
This is a soldier's kiss; rebukeable [Kisses her.]
And worthy shameful check it were, to stand
On more mechanic compliment. I'll leave thee
Now, like a man of steel. You that will fight, Follow me close; I'll bring you to 't. Adieu.

[Exeunt (Antony, Eros, Captains, and Soldiers).]

Char. Please you, retire to your chamber.

Cleo. Lead me.

He goes forth gallantly. That he and Cæsar might

Determine this great war in single fight!
Then, Antony, — but now — Well, on. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE V. Alexandria. Antony's camp.]

Trumpets sound. Enter ANTONY and EROS.
[A SOLDIER meets them.]

[Sold.] The gods make this a happy day to Antony!

Ant. Would thou and those thy scars had once prevail'd
To make me fight at land!

[Sold.] Hadst thou done so,
The kings that have revolted, and the soldier
That has this morning left thee, would have still Followed thy heels.

Ant. Who's gone this morning?

[Sold.] Who!
One ever near thee. Call for Enobarbus,
He shall not hear thee; or from Cæsar's camp
Say, "I am none of thine."

Ant. What sayest thou?

Sold. Sir,
He is with Cæsar.

Eros. Sir, his chests and treasure
He has not with him.

Ant. Is he gone?

Sold. Most certain.

Ant. Go, Eros, send his treasure after; do it;
Detain no jot, I charge thee. Write to him —
I will subscribe — gentle adieus and greetings;
Say that I wish he never find more cause
To change a master. O, my fortunes have Corrupted honest men! Dispatch. — Enobarbus!
[Exeunt.]

[SCENE VI. Alexandria. Cæsar's camp.]

Flourish. Enter CÆSAR, AGRIPPA, with ENOBARBUS, and Dolabella.

Cæs. Go forth, Agrippa, and begin the fight.
Our will is Antony be took alive;
Make it so known.

Agr. Cæsar, I shall.

[Exit.]

Cæs. The time of universal peace is near.
Prove this a prosperous day, the three-nook'd
world
Shall bear the olive freely.

Enter a MESSENGER.

Mess.

Antony

Is come into the field.

Cæs.

Go charge Agrippa
Plant those that have revolted in the van,
That Antony may seem to spend his fury
Upon himself. [Exeunt (all but Enobarbus).]

Eno. Alexas did revolt; and went to Jewry
on

Affairs of Antony; there did persuade Great Herod to incline himself to Cæsar,
And leave his master Antony: for this pains Cæsar hath hang'd him. Canidius and the rest

That fell away have entertainment, but
No honourable trust. I have done ill;
Of which I do accuse myself so sorely
That I will joy no more.

Enter a SOLDIER of Cæsar's.

Sold.

Enobarbus, Antony
Hath after thee sent all thy treasure, with His bounty overplus. The messenger
Came on my guard; and at thy tent is now
Unloading of his mules.

Eno.

I give it you.

Sold. Mock not, Enobarbus;
I tell you true. Best you sa'd the bringer
Out of the host; I must attend mine office,
Or would have done 't myself. Your emperor
Continues still a Jove. [Exit.]

Eno. I am alone the villain of the earth,
And feel I am so most. O Antony, Thou mine of bounty, how wouldst thou have paid

My better service, when my turpitude Thou dost so crown with gold! This blows my heart.

If swift thought break it not, a swifter mean Shall outstrike thought; but thought will do 't, I feel.

I fight against thee! No! I will go seek
Some ditch wherein to die; the foul'st best fits
My latter part of life. [Exit.]

[SCENE VII. Field of battle between the camps.]

Alarum. Drums and trumpets. Enter AGRIPPA (and others).

Agr. Retire, we have engag'd ourselves too far.

Cæsar himself has work, and our oppression
Exceeds what we expected. [Exeunt.]

Alarums. Enter ANTONY, and SCARUS wounded.

Scar. O my brave emperor, this is fought indeed!

Had we done so at first, we had droven them
home

With clouts about their heads.

Ant.

Thou bleed'st apace,

Scar. I had a wound here that was like a T,
But now 't is made an H.

Ant. They do retire.

Scar. We'll beat 'em into bench-holes. I have yet
Room for six scotches more. 10

Enter EROS.

Eros. They are beaten, sir; and our advantage serves
For a fair victory.

Scar. Let us score their backs,
And snatch 'em up, as we take hares, behind.
'T is sport to maul a runner.

Ant. I will reward thee
Once for thy sprightly comfort, and tenfold 15
For thy good valour. Come thee on.

Scar. I'll halt after.
[Exeunt.]

[SCENE VIII. Under the walls of Alexandria.]

Alarum. Enter ANTONY, in a march; Scarus, with others.

Ant. We have beat him to his camp. Run
one before,

And let the Queen know of our gestic. To-morrow,
Before the sun shall see 's, we'll spill the blood
That has to-day escap'd. I thank you all;
For doughty-handed are you, and have fought 's
Not as you serv'd the cause, but as 't had been Each man's like mine; you have shown all Hectors.

Enter the city, clip your wives, your friends,
Tell them your feats; whilst they with joyful
tears

Wash the congealment from your wounds, and kiss 10

The honour'd gashes whole.

Enter CLEOPATRA [attended].

[To Scarus.] Give me thy hand;
To this great fairy I'll commend thy aets.
Make her thanks bless thee. [To Cleo.] O
thou day o' the world,
Chain mine arm'd neck; leap thou, attire and
all,

Through proof of harness to my heart, and
there 15
Ride on the pants triumphing!

Cleo. Lord of lords!
O infinite virtue, com'st thou smiling from
The world's great snare uncaught?

Ant. My nightingale,
We have beat them to their beds. What, girl!
though grey

Do something mingle with our younger brown, yet ha' we 20

A brain that nourishes our nerves, and can Get goal for goal of youth. Behold this man;
Commend unto his lips thy favouring hand.
Kiss it, my warrior; he hath fought to-day
As if a god, in hate of mankind, had 25
Destroyed in such a shape.

Cleo. I'll give thee, friend,
An armour all of gold; it was a king's.

Ant. He has serv'd it, were it carbuncled

Like holy Phœbus' car. Give me thy hand.
Through Alexandria make a jolly march; 30
Bear our hack'd targets like the men that owe
them.

Had our great palace the capacity
To camp this host, we all would sup together
And drink carouses to the next day's fate,
Which promises royal peril. Trumpeters, 35
With brazen din blast you the city's ear,
Make mingle with our rattling tabourines,
That heaven and earth may strike their sounds
together,
Applauding our approach. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE IX. Cæsar's camp.]

Enter a SENTRY, and his COMPANY. ENOBARBUS follows.

Sent. If we be not reliev'd within this hour,
We must return to the court of guard. The night is shiny; and they say we shall embattle
By the second hour i' the morn.

1. Sold. This last day was
A shrewd one to 's.

Eno. O, bear me witness, night, — 5
2. Sold. What man is this?

1. Sold. Stand close, and list him.

Eno. Be witness to me, O thou blessed moon,
When men revolted shall upon record
Bear hateful memory, poor Enobarbus did Before thy face repent!

Sent. Enobarbus! Peace! 10
2. Sold.

Hark further.
Eno. O sovereign mistress of true melancholy,

The poisonous damp of night disponge upon me,
That life, a very rebel to my will,
May hang no longer on me. Throw my heart 15
Against the flint and hardness of my fault;
Which, being dried with grief, will break to powder.

And finish all foul thoughts. O Antony,
Nobler than my revolt is infamous,
Forgive me in thine own particular; 20
But let the world rank me in register
As a master-leaver and a fugitive.

O Antony! O Antony! [Dies.]
1. Sold. Let's speak

To him.
Sent. Let's hear him, for the things he speaks 25

May concern Cæsar.

2. Sold. Let's do so. But he sleeps.

Sent. Swoons rather; for so bad a prayer as his

Was never yet for sleep.
1. Sold. Go we to him.

2. Sold. Awake, sir, awake; speak to us.
1. Sold. Hear you, sir?

Sent. The hand of death hath raght him.
(Drums aff off.) Hark! the drums 30

Demurely wake the sleepers. Let us bear him
To the court of guard; he is of note. Our hour is fully out.

2. Sold. Come on, then;
He may recover yet. [Exeunt [with the body].]

[SCENE X. Between the two camps.]

Enter ANTONY and SCARUS, with their Army.

Ant. Their preparation is to-day by sea;
We please them not by land.

Scar. For both, my lord.
Ant. I would they'd fight i' the fire or i'
the air;

We'd fight there too. But this it is: our foot
Upon the hills adjoining to the city
Shall stay with us. Order for sea is given;
They have put forth the haven. [Go we up]
Where their appointment we may best discover,
And look on their endeavour. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE XI. Another part of the same.]

Enter CÆSAR, and his Army.

Cæs. But being charg'd, we will be still by land.
Which, as I take 't, we shall; for his best force
Is forth to man his galleys. To the vales,
And hold our best advantage. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE XII. Another part of the same.]

Enter ANTONY and SCARUS.

Ant. Yet they are not join'd. Where yond pine does stand,
I shall discover all; I'll bring thee word
Straight, how 't is like to go. [Exit.]

Scar. Swallows have built
In Cleopatra's sails their nests. The augurers Say they know not, they cannot tell; look grimly,
And dare not speak their knowledge. Antony
Is valiant, and dejected; and, by starts,
His fretted fortunes give him hope and fear,
Of what he has and has not.

[Alarum afar off, as at a sea-fight.]

Re-enter ANTONY.

Ant. All is lost!
This foul Egyptian hath betrayed me. 10
My fleet hath yielded to the foe, and yonder
They cast their caps up and carouse together
Like friends long lost. Triple-turn'd whore!
't is thou

Hast sold me to this novice; and my heart
Makes only wars on thee. Bid them all fly; 15
For when I am reveng'd upon my charm,
I have done all. Bid them all fly; begone.

[Exit Scarus.]

O sun, thy uprise shall I see no more:
Fortune and Antony part here; even here
Do we shake hands. All come to this? The hearts

That spaniel'd me at heels, to whom I gave
Their wishes, do discandy, melt their sweets
On blossoming Cæsar; and this pine is bark'd,
That overtopp'd them all. Betray'd I am.

O this false soul of Egypt! this grave
charm,— 25
Whose eye beck'd forth my wars, and call'd them home;

Whose bosom was my crownnet, my chief end, —
Like a right gipsy, hath, at fast and loose,

Beguil'd me to the very heart of loss.
What, Eros, Eros!

Enter CLEOPATRA.

Ah, thou spell! Avaunt! 30
Cleo. Why is my lord enrag'd against his
love?

Ant. Vanish, or I shall give thee thy deserv-
ing,
And blemish Cæsar's triumph. Let him take
thee,

And hoist thee up to the shouting plebeians!
Follow his chariot, like the greatest spot 35
Of all thy sex; most monster-like, be shown
For poor'st diminutives, for doits; and let Patient Octavia plough thy visage up
With her prepared nails. [Exit Cleopatra.]

'T is well thou 'rt gone,
If it be well to live; but better 't were 40
Thou fell'st into my fury, for one death
Might have prevented many. Eros, ho!
The shirt of Nessus is upon me. Teach me,
Alcides, thou mine ancestor, thy rage.
Let me lodge Lichas on the horns o' the

moon; 45
And with those hands, that grasp'd the heaviest club,
Subdue my worthiest self. The witch shall die.

To the young Roman boy she hath sold me,
and I fall

Under this plot. She dies for 't. Eros, ho! 50
[Exit.]

[SCENE XIII. *Alexandria. Cleopatra's
palace.*]

*Enter CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, IRAS, and Mar-
dian.*

Cleo. Help me, my women! O, he is more
mad
Than Telamon for his shield; the boar of Thessaly
Was never so emboss'd.

Char. To the monument!
There lock yourself, and send him word you are dead.

The soul and body rive not more in parting
Than greatness going off.

Cleo. To the monument!
Mardian, go tell him I have slain myself;
Say, that the last I spoke was "Antony,"
And word it, prithee, piteously. Hence, Mar-
dian,

And bring me how he takes my death. To the monument! 10
[Exeunt.]

[SCENE XIV. The same. Another room.]

Enter ANTONY and EROS.

Ant. Eros, thou yet behold'st me?
Eros. Ay, noble lord.

Ant. Sometime we see a cloud that's dragonish;

A vapour sometime like a bear or lion,
A tower'd citadel, a pendent rock,
A forked mountain, or blue promontory 5

With trees upon 't, that nod unto the world,
And mock our eyes with air. Thou hast seen these signs;

They are black vespers' pageants.

Eros. Ay, my lord.

Ant. That which is now a horse, even with a thought

The rack dislimns, and makes it indistinct, 10
As water is in water.

Eros. It does, my lord.

Ant. My good knave Eros, now thy captain

is Even such a body. Here I am Antony;
Yet cannot hold this visible shape, my knave.
I made these wars for Egypt; and the
Queen, — 15

Whose heart I thought I had, for she had
mine,

Which whilst it was mine had annex'd unto 't
A million moe, now lost, — she, Eros, has Pack'd cards with Cæsar, and false-play'd my glory

Unto an enemy's triumph. 20
Nay, weep not, gentle Eros; there is left us
Ourselves to end ourselves.

Enter MARDIAN.

O, thy vile lady!

She has robb'd me of my sword.

Mar. No, Antony;
My mistress lov'd thee, and her fortunes mingled 24

With thine entirely.

Ant. Hence, saucy eunuch; peace!
She hath betray'd me and shall die the death.

Mar. Death of one person can be paid but
once,

And that she has discharg'd. What thou wouldst do

Is done unto thy hand; the last she spake
Was "Antony! most noble Antony!" 30

Then in the midst a tearing groan did break
The name of Antony; it was divided Between her heart and lips. She read' red life,

Thy name so buried in her.

Ant. Dead, then?

Mar. Dead.

Ant. Unarm, Eros; the long day's task is
done, 35

And we must sleep. [To Mar.] That thou depart'st hence safe,

Does pay thy labour richly; go.

[Exit Mardian.

Off, pluck off!

The seven-fold shield of Ajax cannot keep The battery from my heart. O, cleave, my sides!

Heart, once be stronger than thy continent, 40
Crack thy frail case! Apace, Eros, apace.

No more a soldier. Bruised pieces, go;
You have been nobly borne. — From me a while.

[Exit Eros.

I will o'ertake thee, Cleopatra, and Weep for my pardon. So it must be, for now 45

All length is torture; since the torch is out, Lie down, and stray no farther. Now all labour

Mars what it does; yea, very force entangles
Itself with strength. Seal then and all is done.
Eros! — I come, my queen! — Eros! — Stay for
me! 50

Where souls do couch on flowers, we 'll hand in
hand,

And with our sprightly port make the ghosts
gaze.

Dido and her Æneas shall want troops,
And all the haunt be ours. Come, Eros, Eros!

Re-enter Eros.

Eros. What would my lord?

Ant. Since Cleopatra died,
I have liv'd in such dishonour, that the gods 55

Detest my baseness. I, that with my sword Quarter'd the world, and o'er green Neptune's
back

With ships made cities, condemn myself to lack
The courage of a woman; less noble mind 60

Than she which by her death our Cæsar tells,
"I am conqueror of myself." Thou art sworn,

Eros,

That, when the exigent should come, which
now

Is come indeed, when I should see behind me
The inevitable prosecution of 65

Disgrace and horror, that, on my command, Thou then wouldst kill me. Do 't; the time is
come.

Thou strik'st not me, 't is Cæsar thou defeat'st.

Put colour in thy cheek.

Eros.

The gods withhold me!
Shall I do that which all the Parthian darts, 70

Though enemy, lost aim, and could not?

Ant.

Eros,
Wouldst thou be window'd in great Rome and
see

Thy master thus with pleach'd arms, bending
down

His corrigible neck, his face subdu'd 74
To penetrative shame, whilst the wheel'd seat

Of fortunate Cæsar, drawn before him, branded
His baseness that ensued?

Eros.

I would not see 't.
Ant. Come, then; for with a wound I must be cur'd.

Draw that thy honest sword, which thou hast worn

Most useful for thy country.

Eros.

O, sir, pardon me!
Ant. When I did make thee free, swor'st 81

thou not then
To do this when I bade thee? Do it at once;

Or thy precedent services are all
But accidents unpurpos'd. Draw, and come.

Eros. Turn from me, then, that noble countenance, 85

Wherein the worship of the whole world lies.
Ant. Lo thee! [Turning from him.]

Eros.

My sword is drawn.
Ant. Then let it do at once

The thing why thou hast drawn it.
Eros. My dear master,

My captain, and my emperor, let me say, 90
Before I strike this bloody stroke, farewell.

Ant. 'T is said, man; and farewell.
Eros. Farewell, great chief. Shall I strike now?

Ant. Now, Eros.

Eros. Why, there then. (Kills himself.) Thus I do escape the sorrow

Of Antony's death.

Ant. Thrice-nobler than myself! ⁹⁵
 Thou teachest me, O valiant Eros, what I should, and thou couldst not. My queen and Eros

Have by their brave instruction got upon me
 A nobleness in record; but I will be
 A bridegroom in my death, and run into 't ¹⁰⁰
 As to a lover's bed. Come, then; and, Eros, Thy master dies thy scholar: to do thus

[Falling on his sword.]

I learn'd of thee. How! not dead? not dead?
 The guard, ho! O, dispatch me!

Enter [DERCETAS and] GUARD.

1. Guard. What's the noise?
Ant. I have done my work ill, friends. O, make an end ¹⁰⁵

Of what I have begun.

2. Guard. The star is fallen.

1. Guard. And time is at his period.

All. Alas, and woe!

Ant. Let him that loves me strike me dead.

1. Guard. Not I.

2. Guard. Nor I.

3. Guard. Nor any one. [Exeunt Guard. ¹¹⁰
Der. Thy death and fortunes bid thy followers fly.

This sword but shown to Cæsar, with this tidings,

Shall enter me with him.

Enter DIOMEDES.

Dio. Where's Antony?

Der. There, Diomed, there.

Dio. Lives he? ¹¹⁵

Wilt thou not answer, man?

[Exit Dercetas.]

Ant. Art thou there, Diomed? Draw thy sword, and give me
 Sufficing strokes for death.

Dio. Most absolute lord,
 My mistress Cleopatra sent me to thee.

Ant. When did she send thee?

Dio. Now, my lord.

Ant. Where is she?

Dio. Lock'd in her monument. She had a prophesying fear ¹²⁰

Of what hath come to pass; for when she saw —

Which never shall be found — you did suspect
 She had dispos'd with Cæsar, and that your rage

Would not be purg'd, she sent you word she was dead;

But, fearing since how it might work, hath sent ¹²⁵

Me to proclaim the truth; and I am come,

I dread, too late.

Ant. Too late, good Diomed. Call my guard,
 I prithee.

Dio. What, ho, the Emperor's guard! The guard, what, ho!
 Come, your lord calls! ¹³⁰

Enter four or five of the GUARD of Antony.

Ant. Bear me, good friends, where Cleopatra
 bides;

'T is the last service that I shall command you.

1. Guard. Woe, woe are we, sir, you may not live to wear

All your true followers out.

All. Most heavy day!

Ant. Nay, good my fellows, do not please sharp fate ¹³⁵

To grace it with your sorrows; bid that welcome

Which comes to punish us, and we punish it Seeming to bear it lightly. Take me up.

I have led you oft; carry me now, good friends,
 And have my thanks for all. ¹⁴⁰

[Exeunt, bearing Antony.]

[SCENE XV. The same. A monument.]

Enter CLEOPATRA, and her maids aloft, with CHARMIAN and IRAS.

Cleo. O Charmian, I will never go from
 hence.

Char. Be comforted, dear madam.

Cleo. No, I will not.

All strange and terrible events are welcome,
 But comforts we despise; our size of sorrow,
 Proportion'd to our cause, must be as great
 As that which makes it. ¹⁵⁰

Enter [below] DIOMEDES.

How now! is he dead?

Dio. His death's upon him, but not dead.
 Look out o' the other side your monument;
 His guard have brought him thither.

Enter [below] ANTONY, borne by the Guard.

Cleo. O sun,
 Burn the great sphere thou mov'st in! Darkling stand ¹⁵⁵

The varying shore o' the world. O Antony, Antony, Antony! Help, Charmian, help, Iras, help;

Help, friends below; let's draw him hither.

Ant. Peace!

Not Cæsar's valour hath o'erthrown Antony,
 But Antony's hath triumph'd on itself. ¹⁶⁰

Cleo. So it should be, that none but Antony
 Should conquer Antony; but woe 't is so!

Ant. I am dying, Egypt, dying; only
 I here importune death a while, until
 Of many thousand kisses the poor last ²⁰
 I lay upon thy lips.

Cleo. I dare not, dear, —

Dear my lord, pardon, — I dare not,
 Lest I be taken. Not the imperious show

Of the full-fortun'd Cæsar ever shall Be brooch'd with me; if knife, drugs, serpents, have ²⁵

Edge, sting, or operation, I am safe.

Your wife Octavia, with her modest eyes
 And still conclusion, shall acquire no honour

Demuring upon me. But come, come, Antony, —
Help me, my women, — we must draw thee up.
Assist, good friends.

Ant. O, quick, or I am gone.
Cleo. Here's sport indeed! How heavy weighs my lord!

Our strength is all gone into heaviness,
That makes the weight. Had I great Juno's power,

The strong-wing'd Mercury should fetch thee up

And set thee by Jove's side. Yet come a little, —

Wishers were ever fools, — O, come, come, come;

[They heave Antony aloft to Cleopatra.]

And welcome, welcome! Die where thou hast liv'd;

Quicken with kissing. Had my lips that power,
Thus would I wear them out.

All. A heavy sight!
Ant. I am dying, Egypt, dying.

Give me some wine, and let me speak a little.
Cleo. No, let me speak; and let me rail so high,

That the false housewife Fortune break her wheel,

Provok'd by my offence.

Ant. One word, sweet queen:
Of Cæsar seek your honour, with your safety. O!

Cleo. They do not go together.
Ant. Gentle, hear me:

None about Cæsar trust but Proculeius.
Cleo. My resolution and my hands I'll trust;

None about Cæsar.

Ant. The miserable change now at my end
Lament nor sorrow at; but please your thoughts
In feeding them with those my former fortunes
Wherein I liv'd, the greatest prince o' the world,

The noblest; and do now not basely die,
Not cowardly put off my helmet to My countryman, — a Roman by a Roman Valiantly vanquish'd. Now my spirit is going;
I can no more.

Cleo. Noblest of men, woo't die?
Hast thou no care of me? Shall I abide

In this dull world, which in thy absence is No better than a sty? O, see, my women,

[Antony dies.]

The crown o' the earth doth melt. My lord!
O, wither'd is the garland of the war,
The soldier's pole is fall'n! Young boys and girls

Are level now with men; the odds is gone,
And there is nothing left remarkable
Beneath the visiting moon.

[Faints.]
Char. O, quietness, lady!

Iras. She is dead too, our sovereign.
Char. Lady!

Iras. Madam!
Char. O madam, madam, madam!

Iras. Royal Egypt,
Empress!

Char. Peace, peace, Iras!

Cleo. No more but e'en a woman, and commanded

By such poor passion as the maid that milks
And does the meanest chares. It were for me

To throw my sceptre at the injurious gods;
To tell them that this world did equal theirs Till they had stolen our jewel. All's but

nought;
Patience is sottish, and impatience does
Become a dog that's mad: then is it sin

To rush into the secret house of death,
Ere death dare come to us? How do you,

women?

What, what! good cheer! Why, how now,
Charmian!

My noble girls! Ah, women, women, look,
Our lamp is spent, it's out! Good sirs, take

heart.

We'll bury him; and then, what's brave,
what's noble,

Let's do it after the high Roman fashion,
And make Death proud to take us. Come,

away;
This case of that huge spirit now is cold.
Ah, women, women! come; we have no friend
But resolution and the briefest end.

[Exeunt; [those above] bearing off Antony's body.]

[ACT V]

[SCENE I. Alexandria. Cæsar's camp.]

Enter CÆSAR, AGRIPPA, DOLABELLA, [MÆCENAS, GALLUS, PROCULEIUS, and others.] his council of war.

Cæs. Go to him, Dolabella, bid him yield;
Being so frustrate, tell him he mocks
The pauses that he makes.

Dol. Cæsar, I shall.

[Exit.]
Enter DERCETAS with the sword of Antony.

Cæs. Wherefore is that? and what art thou that dar'st

Appear thus to us?

Der. I am call'd Dercetas;
Mark Antony I serv'd, who best was worthy
Best to be serv'd. Whilst he stood up and spoke,
He was my master; and I wore my life
To spend upon his haters. If thou please
To take me to thee, as I was to him

I'll be to Cæsar; if thou pleasest not,
I yield thee up my life.

Cæs. What is't thou say'st?

Der. I say, O Cæsar, Antony is dead.

Cæs. The breaking of so great a thing should make

A greater crack. The round world
Should have shook lions into civil streets,
And citizens to their dens. The death of An-

tony

Is not a single doom; in the name lay
A moiety of the world.

Der. He is dead, Cæsar;

Not by a public minister of justice, 30
Nor by a hired knife; but that self hand
Which writ his honour in the acts it did Hath, with the courage which the heart did lend it,

Spilted the heart. This is his sword;
I robb'd his wound of it; behold it stain'd 35
With his most noble blood.

Cæs. Look you sad, friends?
The gods rebuke me, but it is tidings
To wash the eyes of kings.

[Agr.] And strange it is That nature must compel us to lament
Our most persisted deeds.

Mæc. His taints and honours
Wag'd equal with him.

[Agr.] A rarer spirit never 41
Did steer humanity; but you, gods, will give us
Some faults to make us men. Cæsar is touch'd.

Mæc. When such a spacious mirror 's set before him,

He needs must see himself.

Cæs. O Antony! 45
I have followed thee to this; but we do lance Diseases in our bodies. I must perforce
Have shown to thee such a declining day,

Or look on thine; we could not stall together
In the whole world: but yet let me lament, 40
With tears as sovereign as the blood of hearts,

That thou, my brother, my competitor
In top of all design, my mate in empire,
Friend and companion in the front of war,

The arm of mine own body, and the heart 45
Where mine his thoughts did kindle,—that our stars,

Unreconcilable, should divide
Our equalness to this. Hear me, good friends,—
But I will tell you at some meetest season.

Enter an EGYPTIAN.

The business of this man looks out of him; 50
We'll hear him what he says.—Whence are
you?

Egypt. A poor Egyptian yet. The Queen my
mistress,

Confin'd in all she has, her monument,
Of thy intents desires instruction,
That she preparedly may frame herself 55
To the way she 's forc'd to.

Cæs. Bid her have good heart.
She soon shall know of us, by some of ours,
How honourable and how kindly we Determine for her; for Cæsar cannot live
To be ungentle.

Egypt. So the gods preserve thee! 60
[Exit.]

Cæs. Come hither, Proculeius. Go and say,
We purpose her no shame. Give her what comforts

The quality of her passion shall require,
Lest, in her greatness, by some mortal stroke
She do defeat us; for her life in Rome 65
Would be eternal in our triumph. Go,

And with your speediest bring us what she says,

And how you find of her.

Pro. Cæsar, I shall. [Exit.]

Cæs. Gallus, go you along. [Exit Gallus.]

Where 's Dolabella,
To second Proculeius?

All. Dolabella! 70

Cæs. Let him alone, for I remember now
How he 's employ'd; he shall in time be ready.
Go with me to my tent, where you shall see
How hardly I was drawn into this war,
How calm and gentle I proceeded still 75
In all my writings. Go with me, and see
What I can show in this. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE II. Alexandria. A room in the monument.]

*Enter CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, IRAS, and Mar-
dian.*

Cleo. My desolation does begin to make
A better life. 'T is paltry to be Cæsar;
Not being Fortune, he 's but Fortune's knave,
A minister of her will: and it is great
To do that thing that ends all other deeds; 5
Which shackles accidents and bolts up change;
Which sleeps, and never palates more the dung,
The beggar's nurse and Cæsar's.

Enter [to the gates of the monument] PROCU-LEIUS [and Soldiers].

Pro. Cæsar sends greeting to the Queen of Egypt;

And bids thee study on what fair demands 10
Thou mean'st to have him grant thee.

Cleo. What 's thy name?

Pro. My name is Proculeius.

Cleo. Antony
Did tell me of you, bade me trust you; but I do not greatly care to be deceiv'd,
That have no use for trusting. If your master
Would have a queen his beggar, you must tell 15
him

That majesty, to keep decorum, must
No less beg than a kingdom. If he please
To give me conquer'd Egypt for my son,
He gives me so much of mine own as I 20
Will kneel to him with thanks.

Pro. Be of good cheer,
You 're fallen into a princely hand; fear ne-
thing.

Make your full reference freely to my lord,
Who is so full of grace that it flows over
On all that need. Let me report to him 25
Your sweet dependency, and you shall find
A conqueror that will pray in aid for kindness
Where he for grace is kneel'd to.

Cleo. Pray you, tell him
I am his fortune's vassal, and I send him
The greatness he has got. I hourly learn 30
A doctrine of obedience, and would gladly
Look him i' the face.

Pro. This I 'll report, dear lady.
Have comfort, for I know your plight is pitied
Of him that caus'd it.

[Here Proculeius and two of the Guard go out below and reappear behind Cleopatra.]

—You see how easily she may be surpris'd. 35
Guard her till Cæsar come.

Iras. Royal queen!

Char. O Cleopatra! thou art taken, queen.

Cleo. Quick, quick, good hands.

[Drawing a dagger.]

Pro. Hold, worthy lady, hold!

[Seizes and disarms her.]

Do not yourself such wrong, who are in this Reliev'd, but not betray'd.

Cleo. What, of death too,
That rids our dogs of languish?

Pro. Cleopatra,
Do not abuse my master's bounty by
The undoing of yourself. Let the world see
His nobleness well acted, which your death
Will never let come forth

Cleo. Where art thou, Death?
Come hither, come! Begs, come, and take a queen

Worth many babes and beggars!

Pro. O, temperance, lady!

Cleo. Sir, I will eat no meat, I'll not drink,
sir;

If idle talk will once be necessary,
I'll not sleep neither; this mortal house I'll ruin,

Do Cæsar what he can. Know, sir, that I
Will not wait pinion'd at your master's court;
Nor once be chastis'd with the sober eye
Of dull Octavia. Shall they hoist me up
And show me to the shouting varletry
Of censuring Rome? Rather a ditch in Egypt
Be gentle grave unto me! Rather on Nilus' mud

Lay me stark nak'd, and let the water-flies Blow me into abhorring! Rather make My country's high pyramids my gibbet,
And hang me up in chains!

Pro. You do extend
These thoughts of horror further than you shall Find cause in Cæsar.

Enter DOLABELLA.

Dol. Proculeius,
What thou hast done thy master Cæsar knows,
And he hath sent for thee. For the Queen,
I'll take her to my guard.

Pro. So, Dolabella,
It shall content me best. Be gentle to her.
[To Cleo.] To Cæsar I will speak what you shall please,

If you'll employ me to him.

Cleo. Say, I would die.

[Ereunt Proculeius [and Soldiers].]

Dol. Most noble empress, you have heard of
me?

Cleo. I cannot tell.

Dol. Assuredly you know me.

Cleo. No matter, sir, what I have heard or known.

You laugh when boys or women tell their dreams;

Is't not your trick?

Dol. I understand not, madam.

Cleo. I dream'd there was an Emperor Antony.

O, such another sleep, that I might see
But such another man!

Dol. If it might please ye,
Cleo. His face was as the heavens; and therein stuck

A sun and moon, which kept their course and lighted

The little O, the earth.

Dol. Most sovereign creature, —

Cleo. His legs bestrid the ocean; his rear'd arm

Crested the world; his voice was propertied
As all the tuned spheres, and that to friends;

But when he meant to quail and shake the
orb,

He was as rattling thunder. For his bounty,
There was no winter in't; an autumn 't was

That grew the more by reaping. His delights
Were dolphin-like, they show'd his back above

The element they liv'd in. In his livery Walk'd crowns and crownets; realms and islands were

As plates dropp'd from his pocket.

Dol. Cleopatra!

Cleo. Think you there was or might be such a man

As this I dream'd of?

Dol. Gentle madam, no.

Cleo. You lie, up to the hearing of the gods! ⁹⁵
But, if there be or ever were one such,

It's past the size of dreaming. Nature wants stuff

To vie strange forms with fancy; yet, to imagine

An Antony, were nature's piece 'gainst fancy, Condemning shadows quite.

Dol. Hear me, good madam. ¹⁰⁰
Your loss is as yourself, great; and you bear it

As answering to the weight. Would I might never

O'ertake pursu'd success, but I do feel,
By the rebound of yours, a grief that smites

My very heart at root.

Cleo. I thank you, sir. ¹⁰⁵
Know you what Cæsar means to do with me?

Dol. I am loath to tell you what I would you knew.

Cleo. Nay, pray you, sir, —

Dol. Though he be honourable, —

Cleo. He'll lead me, then, in triumph?

Dol. Madam, he will; I know 't. ¹¹⁰

[Flourish.]

Enter CÆSAR, Gallus, PROCULEIUS, Mæcenas, [SELEUCUS,] and others of his train.

All. Make way there! Cæsar!

Cæs. Which is the Queen of Egypt?

Dol. It is the Emperor, madam.

[Cleopatra kneels.]

Cæs. Arise, you shall not kneel.

I pray you, rise; rise, Egypt.

Cleo. Sir, the gods ¹¹⁵

Will have it thus; my master and my lord

I must obey.

Cæs. Take to you no hard thoughts.

The record of what injuries you did us,
Though written in our flesh, we shall remember

As things but done by chance.

Cleo. Sole sir o' the world,

I cannot project mine own cause so well 121
To make it clear; but do confess I have Been laden with like frailties which before
Have often sham'd our sex.

Cæs. Cleopatra, know
We will extenuate rather than enforce. 125
If you apply yourself to our intents,
Which towards you are most gentle, you shall find

A benefit in this change; but if you seek
To lay on me a cruelty, by taking Antony's course, you shall bereave yourself 130
Of my good purposes, and put your children
To that destruction which I'll guard them from,

If thereon you rely. I'll take my leave.

Cleo. And may, through all the world; 't is yours; and we,
Your scutcheons and your signs of conquest,
shall 135

Hang in what place you please. Here, my good
lord.

Cæs. You shall advise me in all for Cleopatra.

Cleo. This is the brief of money, plate, and jewels,
I am possess'd of. 'T is exactly valued,
Not petty things admitted. Where's Seleu-cus? 140

Sel. Here, madam.

Cleo. This is my treasurer; let him speak,
my lord,

Upon his peril, that I have reserv'd
To myself nothing. Speak the truth, Seleucus.

Sel. Madam, 145
I had rather seal my lips, than, to my peril,
Speak that which is not.

Cleo. What have I kept back?

Sel. Enough to purchase what you have made known.

Cæs. Nay, blush not, Cleopatra; I approve
Your wisdom in the deed.

Cleo. See, Cæsar! O, behold,
How pomp is followed! Mine will now be
yours; 151

And, should we shift estates, yours would be
mine.

Th' ingratitude of this Seleucus does
Even make me wild. O slave, of no more trust Than love that's hir'd! What, goest thou back? Thou shalt 155

Go back, I warrant thee; but I'll catch thine
eyes,

Though they had wings. Slave, soulless villain, dog!

O rarely base!

Cæs. Good queen, let us entreat you.

Cleo. O Cæsar, what a wounding shame is
this,

That thou, vouchsafing here to visit me, 160
Doing the honour of thy lordliness

To one so meek, that mine own servant should Parcel the sum of my disgraces by

Addition of his envy! Say, good Cæsar,
That I some lady trifles have reserv'd, 165

Immortal toys, things of such dignity
As we greet modern friends withal; and say,

Some nobler token I have kept apart
For Livia and Octavia, to induce
Their mediation; must I be unfolded 170
With one that I have bred? The gods! it smites me

Beneath the fall I have. [To Seleucus.] Pri-thee, go hence;

Or I shall show the cinders of my spirits
Through the ashes of my chance. Wert thou a
man,

Thou wouldst have mercy on me.

Cæs. Forbear, Seleucus.
[Exit Seleucus.]

Cleo. Be it known, that we, the greatest, are misthought 176

For things that others do; and, when we fall,
We answer others' merits in our name,
Are therefore to be pitied.

Cæs. Cleopatra,
Not what you have reserv'd, nor what acknowledg'd, 180

Put we in the roll of conquest. Still be 't
yours,

Bestow it at your pleasure; and believe,
Cæsar's no merchant, to make prize with you
Of things that merchants sold. Therefore be cheer'd,

Make not your thoughts your prisons; no, dear
queen; 185

For we intend so to dispose of us as Yourself shall give us counsel. Feed, and sleep.

Our care and pity is so much upon you,
That we remain your friend; and so, adieu. 189

Cleo. My master, and my lord!

Cæs. Not so. Adieu.

[Flourish. Exeunt Cæsar and his train.]

Cleo. He words me, girls, he words me, that I should not

Be noble to myself; but, hark thee, Charmian.
[Whispers Charmian.]

Iras. Finish, good lady; the bright day is done,

And we are for the dark.

Cleo. Hie thee again.

I have spoke already, and it is provided; 195
Go put it to the haste.

Char. Madam, I will.

Re-enter DOLABELLA.

Dol. Where is the Queen?

Char. Behold, sir. [Exit.]
Cleo. Dolabella!

Dol. Madam, as thereto sworn by your command,

Which my love makes religion to obey,
I tell you this: Cæsar through Syria 200

Intends his journey; and within three days
You with your children will be send before.

Make your best use of this. I have perform'd
Your pleasure and my promise.

Cleo. Dolabella,

I shall remain your debtor.

Dol. I your servant. 205

Adieu, good queen; I must attend on Cæsar.
[Exit.]

Cleo. Farewell, and thanks! Now, Iras, what think'st thou?

Thou, an Egyptian puppet, shall be shown
In Rome, as well as I. Mechanic slaves
With greasy aprons, rules, and hammers,
shall 210

Uplift us to the view; in their thick breaths,
Rank of gross diet, shall we be enclouded,
And forc'd to drink their vapour.

Iras. The gods forbid!

Cleo. Nay, 't is most certain, Iras, Saucy lectors

Will catch at us, like strumpets; and scald rhymers 215

Ballad us out o' tune. The quick comedians
Extemporally will stage us, and present
Our Alexandrian revels; Antony
Shall be brought drunken forth, and I shall see
Some squeaking Cleopatra boy my greatness 220
I' the posture of a whore.

Iras. O the good gods!

Cleo. Nay, that 's certain.

Iras. I'll never see 't; for, I am sure, my nails

Are stronger than mine eyes.

Cleo. Why, that 's the way
To fool their preparation, and to conquer 225
Their most absurd intents.

Re-enter CHARMIAN.

Now, Charmian!

Show me, my women, like a queen. Go fetch
My best attires; I am again for Cydnus
To meet Mark Antony. Sirrah Iras, go.
Now, noble Charmian, we'll dispatch indeed;
And, when thou hast done this chare, I'll give thee leave 231

To play till doomsday. Bring our crown and all.

Wherefore 's this noise?

[Exit Iras.] A noise within.

Enter a GUARDSMAN.

Guard. Here is a rural fellow
That will not be deni'd your Highness' presence.

He brings you figs. 235

Cleo. Let him come in. [Exit Guardsman.]

What poor an instrument
May do a noble deed! He brings me liberty.
My resolution 's plac'd, and I have nothing
Of woman in me; now from head to foot
I am marble-constant; now the fleeting moon
No planet is of mine.

Re-enter GUARDSMAN, with CLOWN [bringing in a basket].

Guard. This is the man. 241

Cleo. Avoid, and leave him.

[Exit Guardsman.]

Hast thou the pretty worm of Nilus there,
That kills and pains not? 244

Crown. Truly, I have him; but I would not be the party that should desire you to touch him, for his biting is immortal; those that do die of it do seldom or never recover.

Cleo. Remember'st thou any that have died
on 't? 249

Crown. Very many, men and women too. I heard of one of them no longer than yesterday;

a very honest woman, but something given to lie, as a woman should not do, but in the way of honesty; how she died of the biting of it, what pain she felt; truly, she makes a very good report o' the worm. But he that will 255 believe all that they say, shall never be saved by half that they do. But this is most fallible, the worm 's an odd worm.

Cleo. Get thee hence; farewell. 260

Crown. I wish you all joy of the worm.

[Setting down his basket.]

Cleo. Farewell.

Crown. You must think this, look you, that the worm will do his kind.

Cleo. Ay, ay; farewell. 265

Crown. Look you, the worm is not to be trusted but in the keeping of wise people; for, indeed, there is no goodness in the worm.

Cleo. Take thou no care; it shall be heeded.

Crown. Very good. Give it nothing, I pray you, for it is not worth the feeding. 271

Cleo. Will it eat me?

Crown. You must not think I am so simple but I know the devil himself will not eat a woman. I know that a woman is a dish for the 275 gods, if the devil dress her not. But, truly, these same whoreson devils do the gods great harm in their women; for in every ten that they make, the devils mar five.

Cleo. Well, get thee gone; farewell. 280

Crown. Yes, forsooth; I wish you joy o' the worm. [Exit.]

[Re-enter IRAS with a robe, crown, etc.]

Cleo. Give me my robe, put on my crown; I have

Immortal longings in me. Now no more
The juice of Egypt's grape shall moist this
lip. 285

Yare, yare, good Iras; quick. Methinks I hear
Antony call; I see him rouse himself

To praise my noble act; I hear him mock

The luck of Cæsar, which the gods give men

To excuse their after wrath. Husband, I
come! 290

Now to that name my courage prove my title!
I am fire and air; my other elements

I give to baser life. So; have you done?
Come then, and take the last warmth of my lips.

Farewell, kind Charmian; Iras, long farewell.

[Kisses them. Iras falls and dies.]

Have I the aspic in my lips? Dost fall? 295

If thou and nature can so gently part,

The stroke of death is as a lover's pinch,

Which hurts, and is as desir'd. Dost thou lie still?

If thus thou vanishest, thou tell'st the world 300
It is not worth leave-taking.

Char. Dissolve, thick cloud, and rain; that

I may say

The gods themselves do weep!

Cleo. This proves me base.

If she first meet the curled Antony,

He'll make demand of her, and spend that
kiss 305

Which is my heaven to have. Come, thou mortal wretch,

[To an asp, which she applies to her breast.]

With thy sharp teeth this knot intricate
Of life at once untie. Poor venomous fool,
Be angry, and dispatch. O, couldst thou speak,
That I might hear thee call great Cæsar ass ³¹⁰ Unpoliced!

Char. O eastern star!

Cleo. Peace, peace!

Dost thou not see my baby at my breast,

That sucks the nurse asleep?

Char. O, break! O, break!

Cleo. As sweet as balm, as soft as air, as gentle, —

O Antony! — Nay, I will take thee too: ³¹⁵

[Applying another asp to her arm.]

What should I stay —

[Dies.]

Char. In this vile world? So, fare thee well!

Now boast thee, death, in thy possession lies

A lass unparallel'd. Downy windows, close;

And golden Phœbus never be beheld. ³²⁰

Of eyes again so royal! Your crown's awry;

I'll mend it, and then play —

Enter the GUARD, rushing in.

1. Guard. Where 's the Queen?

Char. Speak softly, wake her not.

1. Guard. Cæsar hath sent —

Char. Too slow a messenger.

[Applies an asp.]

O, come apace, dispatch! I partly feel thee. ³²⁵

1. Guard. Approach, ho! All 's not well;

Cæsar 's beguil'd.

2. Guard. There 's Dolabella sent from Cæsar;

call him.

1. Guard. What work is here! Charmian, is this well done?

Char. It is well done, and fitting for a princess

Descended of so many royal kings. ³³⁰

Ah, soldier! ^[Dies.]

Re-enter DOLABELLA.

Dol. How goes it here?

2. Guard. All dead.

Dol. Cæsar, thy thoughts

Tough their effects in this; thyself art coming

To see perform'd the dreaded act which thou

So sought'st to hinder. ³³⁵

Re-enter CÆSAR and all his train, marching.

All. A way there, a way for Cæsar!

Dol. O sir, you are too sure an augurer;

That you did fear is done.

Cæs.

Bravest at the last,

She levell'd at our purposes, and, being royal,

Took her own way. The manner of their deaths?

³⁴⁰

I do not see them bleed.

Dol. Who was last with them?

1. Guard. A simple countryman, that brought her figs.

This was his basket.

Cæs.

Poison'd, then.

1. Guard.

O Cæsar,

This Charmian liv'd but now; she stood and

spoke.

I found her trimming up the diadem ³⁴⁵

On her dead mistress. Tremblingly she stood

And on the sudden dropp'd.

Cæs.

O noble weakness!

If they had swallow'd poison, 't would appear

By external swelling; but she looks like

sleep,

As she would catch another Antony ³⁵⁰

In her strong toil of grace.

Dol.

Here, on her breast,

There is a vent of blood and something blown.

The like is on her arm.

1. Guard. This is an asp's trail; and these

fig-leaves

Have slime upon them, such as the asp's leaves ³⁵⁵

Upon the caves of Nile.

Cæs.

Most probable

That so she died; for her physician tells me

She hath pursu'd conclusions infinite

Of easy ways to die. Take up her bed;

And bear her women from the monument. ³⁶⁰

She shall be buried by her Antony;

No grave upon the earth shall clip in it

A pair so famous. High events as these

Strike those that make them; and their story

is

No less in pity than his glory which ³⁶⁵

Brought them to be lamented. Our army shall

In solemn show attend this funeral;

And then to Rome. Come, Dolabella, see

High order in this great solemnity.

[Exeunt omnes.]

THE TRAGEDY OF CORIOLANUS

EXTERNAL evidence on the date of Coriolanus is exceptionally scanty. It was first printed in the Folio of 1623, and there is no earlier reference to it unless we interpret the line, "You have lurch'd your friends of the better half of the garland," in Ben Jonson's The Silent Woman (1609), as a gibing allusion to "He lurch'd all swords of the garland," in ii. ii. 105. But the phrase may have been a current one. Internal evidences of metre and style point decisively to its being a late play, and scholars are generally agreed on a date near 1609. The text of the First Folio, which is our sole authority, is badly printed, and in several places almost quite unintelligible.

The source of the plot is Plutarch's Life of Coriolanus, which Shakespeare knew in Sir Thomas North's translation. As in the case of Julius Caesar and Antony and Cleopatra, which are also based on Plutarch, he followed his authority closely. Whole passages of some of the most notable speeches, such as the fable related by Menenius (i. i. 99), and the appeal of Volumnia to her son on behalf of Rome (v. iii. 94 ff.), are couched almost in the words of the biography. The main lines of the characters are also followed faithfully, though many of the more subtle points are due to Shakespeare. For example, the episode in which Coriolanus begs of Cominius the freedom of his Volscian host is in Plutarch, but the finely characteristic touch by which he is represented as having forgotten the man's name is Shakespeare's. The portrait of Menenius is greatly elaborated in the play. Plutarch assigns to him merely the part of a dignified patrician who makes a single attempt to pacify the rebellious plebeians; Shakespeare conceives him as a genial and self-important old gentleman, who takes pride in his intimacy with the hero, and who in his various conversations with the tribunes is responsible for most of the humor which partially relieves the prevailing sombreness of the tragedy. The dialogues of the citizens and such scenes as those with the servants of Aufidius are wholly invented; while as a basis for the actual language in which Caius Martius expresses his haughty and contemptuous nature, the dramatist had merely Plutarch's statements that he was rough and insolent in conversation and undisciplined in temper. In the biography, it is Valeria who induces the wife and mother of Coriolanus to go to plead with him, and her share in the action is treated with considerable fullness. This is represented in the play merely by her presence in the deputation; but Shakespeare added from his own invention the admirable scene (i. iii.) where she calls on Volumnia and Virgilia, and finds them at their sewing. Virgilia is little more than a name in the source, and the skill with which in the play she is drawn in some half-dozen lines is all Shakespeare's.

The truth of the political situation in which the action takes place, Shakespeare either did not understand or did not care to state. The dignified secession of the plebs he misrepresented as the tumult of a hungry mob shouting for cheap corn; and in this play, as elsewhere, his picture of the common crowd is drawn in that spirit of contemptuous amusement which characterized the attitude of the Elizabethan aristocrat towards the working classes. This lack of historical accuracy is found to a considerable extent in Plutarch, but Shakespeare deliberately manipulated his material in the spirit indicated. All the more noteworthy, therefore, is the success with which he catches the antique Roman spirit of such patricians as Volumnia, and the impartiality with which he exhibits the intolerable arrogance of the hero driving him on to destruction. Nowhere does Shakespeare rise more triumphantly above what we may suppose to have been his own personal prejudices, to show the workings of the permanent laws that govern the relations of men in society.

ACT I

SCENE I. [Rome. A street.]

Enter a company of mutinous CITIZENS, with staves, clubs, and other weapons.

1. Cit. Before we proceed any further, hear me speak.

All. Speak, speak.

1. Cit. You are all resolv'd rather to die than to famish?

All. Resolv'd, resolv'd.

1. Cit. First, you know Caius Marcius is chief enemy to the people.

All. We know 't, we know 't.

1. Cit. Let us kill him, and we'll have corn at our own price. Is 't a verdict?

All. No more talking on 't; let it be done. Away, away!

2. Cit. One word, good citizens.

1. Cit. We are accounted poor citizens, the patricians good. What authority surfeits on would relieve us; if they would yield us but the superfluity while it were wholesome, we might guess they relieved us humanely; but they think we are too dear. The leanness that afflicts us, the object of our misery, is as an inventory to particularize their abundance; our sufferance is a gain to them. Let us revenge this with our pikes, ere we become rakes; for the gods know I speak this in hunger for bread, not in thirst for revenge.

2. Cit. Would you proceed especially against Caius Marcius?

All. Against him first; he's a very dog to the commonalty.

2. Cit. Consider you what services he has done for his country?

1. Cit. Very well; and could be content to give him good report for 't, but that he pays himself with being proud.

[2. Cit.] Nay, but speak not maliciously.

1. Cit. I say unto you, what he hath done

famously, he did it to that end. Though soft-conscienc'd men can be content to say it was for his country, he did it to please his mother, and to be partly proud; which he is, even to the altitude of his virtue.

2. Cit. What he cannot help in his nature, you account a vice in him. You must in no way say he is covetous.

1. Cit. If I must not, I need not be barren of accusations; he hath faults, with surplus, to tire in repetition. (Shouts within.) What shouts are these? The other side o' the city is risen; why stay we prating here? To the Capitol!

All. Come, come.

1. Cit. Soft! who comes here?

Enter MENENIUS AGRIPPA.

2. Cit. Worthy Menenius Agrippa, one that hath always lov'd the people.

1. Cit. He's one honest enough; would all the rest were so!

Men. What work's, my countrymen, in hand? Where go you With bats and clubs? The matter? Speak, I pray you.

2. Cit. Our business is not unknown to the Senate. They have had inkling this fortnight what we intend to do, which now we'll show 'em in deeds. They say poor suitors have strong breaths; they shall know we have strong arms too.

Men. Why, masters, my good friends, mine honest neighbours, Will you undo yourselves?

2. Cit. We cannot, sir, we are undone already.

Men. I tell you, friends, most charitable care Have the patricians of you. For your wants, Your suffering in this dearth, you may as well Strike at the heaven with your staves as lift them

Against the Roman state, whose course will on The way it takes, cracking ten thousand curbs

Of more strong link asunder than can ever
Appear in your impediment. For the dearth,
The gods, not the patricians, make it, and
Your knees to them, not arms, must help.
Alack,

You are transported by calamity
Thither where more attends you, and you slander

The helms o' the state, who care for you like fathers

When you curse them as enemies.

2. Cit. Care for us! True, indeed! They ne'er car'd for us yet: suffer us to famish, and their store-houses cramm'd with grain; make edicts for usury, to support usurers; repeal daily any wholesome act established against the rich, and provide more piercing statutes daily, to chain up and restrain the poor. If the wars eat us not up, they will; and there's all the love they bear us.

Men. Either you must Confess yourselves wondrous malicious,
Or be accus'd of folly. I shall tell you
A pretty tale. It may be you have heard it;
But, since it serves my purpose, I will venture

To stale 't a little more.

2. Cit. Well, I'll hear it, sir; yet you must not think to fob off our disgrace with a tale;
but, an 't please you, deliver.

Men. There was a time when all the body's members

Rebell'd against the belly, thus accus'd it:
That only like a gulf it did remain
I' the midst o' the body, idle and unactive,
Still cupboarding the viand, never bearing
Like labour with the rest, where the other instruments

Did see and hear, devise, instruct, walk, feel,
And, mutually participate, did minister
Unto the appetite and affection common
Of the whole body. The belly answer'd—

2. Cit. Well, sir, what answer made the belly?

Men. Sir, I shall tell you. With a kind of smile,

Which ne'er came from the lungs, but even
thus—

For, look you, I may make the belly smile
As well as speak—it tauntingly replied
To the discontented members, the mutinous
parts

That envied his receipt; even so most fitly
As you malign our senators for that
They are not such as you.

2. Cit. Your belly's answer? What!

The kingly-crowned head, the vigilant eye,
The counsellor heart, the arm our soldier,
Our steed the leg, the tongue our trumpeter,
With other muniments and petty helps
In this our fabric, if that they—

Men. What then? What then?
'Fore me, this fellow speaks! What then?
what then?

2. Cit. Should by the cormorant belly be restrain'd.

Who is the sink o' the body, —

Men. Well, what then?

2. Cit. The former agents, if they did complain,

What could the belly answer?

Men. I will tell you.

If you'll bestow a small—of what you have little—

Patience a while, you 'st hear the belly's answer.

2. Cit. Ye 're long about it.

Men. Note me this, good friend;

Your most grave belly was deliberate,

Not rash like his accusers, and thus answered:

"True is it, my incorporate friends," quoth he,

"That I receive the general food at first

Which you do live upon; and fit it is,

Because I am the store-house and the shop

Of the whole body. But, if you do remember,

I send it through the rivers of your blood,

Even to the court, the heart, to the seat o' the brain;

And, through the cranks and offices of man,

The strongest nerves and small inferior veins

From me receive that natural competency Whereby they live. And though that all at once,

You, my good friends,—this says the belly,

mark me,—

2. Cit. Ay, sir; well, well.

Men. "Though all at once cannot

See what I do deliver out to each,

Yet I can make my audit up, that all

From me do back receive the flour of all,

And leave me but the bran." What say you

to 't?

2. Cit. It was an answer. How apply you

this?

Men. The senators of Rome are this good

belly,

And you the mutinous members; for examine

Their counsels and their cares, digest things

rightly

Touching the weal o' the common, you shall

find

No public benefit which you receive

But it proceeds or comes from them to you

And no way from yourselves. What do you think,

You, the great toe of this assembly?

2. Cit. I the great toe! Why the great toe?

Men. For that, being one o' the lowest, basest, poorest,

Of this most wise rebellion, thou goest foremost;

Thou rascal, that art worst in blood to run,

Lead'st first to win some vantage.

But make you ready your stiff bats and elubs;

Rome and her rats are at the point of battle,

The one side must have bale.

Enter CAIUS MARCIUS.

Hail, noble Marcius!

Mar. Thanks. What 's the matter, you dis-sententious rogues,

That, rubbing the poor itch of your opinion,

Make yourselves scabs?

2. Cit. We have ever your good word.

Mar. He that will give good words to thee will flatter
Beneath abhorring. What would you have,
you curs,
That like nor peace nor war? The one affrights you,
The other makes you proud. He that trusts to
you,
Where he should find you lions, finds you hares; 175

Where foxes, geese. You are no surer, no,
Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,
Or hailstone in the sun. Your virtue is To make him worthy whose offence subdues
him,

And curse that justice did it. Who deserves greatness 180

Deserves your hate; and your affections are
A sick man's appetite, who desires most that Which would increase his evil. He that depends

Upon your favours swims with fins of lead
And hews down oaks with rushes. Hang ye!
Trust ye? 185

With every minute you do change a mind,
And call him noble that was now your hate,
Him vile that was your garland. What's the matter,

That in these several places of the city
You cry against the noble Senate, who, 190
Under the gods, keep you in awe, which else Would feed on one another? What's their seeking?

Men. For corn at their own rates; whereof,
they say,

The city is well stor'd.

Mar. Hang 'em! They say!
They'll sit by the fire, and presume to know 195
What's done! the Capitol; who's like to rise,
Who thrives, and who declines; side factions,
and give out

Conjectural marriages; making parties strong,
And feebling such as stand not in their liking Below their cobbled shoes. They say there's grain enough! 200

Would the nobility lay aside their ruth
And let me use my sword, I'd make a quarry
With thousands of these quarter'd slaves, as high

As I could pick my lance.

Men. Nay, these are almost thoroughly persuaded; 205

For though abundantly they lack discretion,
Yet are they passing cowardly. But, I beseech
you,

What says the other troop?

Mar. They are dissolv'd, hang 'em!
They said they were an-hungry; sigh'd forth
proverbs,

That hunger broke stone walls, that dogs must eat, 210

That meat was made for mouths, that the gods sent not

Corn for the rich men only. With these shreds
They vented their complainings; which being answer'd,

And a petition granted them, — a strange one

To break the heart of generosity, 215
And make bold power look pale, — they threw their caps

As they would hang them on the horns o' the moon,

Shouting their emulation.

Men. What is granted them?

Mar. Five tribunes to defend their vulgar wisdoms,

Of their own choice. One's Junius Brutus, 220
Sicinius Velutus, and I know not — 'Sdeath!
The rabble should have first unroof'd the city,
Ere so prevail'd with me. It will in time
Win upon power and throw forth greater themes
For insurrection's arguing.

Men. This is strange. 225

Mar. Go, get you home, you fragments!

Enter a MESSENGER, hastily.

Mess. Where's Caius Marcius?

Mar. Here. What's the matter?

Mess. The news is, sir, the Volsces are in arms.

Mar. I am glad on 't. Then we shall ha' means to vent

Our musty superfluity. See, our best elders. 230

Enter COMINIUS, TITUS LARTIUS, and other SENATORS; JUNIUS BRUTUS and SICINIUS VELUTUS.

1. Sen. Marcius, 't is true that you have lately told us;

The Volsces are in arms.

Mar. They have a leader,
Tullus Aufidius, that will put you to 't.

I sin in envying his nobility,
And were I anything but what I am, 235
I would wish me only he.

Com. You have fought together?

Mar. Were half to half the world by the ears and he

Upon my party, I'd revolt, to make
Only my wars with him. He is a lion
That I am proud to hunt.

1. Sen. Then, worthy Marcius,
Attend upon Cominius to these wars. 241

Com. It is your former promise.

Mar. Sir, it is;
And I am constant. Titus Lartius, thou
Shalt see me once more strike at Tullus' face.
What, art thou stiff? Stand'st out?

Lart. No, Caius Marcius;
I'll lean upon one crutch and fight with t' other, 245

Ere stay behind this business.

Men. O, true-bred!

[1. Sen. Your company to the Capitol;
where, I know,

Our greatest friends attend us.

Lart. [To Com.] Lead you on.
[To Mar.] Follow Cominius; we must follow
you; 250

Right worthy you priority.

Com. Noble Marcius!

[1. Sen. [To the Citizens.] Hence to your homes; begone!

Mar. Nay, let them follow.

The Volscies have much corn; take these rats
thither

To gnaw their garners. Worshipful mutiners,
Your valour puts well forth; pray, follow. ²⁵⁵ [Citizens steal away. Exeunt all but Sicinius and Brutus.

Sic. Was ever man so proud as is this Marcius?

Bru. He has no equal.

Sic. When we were chosen tribunes for the people,—

Bru. Mark'd you his lip and eyes?

Sic. Nay, but his taunts.

Bru. Being mov'd, he will not spare to gird
the gods. ²⁶⁰

Sic. Be-mock the modest moon.

Bru. The present wars devour him! He is grown

Too proud to be so valiant.

Sic. Such a nature,
Ticked with good success, disdains the shadow
Which he treads on at noon. But I do wonder
His insolence can brook to be commanded ²⁶⁵
Under Cominius.

Bru. Fame, at the which he aims,
In whom already he's well grac'd, cannot Better be held nor more attain'd than by
A place below the first; for what miscarries ²⁷⁰
Shall be the general's fault, though he perform
To the utmost of a man, and giddy censure
Will then cry out of Marcius, "O, if he Had borne the business!"

Sic. Besides, if things go well,
Opinion that so sticks on Marcius shall ²⁷⁵
Of his demerits rob Cominius.

Bru. Come.
Half all Cominius' honours are to Marcius, Though Marcius earn'd them not, and all his faults

To Marcius shall be honours, though indeed ²⁷⁹
In aught he merit not.

Sic. Let's hence, and hear
How the dispatch is made, and in what fashion,
More than his singularity, he goes
Upon this present action.

Bru. Let's along. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE II. Corioli. The Senate-house.]

Enter TULLUS AUFIDIUS with SENATORS of Corioli.

1. Sen. So, your opinion is, Aufidius,
That they of Rome are ent'red in our counsels
And know how we proceed.

Auf. Is it not yours?
What ever have been thought on in this state,
That could be brought to bodily act ere Rome
Had circumvention? 'Tis not four days gone Since I heard thence; these are the words:—I
think

I have the letter here; yes, here it is:— [Reads.] "They have press'd a power, but it is not known

Whether for east or west. The dearth is great;
The people mutinous; and it is rumour'd, ¹¹
Cominius, Marcius your old enemy,
Who is of Rome worse hated than of you,

And Titus Lartius, a most valiant Roman,
These three lead on this preparation ¹⁵
Whither 'tis bent. Most likely 'tis for you;
Consider of it."

1. Sen. Our army's in the field.

We never yet made doubt but Rome was ready
To answer us.

Auf. Nor did you think it folly
To keep your great pretences veil'd till when ²⁰
They needs must show themselves; which in the hatching,

It seem'd, appear'd to Rome. By the discovery
We shall be short'n'd in our aim, which was
To take in many towns ere almost Rome
Should know we were afoot.

2. Sen. Noble Aufidius, ²⁵
Take your commission; hie you to your bands;
Let us alone to guard Corioli.

If they set down before 's, for the remove Bring up your army; but, I think, you'll find They've not prepar'd for us.

Auf. O, doubt not that;
I speak from certainties. Nay, more, ³¹
Some parcels of their power are forth already,
And only hitherward. I leave your honours.
If we and Caius Marcius chance to meet,
'Tis sworn between us we shall ever strike ³⁵
Till one can do no more.

All. The gods assist you!

Auf. And keep your honours safe!

1. Sen. Farewell.

2. Sen. Farewell.

All. Farewell. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE III. Rome. A room in Marcius' house.]

Enter VOLUMNIA and VIRGILIA: they set them down on two low stools, and sew.

Vol. I pray you, daughter, sing; or express yourself in a more comfortable sort. If my son were my husband, I should freelier rejoice in that absence wherein he won honour than in the embracements of his bed where he would show most love. When yet he was but ten-[5 der-bodied and the only son of my womb, when youth with comeliness pluck'd all gaze his way, when for a day of kings' entreaties a mother should not sell him an hour from her beholding,
I, considering how honour would become ¹⁰
such a person, that it was no better than picture-like to hang by the wall, if renown made it not stir, was pleas'd to let him seek danger where he was like to find fame. To a cruel war I sent him; from whence he return'd, his ¹⁵ brows bound with oak. I tell thee, daughter,
I sprang not more in joy at first hearing he was a man-child than now in first seeing he had proved himself a man. ¹⁹

Vir. But had he died in the business, madam; how then?

Vol. Then his good report should have been my son; I therein would have found issue.
Hear me profess sincerely: had I a dozen sons, each in my love alike and none less dear than thine and my good Marcius, I had rather had ²⁵ eleven die nobly for their country than one voluptuously surfeit out of action.

Enter a GENTLEWOMAN.

Gent. Madam, the Lady Valeria is come to visit you.

Vir. Beseech you, give me leave to retire myself. 30

Vol. Indeed, you shall not.

Methinks I hear hither your husband's drum,
See him pluck Aufidius down by the hair,
As children from a bear, the Volscies shunning him.

Methinks I see him stamp thus, and call thus: 35
"Come on, you cowards! you were got in fear, Though you were born in Rome." His bloody

brow
With his mail'd hand then wiping, forth he goes,

Like to a harvest-man that's task'd to mow
Or all or lose his hire. 40

Vir. His bloody brow! O Jupiter, no blood!

Vol. Away, you fool! it more becomes a man

Than gilt his trophy. The breasts of Hecuba,
When she did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier

Than Hector's forehead when it spit forth blood 45

At Grecian sword, contemning. Tell Valeria,
We are fit to bid her welcome. [Exit Gent.]

Vir. Heavens bless my lord from fell Aufidius!

Vol. He'll beat Aufidius' head below his knee

And tread upon his neck. 50

Enter VALERIA, with an Usher and Gentlewoman.

Val. My ladies both, good day to you.

Vol. Sweet madam.

Vir. I am glad to see your ladyship.

Val. How do you both? You are manifest house-keepers. What are you sewing here? A fine spot, in good faith. How does your little son? 57

Vir. I thank your ladyship; well, good madam.

Vol. He had rather see the swords and hear a drum than look upon his schoolmaster. 61

Val. O' my word, the father's son. I'll swear, 't is a very pretty boy. O' my troth, I look'd upon him o' Wednesday half an hour together; has such a confirm'd countenance. I saw him run after a gilded butterfly; and [as when he caught it, he let it go again; and after it again; and over and over he comes, and up again; catch'd it again; or whether his fall enrag'd him, or how 't was, he did so set his teeth and tear it. O, I warrant, how he mammoock'd it! 71

Vol. One on 's father's moods.

Val. Indeed, la, 't is a noble child.

Vir. A crack, madam. 74

Val. Come, lay aside your stitchery; I must have you play the idle housewife with me this afternoon.

Vir. No, good madam; I will not out of doors.

Val. Not out of doors!

Vol. She shall, she shall. 84

Vir. Indeed, no, by your patience; I'll not over the threshold till my lord return from the wars.

Val. Fie, you confine yourself most unreasonably. Come, you must go visit the good lady that lies in. 86

Vir. I will wish her speedy strength, and visit her with my prayers; but I cannot go thither.

Vol. Why, I pray you?

Vir. 'T is not to save labour, nor that I want love. 91

Val. You would be another Penelope: yet, they say, all the yarn she spun in Ulysses' absence did but fill Ithaca full of moths. Come; I would your cambric were sensible as your finger, that you might leave pricking it for pity. Come, you shall go with us. 97

Vir. No, good madam, pardon me; indeed, I will not forth.

Val. In truth, la, go with me; and I'll tell you excellent news of your husband. 101

Vir. O, good madam, there can be none yet.

Val. Verily, I do not jest with you; there came news from him last night.

Vir. Indeed, madam? 106

Val. In earnest, it's true; I heard a senator speak it. Thus it is: the Volscies have an army forth; against whom Cominius the general is gone, with one part of our Roman power. Your lord and Titus Lartius are set down before their city Corioli; they nothing doubt [110 prevailing and to make it brief wars. This is true, on mine honour; and so, I pray, go with us.

Vir. Give me excuse, good madam; I will obey you in everything hereafter. 115

Vol. Let her alone, lady. As she is now, she will but disease our better mirth.

Val. In troth, I think she would. Fare you well, then. Come, good sweet lady. Prithes, Virgilia, turn thy solemnness out o' door, and go along with us. 121

Vir. No, at a word, madam; indeed, I must not. I wish you much mirth.

Val. Well, then, farewell. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE IV.] Before Corioli.

Enter, with drum and colours, MARCIUS, TITUS LARTIUS, Captains and Soldiers. To them a MESSENGER.

Mar. Yonder comes news. A wager they have met.

Lart. My horse to yours, no.

Mar. 'T is done.

Lart. Agreed.

Mar. Say, has our general met the enemy?

Mess. They lie in view; but have not spoke as yet.

Lart. So, the good horse is mine.

Mar. I'll buy him of you.

Lart. No, I'll not sell nor give him; lend you him I will

For half a hundred years. Summon the town.

Mar. How far off lie these armies?

Mess. Within this mile and half.

Mar. Then shall we hear their 'larum, and they ours.

Now, Mars, I prithee, make us quick in work,
That we with smoking swords may march from hence

To help our fielded friends! Come, blow thy blast.

They sound a parley. Enter two SENATORS with others on the walls.

Tullus Aufidius, is he within your walls?

1. Sen. No, nor a man that fears you less than he,

That 's lesser than a little. [Drum afar off.]

Hark! our drums

Are bringing forth our youth. We 'll break our walls,

Rather than they shall pound us up. Our gates,

Which yet seem shut, we have but pinn'd with rushes;

They 'll open of themselves. [Alarum afar off.]

Hark you, far off!

There is Aufidius; list, what work he makes Amongst your cloven army.

Mar. O, they are at it!

Lart. Their noise be our instruction. Ladders, ho!

Enter the army of the Volsces.

Mar. They fear us not, but issue forth their city.

Now put your shields before your hearts, and fight

With hearts more proof than shields. Advance, brave Titus!

They do disdain us much beyond our thoughts,
Which makes me sweat with wrath. Come on, my fellows!

He that retires, I 'll take him for a Volscie,
And he shall feel mine edge. [Exit.]

Alarum. The Romans are beat back to their trenches. Re-enter MARCIUS, cursing.

Mar. All the contagion of the south light on you,

You shames of Rome! you herd of — Boils and plagues

Plaster you o'er, that you may be abhorr'd
Further than seen, and one infect another
Against the wind a mile! You souls of geese,
That bear the shapes of men, how have you

run
From slaves that apes would beat! Pluto and hell!

All hurt behind! Backs red, and faces pale
With flight and agued fear! Mend and charge home,

Or, by the fires of heaven, I 'll leave the foe

And make my wars on you. Look to 't; come on!

If you 'll stand fast, we 'll beat them to their wives,

As they us to our trenches followed.

Another alarum. [The Volscies fly,] and MARCIUS follows them to the gates.

So, now the gates are ope; now prove good seconds.

'T is for the followers fortune widens them,
Not for the fliers. Mark me, and do the like. ⁴⁵

[Enters the gates.]

1. Sol. Fool-hardiness; not I.

2. Sol. Nor I. [Marcius is shut in.]

1. Sol. See, they have shut him in. [Alarum continues.]

All. To the pot, I warrant him.

Re-enter TITUS LARTIUS.

Lart. What is become of Marcius?

All. Slain, sir, doubtless.

1. Sol. Following the fliers at the very heels,
With them he enters; who, upon the sudden, ⁵⁰
Clapp'd to their gates. He is himself alone,

To answer all the city.

Lart. O noble fellow!

Who sensibly outdares his senseless sword,
And, when it bows, stands up. Thou art left,

Marcus;

A carbuncle entire, as big as thou art, ⁵⁵
Were not so rich a jewel. Thou wast a soldier

Even to Cato's wish, not fierce and terrible
Only in strokes; but, with thy grim looks and
The thunder-like percussion of thy sounds,
Thou mad'st thine enemies shake, as if the ⁶⁰
world

Were feverous and did tremble.

Re-enter MARCIUS, bleeding, assaulted by the enemy.

1. Sol. Look, sir.

Lart. O, 't is Marcius!

Let's fetch him off, or make remain alike. [They fight, and all enter the city.]

[SCENE V. Corioli. A street.]

Enter certain ROMANS, with spoils.

1. Rom. This will I carry to Rome.

2. Rom. And I this.

3. Rom. A murrain on 't! I took this for silver. [Exeunt. Alarum continues still afar off.]

Enter MARCIUS and TITUS LARTIUS with a Trumpet.

Mar. See here these movers that do prize their hours

At a crack'd drachma! Cushions, leaden spoons, Irons of a doit, doublets that hangmen would Bury with those that wore them, these base ⁵ slaves,

Ere yet the fight be done, pack up. Down with them!

And hark, what noise the general makes! To him! ¹⁰

There is the man of my soul's hate, Aufidius, Piercing our Romans; then, valiant Titus, take Convenient numbers to make good the city;

Whilst I, with those that have the spirit, will haste

To help Cominius.

Lart. Worthy sir, thou bleed'st. ¹⁵
Thy exercise hath been too violent for
A second course of fight.

Mar. Sir, praise me not,
My work hath yet not warm'd me; fare you
well.

The blood I drop is rather physical Than dangerous to me. To Aufidius thus ²⁰
I will appear, and fight.

Lart. Now the fair goddess, Fortune,
Fall deep in love with thee; and her great
charms

Misguide thy opposers' swords! Bold gentleman,

Prosperity be thy page!

Mar. Thy friend no less Than those she placeth highest! So, farewell. ²⁵

Lart. Thou worthiest Marcius!

[Exit Marcius.]

Go, sound thy trumpet in the market-place;
Call thither all the officers o' the town,
Where they shall know our mind. Away!

[Exeunt.]

[SCENE VI. Near the camp of Cominius.]

Enter COMINIUS, as it were in retire, with soldiers.

Com. Breathe you, my friends; well fought.
We are come off

Like Romans, neither foolish in our stands,
Nor cowardly in retire. Believe me, sirs,
We shall be charg'd again. Whiles we have struck,

By interims and conveying gusts we have heard ⁵

The charges of our friends. Ye Roman gods!
Lead their successes as we wish our own,
That both our powers, with smiling fronts encount'ring,

May give you thankful sacrifice.

Enter a MESSENGER.

Mess. Thy news?
The citizens of Corioli have issued ¹⁰
And given to Lartius and to Marcius battle.
I saw our party to their trenches driven,
And then I came away.

Com. Though thou speak'st truth,
Methinks thou speak'st not well. How long is 't since?

Mess. Above an hour, my lord. ¹⁵

Com. 'T is not a mile; briefly we heard their drums.

How couldst thou in a mile confound an hour,
And bring thy news so late?

Mess. Spies of the Volsces
Held me in chase, that I was forc'd to wheel
Three or four miles about, else had I, sir, ²⁰
Half an hour since brought my report.

Enter MARCIUS.

Com. Who's yonder,
That does appear as he were flay'd? O gods!

He has the stamp of Marcius; and I have Before-time seen him thus.

Mar. Come I too late?

Com. The shepherd knows not thunder from a tabor ²⁵
More than I know the sound of Marcius' tongue
From every meaner man.

Mar. Come I too late?

Com. Ay, if you come not in the blood of others,
But mantled in your own.

Mar. O, let me clip ye
In arms as sound as when I woo'd, in heart ³⁰
As merry as when our nuptial day was done,
And tapers burn'd to bedward!

Com. Flower of warriors,
How is 't with Titus Lartius?

Mar. As with a man busied about decrees:
Condemning some to death, and some to exile;
Ransoming him, or pitying, threat'ning the other; ³⁵

Holding Corioli in the name of Rome,
Even like a fawning greyhound in the leash,
To let him slip at will.

Com. Where is that slave Which told me they had beat you to your trenches? ⁴⁰

Where is he? Call him hither.

Mar. Let him alone;
He did inform the truth. But for our gentle-
men, —

The common file — a plague! tribunes for
them! —

The mouse ne'er shunn'd the cat as they did
budge
From rascals worse than they.

Com. But how prevail'd you?

Mar. Will the time serve to tell? I do not think. ⁴⁵

Where is the enemy? Are you lords o' th'
field?

If not, why cease you till you are so?

Com. Marcius,
We have at disadvantage fought, and did
Retire to win our purpose. ⁵⁰

Mar. How lies their battle? Know you on which side

They have plac'd their men of trust?

Com. As I guess, Marcius,
Their bands i' the vaward are the Antiates,
Of their best trust; o'er them Aufidius,
Their very heart of hope.

Mar. I do beseech you, ⁵⁵
By all the battles wherein we have fought,
By the blood we have shed together, by the

vows
We have made to endure friends, that you directly

Set me against Aufidius and his Antiates;

And that you not delay the present, but, ⁶⁰
Filling the air with swords advanc'd and darts,
We prove this very hour.

Com. Though I could wish
You were conducted to a gentle bath

And balms applied to you, yet dare I never Deny your asking. Take your choice of those ⁶⁵

That best can aid your action.

Mar. Those are they
That most are willing. If any such be here —
As it were sin to doubt — that love this painting
Wherein you see me smear'd; if any fear
Lesser his person than an ill report;
If any think brave death outweighs bad life,
And that his country 's dearer than himself;
Let him alone, or so many so minded,
Wave thus, to express his disposition,
And follow Marcus. 75

[They all shout and wave their swords, take him up in their arms, and cast up their caps.]

O, me alone, make you a sword of me?
If these shows be not outward, which of you
But is four Volsces? None of you but is Able to bear against the great Aufidius
A shield as hard as his. A certain number, 80
Though thanks to all, must I select from all;
the rest

Shall bear the business in some other fight,
As cause will be obey'd. Please you to march;
And four shall quickly draw out my command,
Which men are best inclin'd.

Com. March on, my fellows!
Make good this ostentation, and you shall 85
Divide in all with us. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE VII. The gates of Corioli.]

TITUS LARTIUS, having set a guard upon Corioli, going with drum and trumpet toward Cominius
and Caius Marcus, enters with a LIEUTENANT, other Soldiers, and a Scout.

Lart. So, let the ports be guarded; keep your duties,
As I have set them down. If I do send, dispatch
Those centuries to our aid; the rest will serve
For a short holding. If we lose the field,
We cannot keep the town.

Lieu. Fear not our care, sir.
Lart. Hence, and shut your gates upon 's. 90
Our guide, come; to the Roman camp conduct us. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE VIII. A field of battle.]

Alarum as in battle. Enter MARCIUS and AU-FIDIUS at several doors.

Mar. I'll fight with none but thee, for I do hate thee
Worse than a promise-breaker.

Auf. We hate alike.
Not Afric owns a serpent I abhor
More than thy fame and envy. Fix thy foot.

Mar. Let the first budger die the other's slave, 95

And the gods doom him after!
Auf. If I fly, Marcus,
Holloa me like a hare.

Mar. Within these three hours, Tullus,
Alone I fought in your Corioli walls,
And made what work I pleas'd. 'Tis not my
blood

Wherein thou seest me mask'd; for thy revenge 100

Wrench up thy power to the highest.

Auf. Wert thou the Hector
That was the whip of your bragg'd progeny,
Thou shouldst not scape me here.

*[Here they fight, and certain Volsces come in the aid of Aufidius.
Marcus fights till they be driven in breathless.]*

Officious, and not valiant, you have sham'd me
In your condemned seconds. [Exeunt.] 15

[SCENE IX. The Roman camp.]

Flourish. Alarum. A retreat is sounded. Enter, at one door, COMINIUS with the Romans; at another door, MARCIUS, with his arm in a scarf.

Com. If I should tell thee o'er this thy day's work,
Thou 'lt not believe thy deeds; but I'll report
it

Where senators shall mingle tears with smiles,
Where great patricians shall attend and shrug,
I'll the end admire, where ladies shall be frighted.
And, gladly quak'd, hear more; where the dull
tribunes, 20

That with the fusty plebeians hate thine honours,
Shall say against their hearts, "We thank the gods

Our Rome hath such a soldier."
Yet can'st thou to a morsel of this feast, 25
Having fully din'd before.

Enter TITUS LARTIUS, with his power, from the pursuit.

Lart. O general,
Here is the steed, we the caparison.
Hadst thou beheld —

Mar. Pray now, no more. My mother,
Who has a charter to extol her blood,
When she does praise me grieves me. I have
done 30

As you have done, that's what I can; induc'd
As you have been, that's for my country.
He that has but effected his good will Hath overta'en mine act.

Com. You shall not be 35
The grave of your deserving; Rome must know
The value of her own. 'T were a concealment
Worse than a theft, no less than a traducement,
To hide your doings, and to silence that
Which, to the spire and top of praises vouch'd,
Would seem but modest; therefore, I beseech
you — 40

In sign of what you are, not to reward
What you have done — before our army hear
me.

Mar. I have some wounds upon me, and they smart

To hear themselves rememb'ed.

Com. Should they not,
Well might they fester 'gainst ingratitude, 45
And tent themselves with death, Of all the horses,

Whereof we have ta'en good and good store, of
all

The treasure in this field achiev'd and city,
We render you the tenth, to be ta'en forth,

Before the common distribution, at 35
Your only choice.

Mar. I thank you, general;
But cannot make my heart consent to take
A bribe to pay my sword. I do refuse it,
And stand upon my common part with those
That have beheld the doing. 40

[A long flourish. They all cry,
"Marcius! Marcius!" cast up their caps and lances. Cominius and Lartius stand bare.]

May these same instruments, which you pro-
fane,

Never sound more! When drums and trumpets shall

T' the field prove flatterers, let courts and cities
be

Made all of false-fac'd soothing!

When steel grows soft as the parasite's silk, 45

Let him be made a coverture for the wars!

No more, I say! For that I have not wash'd

My nose that bled, or foil'd some debile
wretch,—

Which, without note, here's many else have done,—

You shout me forth 50

In acclamations hyperbolical,

As if I lov'd my little should be dieted

In fancies sauc'd with lies.

Com. Too modest are you;

More cruel to your good report than grateful

To us that give you truly. By your patience, 55

If 'gainst yourself you be incens'd, we'll put

you,

Like one that means his proper harm, in man-
acles,

Then reason safely with you. Therefore be it
known,

As to us, to all the world, that Caius Marcus Wears this war's garland; in token of the 60 which,

My noble steed, known to the camp, I give him,

With all his trim belonging; and from this
time,

For what he did before Corioli, call him,

With all the applause and clamour of the host,

CAIUS MARCIUS CORIOLANUS! Bear 65

The addition nobly ever!

[Flourish. Trumpets sound, and drums.]

All. Caius Marcus Coriolanus!

Cor. I will go wash;

And when my face is fair, you shall perceive

Whether I blush or no; howbeit, I thank
you. 70

I mean to stride your steed, and at all times

To undercrest your good addition

To the fairness of my power.

Com. So, to our tent;

Where, ere we do repose us, we will write

To Rome of our success. You, Titus Lartius, 75

Must to Corioli back, send us to Rome

The best, with whom we may articulate

For their own good and ours.

Lart. I shall, my lord.

Cor. The gods begin to mock me, I, that

now

Refus'd most princely gifts, am bound to beg 80

Of my lord general.

Com. Take 't; 't is yours. What is 't?

Cor. I sometime lay here in Corioli

At a poor man's house; he us'd me kindly.

He cried to me,— I saw him prisoner,—

But then Aufidius was within my view, 85

And wrath o'erwhelm'd my pity. I request
you

To give my poor host freedom.

Com. O, well begg'd!

Were he the butcher of my son, he should Be free as is the wind. Deliver him, Titus.

Lart. Marcus, his name?

Cor. By Jupiter! forgot.

I am weary; yea, my memory is tir'd. 90

Have we no wine here?

Com. Go we to our tent.

The blood upon your visage dries; 't is time

It should be look'd to. Come. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE X. The camp of the Volsces.]

A flourish. Cornets. Enter TULLUS AUFIDIUS, bloody, with two or three SOLDIERS.

Auf. The town is ta'en!

[1.] Sol. 'T will be deliver'd back on good condition.

Auf. Condition!

I would I were a Roman; for I cannot,

Being a Volscie, be that I am. Condition! 5

What good condition can a treaty find

I' the part that is at mercy? Five times, Mar-
cius,

I have fought with thee; so often hast thou beat me,

And wouldst do so, I think, should we encounter

As often as we eat. By the elements, 10

If e'er again I meet him beard to beard,

He's mine, or I am his. Mine emulation

Hath not that honour in 't it had; for where

I thought to crush him in an equal force,

True sword to sword, I'll potch at him some
way; 15

Or wrath or craft may get him.

[1.] Sol. He's the devil.

Auf. Bolder, though not so subtle. My valour's poison'd

With only suff'ring stain by him; for him

Shall fly out of itself. Nor sleep nor sanctuary,

Being naked, sick, nor fane nor Capitol, 20

The prayers of priests nor times of sacrifice,

Embargements all of fury, shall lift up

Their rotten privilege and custom 'gainst

My hate to Marcus. Where I find him, were it

At home, upon my brother's guard, even
there, 25

Against the hospitable canon, would I

Wash my fierce hand in 's heart. Go you to the city;

Learn how 't is held, and what they are that must

Be hostages for Rome.

[1.] Sol. Will not you go?

Auf. I am attended at the cypress grove. I pray you — 30
 'T is south the city mills — bring me word
 thither
 How the world goes, that to the pace of it
 I may spur on my journey.
 [L.] Sol. I shall, sir.

[Exeunt.]

ACT II

[SCENE I. Rome. A public place.]

Enter MENENIUS, with the two Tribunes of the people, SICINIUS and BRUTUS.

Men. The augurer tells me we shall have news to-night.

Bru. Good or bad?

Men. Not according to the prayer of the people, for they love not Marc'us.

Sic. Nature teaches beasts to know their friends.

Men. Pray you, who does the wolf love?

Sic. The lamb.

Men. Ay, to devour him; as the hungry plebeians would the noble Marc'us.

Bru. He's a lamb indeed, that baes like a bear.

Men. He's a bear indeed, that lives like a lamb. You two are old men: tell me one thing that I shall ask you.

Both. Well, sir.

Men. In what enormity is Marc'us poor in, that you two have not in abundance?

Bru. He's poor in no one fault, but stor'd with all.

Sic. Especially in pride.

Bru. And topping all others in boasting.

Men. This is strange now. Do you two know how you are censured here in the city, I mean of us o' the right-hand file? Do you?

Both. Why, how are we censur'd?

Men. Because you talk of pride now, — will you not be angry?

Both. Well, well, sir, well.

Men. Why, 't is no great matter; for a very little thief of occasion will rob you of a great deal of patience. Give your dispositions the reins, and be angry at your pleasures; at the least, if you take it as a pleasure to you in being so. You blame Marc'us for being proud?

Bru. We do it not alone, sir.

Men. I know you can do very little alone, for your helps are many, or else your actions would grow wondrous single; your abilities are too infant-like for doing much alone. You talk of pride: O that you could turn your eyes toward the napes of your necks, and make but an interior survey of your good selves! O that you could!

Both. What then, sir?

Men. Why, then you should discover a brace of unmeriting, proud, violent, testy magistrates, alias fools, as any in Rome.

Sic. Menenius, you are known well enough too.

Men. I am known to be a humorous patrician, and one that loves a cup of hot wine with not a drop of allaying Tiber in 't; said to be something imperfect in favouring the first complaint; hasty and tinder-like upon too trivial motion; one that converses more with the buttock of the night than with the forehead of the morning. What I think, I utter, and spend my malice in my breath. Meeting two such weas-men as you are — I cannot call you Lycurguses — if the drink you give me touch my palate adversely, I make a crooked face at it. I can't say your worships have deliver'd the matter well, when I find the ass in compound with the major part of your syllables; and though I must be content to bear with those that say you are reverend grave men, yet they lie deadly that tell you have good faces. If you see this in the map of my microcosm, follows it that I am known well enough too? What harm can your bisson conspectivities glean out of this character, if I be known well enough too?

Bru. Come, sir, come, we know you well enough.

Men. You know neither me, yourselves, nor anything. You are ambitious for poor knaves' caps and legs. You wear out a good wholesome forenoon in hearing a cause between an orange-wife and a faucet-seller; and then rejoin the controversy of three pence to a second day of audience. When you are hearing a matter between party and party, if you chance to be pinch'd with the colic, you make faces like mummers; set up the bloody flag against all patience; and, in roaring for a chamber-pot, dismiss the controversy bleeding, the more entangled by your hearing. All the peace you make in their cause is calling both the parties knaves. You are a pair of strange ones.

Bru. Come, come, you are well understood to be a perfecter giber for the table than a necessary benchman in the Capitol.

Men. Our very priests must become mockers, if they shall encounter such ridiculous subjects as you are. When you speak best unto the purpose, it is not worth the wagging of your beards; and your beards deserve not so honourable a grave as to stuff a botcher's cushion, or to be entomb'd in an ass's pack-saddle. Yet you must be saying Marc'us is proud; who, in a cheap estimation, is worth all your predecessors since Deucalion, though peradventure some of the best of 'em were hereditary hangmen. God-den to your worships. More of your conversation would infect my brain, being the herdsmen of the beastly plebeians. I will be bold to take my leave of you.

[Brutus and Sicinius go aside.]

Enter VOLUMNIA, VIRGILIA, and VALERIA.

How now, my as fair as noble ladies, — and the moon, were she earthly, no nobler, — whither do you follow your eyes so fast?

Vol. Honourable Menenius, my boy Marc'us approaches. For the love of Juno, let 's go.

Men. Ha! Marc'us coming home?

Vol. Ay, worthy Menenius; and with most prosperous approbation.

Men. Take my cap, Jupiter, [tosses it up] and I thank thee. Hoo! Marcius coming home! 110
2 Ladies. Nay, 't is true.

Vol. Look, here 's a letter from him; the state hath another, his wife another, and, I think, there 's one at home for you. 120

Men. I will make my very house reel tonight. A letter for me!

Vir. Yes, certain, there 's a letter for you; I saw 't. 134

Men. A letter for me! it gives me an estate of seven years' health, in which time I will make a lip at the physician. The most sovereign prescription in Galen is but empiricute, and, to this preservative, of no better report than a horse-drench. Is he not wounded? He was wont to come home wounded. 131

Vir. O, no, no, no.

Vol. O, he is wounded; I thank the gods for 't.

Men. So do I too, if it be not too much. Brings 'a victory in his pocket? The wounds become him. 136

Vol. On 's brows. Menenius, he comes the third time home with the oaken garland.

Men. Has he disciplin'd Aufidius soundly?

Vol. Titus Lartius writes, they fought together, but Aufidius got off. 141

Men. And 't was time for him too, I'll warrant him that. An he had stay'd by him, I would not have been so fidius'd for all the chests in Corioli, and the gold that 's in them. Is the Senate possess'd of this? 146

Vol. Good ladies, let 's go. — Yes, yes, yes; the Senate has letters from the general, wherein he gives my son the whole name of the war. He hath in this action outdone his former deeds doubly. 151

Val. In troth, there 's wondrous things spoke of him.

Men. Wondrous! ay, I warrant you, and not without his true purchasing. 155

Vir. The gods grant them true!

Vol. True! pow, wow.

Men. True! I'll be sworn they are true. Where is he wounded? [To the Tribunes.] God save your good worships! Marcius is coming home; he has more cause to be proud. — Where is he wounded? 162

Vol. I' the shoulder and i' the left arm. There will be large cicatrices to show the people, when he shall stand for his place. He received in the repulse of Tarquin seven hurts i' the body. 166

Men. One i' the neck, and two i' the thigh, — there 's nine that I know.

Vol. He had, before this last expedition, twenty-five wounds upon him. 170

Men. Now it 's twenty-seven; every gash was an enemy's grave. Hark! the trumpets. [A shout and flourish.]

Vol. These are the ushers of Marcius; before him he carries noise, and behind him he leaves tears. 176

Death, that dark spirit, in 's nerry arm doth lie, Which, being advanc'd, declines, and then men die.

A sennet. Trumpets sound. Enter COMINIUS the general, and TITUS LARTIUS; between them, CORIOLANUS, crown'd with an oaken garland; with Captains and Soldiers, and a HERALD.

Her. Know, Rome, that all alone Marcius did fight

Within Corioli gates; where he hath won, 180
 With fame, a name to Caius Marcius; these
 In honour follows Coriolanus.

Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus!

[Flourish.]
All. Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus!

Cor. No more of this; it does offend my heart. 185

Pray now, no more.

Com. Look, sir, your mother!

Cor. O,

You have, I know, petition'd all the gods
 For my prosperity! [Kneels.]

Vol. Nay, my good soldier, up;

My gentle Marcius, worthy Caius, and
 By deed achieving honour newly nam'd, — 190

What is it? — Coriolanus must I call thee? —
 But, O, thy wife!

Cor. My gracious silence, hail!

Wouldst thou have laugh'd had I come coffin'd home,

That wew'st to see me triumph? Ah, my dear,

Such eyes the widows in Corioli wear, 195

And mothers that lack sons.

Men. Now, the gods crown thee!

Cor. And live you yet? [To Valeria.] O my sweet lady, pardon.

Vol. I know not where to turn. O, welcome home;

And welcome, general; and you're welcome all.

Men. A hundred thousand welcomes! I could weep 200

And I could laugh, I am light and heavy.
 Welcome!

A curse begin at very root on 's heart,
 That is not glad to see thee! You are three

That Rome should dote on; yet, by the faith
 of men,

We have some old crab-trees here at home that
 will not 205

Be grafted to your relish. Yet welcome, warriors;

We call a nettle but a nettle and
 The faults of fools but folly.

Com. Ever right.

Cor. Menenius ever, ever.

Her. Give way there, and go on!

Cor. [To Volumnia and Virgilia.] Your hand, and yours. 210

Ere in our own house I do shade my head,
 The good patricians must be visited;

From whom I have receiv'd not only greetings,

But with them change of honours.

Vol. I have lived

To see inherited my very wishes 215
 And the buildings of my fancy; only

There's one thing wanting, which I doubt not but

Our Rome will cast upon thee.

Cor. Know, good mother, I had rather be their servant in my way Than sway with them in theirs.

Com. On, to the Capitol!
[Flourish. Cornets. Exeunt in state, as before. Brutus and Sicinius come forward.]

Bru. All tongues speak of him, and the bleared sights
Are spectacted to see him. Your prattling nurse

Into a rapture lets her baby cry While she chats him; the kitchen Malkin pins Her richest lockram 'bout her reechy neck, Clamb'ring the walls to eye him; stalls, bulks, windows,
Are smother'd up, leads fill'd, and ridges hors'd

With variable complexions, all agreeing In earnestness to see him. Seld-shown flamens Do press among the popular throngs and puff To win a vulgar station; our veil'd dames Commit the war of white and damask in Their nicely-gawded cheeks to the wanton spoil

Of Phœbus' burning kisses; — such a pother As if that whatsoever god who leads him Were silly crept into his human powers And gave him graceful posture.

Sic. On the sudden, I warrant him consul.

Bru. Then our office may, During his power, go sleep.

Sic. He cannot temperately transport his honours

From where he should begin and end, but will Lose those he hath won.

Bru. In that there's comfort.

Sic. Doubt not

The commoners, for whom we stand, but they Upon their ancient malice will forget

With the least cause these his new honours, which

That he will give them make I as little question

As he is proud to do 't.

Bru. I heard him swear, Were he to stand for consul, never would he Appear i' the market-place, nor on him put The napless vesture of humility, Nor, showing, as the manner is, his wounds To the people, beg their stinking breaths.

Sic. 'T is right.

Bru. It was his word. O, he would miss it rather Than carry it but by the suit of the gentry to him

And the desire of the nobles.

Sic. I wish no better Than have him hold that purpose and to put it In execution.

Bru. 'T is most like he will.

Sic. It shall be to him then as our good wills, A sure destruction.

Bru. So it must fall out To him or our authorities for an end. We must suggest the people in what hatred He still hath held them; that to 's power he would Have made them mules, silenc'd their pleaders and Disproportioned their freedoms, holding them, In human action and capacity, Of no more soul nor fitness for the world Than camels in the war, who have their provand

Only for bearing burdens, and sore blows For sinking under them.

Sic. This, as you say, suggested At some time when his soaring insolence Shall touch the people — which time shall not want,

If he be put upon 't; and that 's as easy As to set dogs on sheep — will be his fire To kindle their dry stubble; and their blaze Shall darken him for ever.

Enter a MESSENGER.

Bru. What 's the matter?
Mess. You are sent for to the Capitol. 'T is thought

That Marcius shall be consul. I have seen the dumb men throng to see him, and

The blind to hear him speak. Matrons flung gloves,

Ladies and maids their scarfs and handkerchers,

Upon him as he pass'd; the nobles bended, As to Jove's statue, and the commons made

A shower and thunder with their caps and shouts.

I never saw the like.

Bru. Let 's to the Capitol; And carry with us ears and eyes for the time, But hearts for the event.

Sic. Have with you.
[Exeunt.]

[SCENE II. The same.] The Capitol.

Enter two OFFICERS, to lay cushions.

1. Off. Come, come, they are almost here. How many stand for consulships?

2. Off. Three, they say; but 't is thought of every one Coriolanus will carry it.

1. Off. That 's a brave fellow; but he 's vengeance proud, and loves not the common people.

2. Off. Faith, there hath been many great men that have flatter'd the people, who ne'er loved them; and there be many that they have loved, they know not wherefore; so that, if they love they know not why, they hate upon no better a ground. Therefore, for Coriolanus neither to care whether they love or hate him manifests the true knowledge he has in their disposition; and out of his noble carelessness lets them plainly see 't.

1. Off. If he did not care whether he had their love or no, he waded indifferently 'twixt doing them neither good nor harm; but he seeks their hate with greater devotion than they can render it him; and leaves nothing ⁵¹ undone that may fully discover him their opposite. Now, to seem to affect the malice and displeasure of the people is as bad as that which he dislikes, to flatter them for their love. ⁵⁰

2. Off. He hath deserved worthily of his country; and his ascent is not by such easy degrees as those who, having been supple and courteous to the people, bonneted, without any further deed to have them at all into their ⁵¹ estimation and report. But he hath so planted his honours in their eyes, and his actions in their hearts, that for their tongues to be silent, and not confess so much, were a kind of ingrateful injury; to report otherwise were a ⁵² malice, that, giving itself the lie, would pluck reproof and rebuke from every ear that heard it.

1. Off. No more of him; he's a worthy man. Make way, they are coming. ⁴⁰

A sennet. Enter, with Lictors before them, COMINIUS the consul, MENENIUS, CORIOLANUS, SENATORS, SICINIUS and BRUTUS. The Senators take their places; the Tribunes take their places by themselves. Coriolanus stands.

Men. Having determin'd of the Volsces and To send for Titus Lartius, it remains, As the main point of this our after-meeting, To gratify his noble service that Hath thus stood for his country; therefore, please you, ⁴⁵

Most reverend and grave elders, to desire The present consul and last general In our well-found successes, to report A little of that worthy work perform'd By Caius Marcins Coriolanus, whom ⁵⁰ We met here both to thank and to remember With honours like himself. [Coriolanus sits.]

1. Sen. Speak, good Cominius: Leave nothing out for length, and make us think

Rather our state's defective for requital Than we to stretch it out. [To the Tribunes.]

Masters of the people, ⁵⁵ We do request your kindest ears, and after, Your loving motion toward the common body To yield what passes here.

Sic. We are convented Upon a pleasing treaty, and have hearts Inclinable to honour and advance ⁶⁰ The theme of our assembly.

Bru. Which the rather We shall be blest to do, if he remember A kinder value of the people than He hath hereto priz'd them at.

Men. That's off, that's off; I would you rather had been silent. Please you ⁶⁵

To hear Cominius speak?

Bru. Most willingly; But yet my caution was more pertinent Than the rebuke you give it.

Men. He loves your people;

But tie him not to be their bedfellow.

Worthy Cominius, speak. [Coriolanus rises and offers to go away.] Nay, keep your place. ⁷⁰

1. Sen. Sit, Coriolanus; never shame to hear What you have nobly done.

Cor. Your honours' pardon; I had rather have my wounds to heal again Than hear say how I got them. ⁷⁵

Bru. Sir, I hope My words disbench'd you not.

Cor. No, sir; yet off, When blows have made me stay, I fled from words. ⁷⁸

You sooth'd not, therefore hurt not; but your people,

I love them as they weigh.

Men. Pray now, sit down.

Cor. I had rather have one scratch my head i' the sun

When the alarum were struck, than idly sit ⁸⁰ To hear my nothings monster'd. [Exit.]

Men. Masters of the people, Your multiplying spawn how can he flatter — That's thousand to one good one — when you now see

He had rather venture all his limbs for honour Than one on's ears to hear it? Proceed, Cominius. ⁸⁵

Com. I shall lack voice; the deeds of Coriolanus

Should not be utter'd feebly. It is held That valour is the chiefest virtue, and Most dignifies the haver; if it be,

The man I speak of cannot in the world ⁹⁰ Be singly counterpois'd. At sixteen years, When Tarquin made a head for Rome, he fought

Beyond the mark of others. Our then dictator, Whom with all praise I point at, saw him fight, When with his Amazonian chin he drove ⁹⁵ The bristled lips before him. He bestrid An o'er-press'd Roman, and i' the consul's view Slew three opposers. Tarquin's self he met, And struck him on his knee. In that day's feats,

When he might act the woman in the scene, ¹⁰⁰ He prov'd best man i' the field, and for his deed

Was brow-bound with the oak. His pupil age Man-ent'red thus, he waxed like a sea, And in the brunt of seventeen battles since He lurch'd all swords of the garland. For this last, ¹⁰⁵

Before and in Corioli, let me say, I cannot speak him home. He stopp'd the fliers;

And by his rare example made the coward Turn terror into sport; as weeds before A vessel under sail, so men obey'd ¹¹⁰ And fell below his stem. His sword, death's stamp,

Where it did mark, it took; from face to foot He was a thing of blood, whose every motion Was tim'd with dying cries. Alone he ent'red The mortal gate of the city, which he painted ¹¹⁵ With shunless destiny; aidless came off,

Men. O sir, you are not right. Have you not known
The worthiest men have done 't?

Cor. What must I say?
*I pray, sir, — Plague upon 't! I cannot bring*⁶⁶
My tongue to such a pace, — look, sir, my wounds!

I got them in my country's service, when
Some certain of your brethren roar'd and ran
From the noise of our own drums.

Men. O me, the gods!
You must not speak of that. You must desire them⁶¹

To think upon you.

Cor. Think upon me! Hang 'em!
I would they would forget me, like the virtues
Which our divines lose by 'em.

Men. You'll mar all.
I'll leave you. Pray you, speak to 'em, I pray
*you,*⁶⁵
In wholesome manner. [Erit.

Re-enter three of the CITIZENS.

Cor. Bid them wash their faces
And keep their teeth clean. So, here comes a brace. —

You know the cause, sir, of my standing here.
3. Cit. We do, sir; tell us what hath brought you to 't.⁷⁰

Cor. Mine own desert.

2. Cit. Your own desert!

Cor. Ay, not mine own desire.

3. Cit. How not your own desire?

Cor. No, sir, 'twas never my desire yet to trouble the poor with begging.⁷⁶

3. Cit. You must think, if we give you anything, we hope to gain by you.

Cor. Well then, I pray, your price o' the consulship?⁸⁰

1. Cit. The price is to ask it kindly.

Cor. Kindly! Sir, I pray, let me ha' t. I have wounds to show you, which shall be yours in private. Your good voice, sir; what say
you?

2. Cit. You shall ha' it, worthy sir.⁸⁵

Cor. A match, sir. There's in all two worthy voices begg'd. I have your alms; adieu.

3. Cit. But this is something odd.

2. Cit. An't were to give again, — but 't is no matter. [*Exeunt [the three Citizens].*⁹⁰

Re-enter two other CITIZENS.

Cor. Pray you now, if it may stand with the tune of your voices that I may be consul, I have here the customary gown.

[4. Cit. You have deserved nobly of your country, and you have not deserved nobly.⁹⁵

Cor. Your enigma?

[4. Cit. You have been a scourge to her enemies, you have been a rod to her friends; you have not indeed loved the common people.⁹⁹

Cor. You should account me the more virtuous that I have not been common in my love.
I will, sir, flatter my sworn brother, the people, to earn a dearer estimation of them; 't is a wisdom they account gentle. And since the wisdom of their choice is rather to have my hat [¹⁰⁵ than my heart, I will practise the insinuating nod and be off to them most counterfeitedly; that is, sir, I will counterfeit the bewitchment of some popular man and give it bountiful to the desirers. Therefore, beseech you, I may be consul.¹¹⁰

[5. Cit. We hope to find you our friend; and therefore give you our voices heartily.

[4. Cit. You have received many wounds for your country.¹¹⁴

Cor. I will not seal your knowledge with showing them. I will make much of your voices, and so trouble you no further.

Both Cit. The gods give you joy, sir, heartily!
[Exeunt.]

Cor. Most sweet voices!

Better it is to die, better to starve,¹²⁰
Than crave the hire which first we do deserve.
Why in this woolless toge should I stand here,
To beg of Hob and Dick, that do appear,
Their needless vouchers? Custom calls me to 't.
What custom wills, in all things should we do 't.
The dust on antique time would lie unswept,¹²⁵
And mountainous error be too highly heapt
For truth to o'er-peer. Rather than fool it so,
Let the high office and the honour go
To one that would do thus. — I am half through;¹³⁰
The one part suffered, the other will I do.

Re-enter three CITIZENS more.

Here come more voices. —

Your voices! For your voices I have fought;
Watch'd for your voices; for your voices bear
Of wounds two dozen odd; battles thrice six¹³⁵
I have seen and heard of; for your voices have Done many things, some less, some more. Your voices.

Indeed, I would be consul.

[6. Cit. He has done nobly, and cannot go without any honest man's voice.¹⁴⁰

[7. Cit. Therefore let him be consul. The gods give him joy, and make him good friend to the people!

All Cit. Amen, amen. God save thee, noble consul! [Exeunt.]¹⁴⁵

Cor. Worthy voices!

Re-enter MENENIUS, with BRUTUS and Si-CINIUS.

Men. You have stood your limitation, and the tribunes

Endue you with the people's voice. Remains
That, in the official marks invested, you
Anon do meet the Senate.

Cor. Is this done?

Sic. The custom of request you have dis-charg'd.¹⁵⁰

The people do admit you, and are summon'd
To meet anon upon your approbation.

Cor. Where? At the Senate-house?

Sic. There, Coriolanus.

Cor. May I change these garments?

Sic. You may, sir.

Cor. That I'll straight do; and, knowing myself again,
Repair to the Senate-house.¹⁵⁵

Men. I'll keep you company. Will you along?

Bru. We stay here for the people.

Sic. Fare you well.

[Ereunt Coriolanus and Menenius.]

He has it now, and by his looks methinks

'T is warm at 's heart. 160

Bru. With a proud heart he wore his humble weeds.

Will you dismiss the people?

Re-enter CITIZENS.

Sic. How now, my masters! have you chose this man?

1. Cit. He has our voices, sir.

Bru. We pray the gods he may deserve your loves. 165

2. Cit. Amen, sir. To my poor unworthy notice,

He mock'd us when he begg'd our voices.

3. Cit. Certainly

He flouted us downright.

1. Cit. No, 't is his kind of speech; he did not mock us.

2. Cit. Not one amongst us, save yourself, but says 170

He us'd us scornfully. He should have show'd

His marks of merit, wounds receiv'd for 's country.

Sic. Why, so he did, I am sure.

All. No, no; no man saw 'em.

3. Cit. He said he had wounds, which he could show in private;

And with his hat, thus waving it in scorn, 175

"I would be consul," says he; "aged custom, But by your voices, will not so permit me;

Your voices therefore." When we granted that, Here was "I thank you for your voices; thank

you;

Your most sweet voices. Now you have left your voices, 180

I have no further with you." Was not this mockery?

Sic. Why either were you ignorant to see 't, Or, seeing it, of such childish friendliness

To yield your voices?

Bru. Could you not have told him As you were lesson'd: when he had no power,

But was a petty servant to the state, 186

He was your enemy, ever spake against Your liberties and the charters that you bear

I' the body of the weal; and now, arriving

A place of potency and sway o' the state, 190

If he should still malignantly remain

Fast foe to the plebeii, your voices might

Be curses to yourselves? You should have said

That as his worthy deeds did claim no less

Than what he stood for, so his gracious nature

Would think upon you for your voices and 196

Translate his malice towards you into love,

Standing your friendly lord.

Sic. Thus to have said,

As you were fore-advis'd, had touch'd his spirit

And tried his inclination; from him pluck'd 200

Either his gracious promise, which you might,

As cause had call'd you up, have held him to;

Or else it would have gall'd his surly nature, Which easily endures not article

Tying him to aught; so putting him to rage, 208

You should have ta'en the advantage of his choler

And pass'd him unelected.

Bru. Did you perceive

He did solicit you in free contempt

When he did need your loves, and do you think

That his contempt shall not be bruising to you, 210

When he hath power to crush? Why, had your bodies

No heart among you? Or had you tongues to cry

Against the rectorship of judgement?

Sic. Have you

Ere now deni'd the asker, and now again

Of him that did not ask, but mock, bestow 215

Your sned-for tongues?

3. Cit. He 's not confirm'd; we may deny him yet.

2. Cit. And will deny him.

I'll have five hundred voices of that sound.

1. Cit. I twice five hundred and their friends to piece 'em. 220

Bru. Get you hence instantly, and tell those friends,

They have chose a consul that will from them take

Their liberties, make them of no more voice

Than dogs, that are as often beat for barking

As therefore kept to do so.

Sic. Let them assemble,

And on a safer judgement all revoke 225

Your ignorant election. Enforce his pride,

And his old hate unto you; besides, forget not

With what contempt he wore the humble weed,

How in his suit he scorn'd you; but your

loves, 230

Thinking upon his services, took from you

The apprehension of his present portance,

Which most gibingly, ungravely, he did fashion

After the inveterate hate he bears you.

Bru. Lay

A fault on us, your tribunes, that we la-

bour'd, 235

No impediment between, but that you must

Cast your election on him.

Sic. Say, you chose him

More after our commandment than as guided

By your own true affections, and that your

minds,

Pre-occupi'd with what you rather must do 240

Than what you should, made you against the grain

To voice him consul. Lay the fault on us.

Bru. Ay, spare us not. Say we read lectures to you,

How youngly he began to serve his country,

How long continued, and what stock he springs of, — 245

The noble house o' the Marcians, from whence came

That Ancus Marcius, Numa's daughter's son,

Who, after great Hostilius, here was king;

Of the same house Publius and Quintus were,

That our best water brought by conduits
hither; 250
[And Censorinus, nobly named so,
Twice being by the people chosen censor.]
Was his great ancestor.

Sic. One thus descended,
That hath beside well in his person wrought 255
To be set high in place, we did commend
To your remembrances; but you have found,
Sealing his present bearing with his past,
That he's your fixed enemy, and revoke
Your sudden approbation.

Bru. Say, you ne'er had done 't —
Harp on that still — but by our putting on; 260
And presently, when you have drawn your number,

Repair to the Capitol.

All. We will so. Almost all
Repent in their election. [Exeunt Citizens.]

Bru. Let them go on;
This mutiny were better put in hazard, 265
Than stay, past doubt, for greater.
If, as his nature is, he fall in rage
With their refusal, both observe and answer
The vantage of his anger.

Sic. To the Capitol, come.
We will be there before the stream o' the
people;
And this shall seem, as partly 't is, their 270
own,
Which we have goaded onward. [Exeunt.]

ACT III

[SCENE I. Rome. A street.]

Cornets. Enter CORIOLANUS, MENENIUS, all the Gentry, COMINIUS, TITUS LARTIUS, and other SENATORS.

Cor. Tullus Aufidius then had made new head?

Lart. He had, my lord; and that it was which caus'd

Our swifter composition.

Cor. So then the Volscies stand but as at first,
Ready, when time shall prompt them, to make 275 road

Upon's again.

Com. They are worn, Lord Consul, so,
That we shall hardly in our ages see
Their banners wave again.

Cor. Saw you Aufidius?

Lart. On safe-guard he came to me, and did curse

Against the Volscies, for they had so vilely 280
Yielded the town. He is retired to Antium.

Cor. Spoke he of me?

Lart. He did, my lord.

Cor. How? What?

Lart. How often he had met you, sword to
sword;

That of all things upon the earth he hated
Your person most; that he would pawn his fortunes 285

To hopeless restitution, so he might

Be call'd your vanquisher.

Cor. At Antium lives he?

Lart. At Antium.

Cor. I wish I had a cause to seek him there,
To oppose his hatred fully. Welcome home. 290

Enter SICINIUS and BRUTUS.

Behold, these are the tribesmen of the people,
The tongues o' the common mouth. I do despise them,

For they do prank them in authority,
Against all noble sufferance.

Sic. Pass no further.

Cor. Ha! what is that? 295

Bru. It will be dangerous to go on. No further.

Cor. What makes this change?

Men. The matter?

Com. Hath he not pass'd the noble and the common?

Bru. Cominius, no.

Cor. Have I had children's voices?

[I.] Sen. Tribunes, give way; he shall to the market-place. 300

Bru. The people are incens'd against him.

Sic. Stop,

Or all will fall in broil.

Cor. Are these your herd?

Must these have voices, that can yield them
now

And straight disclaim their tongues? What are your offices? 305

You being their mouths, why rule you not their teeth?

Have you not set them on?

Men. Be calm, be calm.

Cor. It is a purpos'd thing, and grows by plot,

To curb the will of the nobility.

Suffer 't, and live with such as cannot rule 310
Nor ever will be ruled.

Bru. Call 't not a plot.

The people cry you mock'd them, and of late,
When corn was given them gratis, you repin'd,
Scandal'd the suppliants for the people, call'd
them

Time-pleasers, flatterers, foes to nobleness. 315

Cor. Why, this was known before.

Bru. Not to them all.

Cor. Have you inform'd them sithence?

Bru. How! I inform them!

Com. You are like to do such business.

Bru. Not unlike,

Each way, to better yours.

Cor. Why then should I be consul? By yond clouds, 320

Let me deserve so ill as you, and make me
Your fellow tribune.

Sic. You show too much of that
For which the people stir. If you will pass

To where you are bound, you must inquire your
way,

Which you are out of, with a gentler spirit, 325
Or never be so noble as a consul,

Nor yoke with him for tribune.

Men. Let's be calm.

Com. The people are abus'd; set on. This palt'ring

Becomes not Rome, nor has Coriolanus
Deserv'd this so dishonour'd rub, laid falsely 60
I' the plain way of his merit.

Cor. Tell me of corn!
This was my speech, and I will speak 't again —
Men. Not now, not now.

[L.] Sen. Not in this heat, sir, now.

Cor. Now, as I live, I will. My nobler
friends,

I crave their pardons; 65
For the mutable, rank-scented many, let them Regard me as I do not flatter, and Therein behold themselves. I say again,
In soothing them we nourish 'gainst our Senate
The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition, 70
Which we ourselves have plough'd for, sow'd,
and scatter'd,

By mingling them with us, the honour'd number,

Who lack not virtue, no, nor power, but that
Which they have given to beggars.

Men. Well, no more.

[L.] Sen. No more words, we beseech you.

Cor. How I no more!
As for my country I have shed my blood, 75
Not fearing outward force, so shall my lungs Coin words till their decay against those measles,

Which we disdain should tetter us, yet sought
The very way to catch them.

Bru. You speak o' the people
As if you were a god to punish, not 81
A man of their infirmity.

Sic. 'T were well

We let the people know 't.

Men. What, what? his choler?

Cor. Choler!

Were I as patient as the midnight sleep, 85
By Jove, 't would be my mind!

Sic. It is a mind
That shall remain a poison where it is,
Not poison any further.

Cor. Shall remain!
Hear you this Triton of the minnows? Mark
you

His absolute "shall"?

Com. 'T was from the canon.

Cor. "Shall"!

O good but most unwise patricians! why, 91
You grave but reckless senators, have you thus Given Hydra here to choose an officer,
That with his peremptory "shall," being but
The horn and noise o' the monster's, wants not 95 spirit

To say he 'll turn your current in a ditch,
And make your channel his? If he have power,
Then val your ignorance; if none, awake
Your dangerous lenity. If you are learn'd,
Be not as common fools; if you are not, 100
Let them have cushions by you. You are plebeians,

If they be senators; and they are no less,
When, both your voices blended, the great'st taste

Most palates theirs. They choose their magistrate,

And such a one as he, who puts his "shall," 106

His popular "shall," against a graver bench
Than ever frown'd in Greece. By Jove himself!

It makes the consuls base; and my soul aches
To know, when two authorities are up,
Neither supreme, how soon confusion 110
May enter 'twixt the gap of both and take
The one by the other.

Com. Well, on to the market-place.
Cor. Whoever gave that counsel, to give
forth

The corn o' the storehouse gratis, as 't was us'd
Sometime in Greece, —

Men. Well, well, no more of that.

Cor. Though there the people had more absolute power, 116

I say, they nourish'd disobedience, fed
The ruin of the state.

Bru. Why, shall the people give
One that speaks thus their voice?

Cor. I 'll give my reasons,
More worthier than their voices. They know the corn 120

Was not our recompense, resting well assur'd
That ne'er did service for 't; being press'd to
the war.

Even when the navel of the state was touch'd,
They would not thread the gates. This kind of service 124

Did not deserve corn gratis. Being i' the war,
Their mutinies and revolts, wherein they show'd
Most valour, spoke not for them. The accusation

Which they have often made against the Senate,
All cause unborn, could never be the motive
Of our so frank donation. Well, what then? 130
How shall this bisson multitude digest
The Senate's courtesy? Let deeds express What 's like to be their words: "We did request it;

We are the greater poll, and in true fear 134
They gave us our demands." Thus we debase
The nature of our seats and make the rabble
Call our cares fears; which will in time
Break open the locks o' the Senate and bring in
The crows to peck the eagles.

Men. Come, enough.

Bru. Enough, with over-measure.

Cor. No, take more!
What may be sworn by, both divine and human, 141

Seal what I end withal! This double worship, Where one part does disdain with cause, the
other

Insult without all reason, where gentry, title, wisdom,

Cannot conclude but by the yea and no 145
Of general ignorance, — it must omit
Real necessities, and give way the while
To unstable slightness; purpose so barr'd, it falls

Nothing is done to purpose. Therefore, beseech
you, —

You that will be less fearful than discreet, 150
That love the fundamental part of state
More than you doubt the change on 't, that prefer

A noble life before a long, and wish
To jump a body with a dangerous physic
That 's sure of death without it, at once pluck
out 155

The multitudinous tongue; let them not lick
The sweet which is their poison. Your dishonour

Mangles true judgement and bereaves the state
Of that integrity which should become 't, 159
Not having the power to do the good it would,
For the ill which doth control 't.

Bru. Has said enough.

Sic. Has spoken like a traitor, and shall answer

As traitors do.

Cor. Thou wretch, despite o'erwhelm thee!
What should the people do with these bald
tribunes? 165

On whom depending, their obedience fails
To the greater bench. In a rebellion, When what 's not meet, but what must be, was law,

Then were they chosen; in a better hour,
Let what is meet be said it must be meet, 170
And throw their power i' the dust.

Bru. Manifest treason!

Sic. This a consul? No!

Bru. The ædiles, ho!

Enter an Ædile.

— Let him be apprehended.

Sic. Go, call the people; [Exit Ædile] in whose name myself

Attach thee as a traitorous innovator, 175
A foe to the public weal. Obey, I charge
thee,

And follow to thine answer.

Cor. Hence, old goat!
[Senators, etc.] We 'll surely him.

Com. Ag'd sir, hands off.

Cor. Hence, rotten thing! or I shall shake thy bones

Out of thy garments.

Sic. Help, ye citizens! 180

Enter a rabble of CITIZENS, with the ÆDILES.

Men. On both sides more respect.

Sic. Here 's he that would take from you all your power.

Bru. Seize him, ædiles!

[Citizens.] Down with him! down with him!

2. Sen. Weapons, weapons, weapons! 185

[*They all bustle about Coriolanus
[crying.]*]

Tribunes! Patricians! Citizens! What, ho!

Sicinius! Brutus! Coriolanus! Citizens!

All. Peace, peace, peace! Stay, hold, peace!

Men. What is about to be? I am out of
breath;

Confusion 's near; I cannot speak. You, tribunes 190

To the people! Coriolanus, patience!

Speak, good Sicinius.

Sic. Hear me, people; peace!

[Citizens.] Let 's hear our tribune; peace!

Speak, speak, speak!

Sic. You are at point to lose your liberties.

Marcus would have all from you; Marcius, 195
Whom late you have nam'd for consul.

Men. Fie, fie, fie!

This is the way to kindle, not to quench.

[1.] Sen. To unbuild the city and to lay all flat.

Sic. What is the city but the people?

[Citizens.] True, 200

The people are the city.

Bru. By the consent of all, we were estab-lish'd

The people's magistrates.

[Citizens.] You so remain.

Men. And so are like to do.

Com. That is the way to lay the city flat,
To bring the roof to the foundation 205

And bury all, which yet distinctly ranges,
In heaps and piles of ruin.

Sic. This deserves death.

Bru. Or let us stand to our authority,
Or let us lose it. We do here pronounce,

Upon the part o' the people, in whose power 210
We were elected theirs, Marcius is worthy
Of present death.

Sic. Therefore lay hold of him;
Bear him to the rock Tarpeian, and from thence

Into destruction cast him.

Bru. Ædiles, seize him!

[Citizens.] Yield, Marcius, yield!

Men. Hear me one word;

Beseech you, tribunes, hear me but a word. 215
Æd. Peace, peace!

Men. [To Brutus.] Be that you seem, truly
your country's friend,

And temperately proceed to what you would Thus violently redress.

Bru. Sir, those cold ways 220
That seem like prudent helps are very poisonous

Where the disease is violent. Lay hands upon
him,

And bear him to the rock.

Cor. No, I 'll die here.
[Drawing his sword.]

There 's some among you have beheld me fight-
ing;

Come, try upon yourselves what you have seen
me. 225

Men. Down with that sword! Tribunes, withdraw a while.

Bru. Lay hands upon him.

Com. Help Marcius, help;

You that be noble, help him, young and old!
[Citizens.] Down with him, down with him!

[In this mutiny, the Tribunes, the Ædiles, and the People, are beat in.]

Men. Go, get you to your house; begone, away! 230

All will be nought else.

2. Sen. Get you gone.

Com. Stand fast;

We have as many friends as enemies.

Men. Shall it be put to that?

[1.] Sen. The gods forbid!

I prithee, noble friend, home to thy house;
Leave us to cure this cause.

Men. For 't is a sore upon us,
You cannot tent yourself. Begone, beseech
you.

Com. Come, sir, along with us.

Cor. I would they were barbarians — as they are,
Though in Rome litter'd — not Romans — as they are not,

Though calved i' the porch o' the Capitol!

[Men.] Begone!
Put not your worthy rage into your tongue; ²⁴¹
One time will owe another.

Cor. On fair ground
I could beat forty of them.

Men. I could myself
Take up a brace of the best of them; yea, the two tribunes.

Com. But now 't is odds beyond arithmetic;
And manhood is call'd foolery, when it stands ²⁴⁶
Against a falling fabric. Will you hence
Before the tag return, whose rage doth rend
Like interrupted waters, and o'erbear
What they are us'd to bear?

Men. Pray you, begone.
I'll try whether my old wit be in request ²⁵¹
With those that have but little. This must be patch'd

With cloth of any colour.

Com. Nay, come away.
[Exeunt Coriolanus, Cominius (and others).]

A Patrician. This man has marr'd his fortune.

Men. His nature is too noble for the world; ²⁵⁵
He would not flatter Neptune for his trident,
Or Jove for 's power to thunder. His heart 's his mouth;

What his breast forges, that his tongue must vent;

And, being angry, does forget that ever ²⁵⁹
He heard the name of death. [A noise within.]
Here 's goodly work!

A Patrician. I would they were a-bed!
Men. I would they were in Tiber! What the vengeance!

Could he not speak 'em fair?

Re-enter BRUTUS and SICINIUS, with the rabble.

Sic. Where is this viper
That would depopulate the city and
Be every man himself?

Men. You worthy tribunes, —

Sic. He shall be thrown down the Tarpeian rock ²⁶⁰

With rigorous hands. He hath resisted law,
And therefore law shall scorn him further trial
Than the severity of the public power
Which he so sets at nought.

J. Cit. He shall well know
The noble tribunes are the people's mouths, ²⁷¹
And we their hands.

[Citizens.] He shall, sure on 't.

Men. Sir, sir, —

Sic. Peace!

Men. Do not cry havoc, where you should but hunt ²⁷⁵
With modest warrant.

Sic. Sir, how comes 't that you
Have help to make this rescue?

Men. Hear me speak.
As I do know the consul's worthiness,
So can I name his faults, —

Sic. Consul! what consul?

Men. The consul Coriolanus.

Bru. He consul! ²⁸⁰

[Citizens.] No, no, no, no, no.

Men. If, by the tribunes' leave, and yours,
good people,

I may be heard, I would crave a word or two;
The which shall turn you to no further harm
Than so much loss of time.

Sic. Speak briefly then;

For we are peremptory to dispatch ²⁸⁵
This viperous traitor. To eject him hence
Were but one danger, and to keep him here
Our certain death; therefore it is decreed
He dies to-night.

Men. Now the good gods forbid ²⁹⁰
That our renowned Rome, whose gratitude
Towards her deserved children is enroll'd
In Jove's own book, like an unnatural dam
Should now eat up her own! ²⁹⁴

Sic. He 's a disease that must be cut away.

Men. O, he 's a limb that has but a disease;
Mortal, to cut it off; to cure it, easy.

What has he done to Rome that 's worthy death?
Killing our enemies, the blood he hath lost —

Which, I dare vouch, is more than that he hath, ³⁰⁰

By many an ounce — he dropp'd it for his country;

And what is left, to lose it by his country
Were to us all that do 't and suffer it
A brand to the end o' the world.

Sic. This is clean kam.

Bru. Merely awry. When he did love his country, ³⁰⁵

It honour'd him.

Men. The service of the foot
Being once gangren'd, is not then respected
For what before it was, —

Bru. We 'll hear no more.
Pursue him to his house and pluck him thence,
Lest his infection, being of catching nature, ³¹⁰
Spread further.

Men. One word more, one word.
This tiger-footed rage, when it shall find
The harm of unscann'd swiftness, will too late
Tie leaden pounds to 's heels. Proceed by process,

Lest parties, as he is below'd, break out; ³¹⁵
And sack great Rome with Romans.

Bru. If it were so, —

Sic. What do ye talk?

Have we not had a taste of his obedience?
Our adiles smote? ourselves resisted? Come.

Men. Consider this: he has been bred i' the wars ³²⁰

Since 'a could draw a sword, and is ill school'd
In bolted language; meal and bran together
He throws without distinction. Give me leave;
I 'll go to him, and undertake to bring him
Where he shall answer, by a lawful form, ³²⁵
In peace, to his utmost peril.

I. Sen. Noble tribunes,
It is the humane way. The other course
Will prove too bloody, and the end of it
Unknown to the beginning.

Sic. Noble Menenius,
Be you then as the people's officer. 330
Masters, lay down your weapons.

Bru. Go not home.

Sic. Meet on the market-place. We'll attend you there;

Where, if you bring not Marcius, we'll proceed
In our first way.

Men. I'll bring him to you.
[To the Senators.] Let me desire your company.

He must come, 335
Or what is worst will follow.

[I. Sen. Pray you, let's to him.
[Ereunt.

[SCENE II. A room in Coriolanus's house.]

Enter CORIOLANUS, with NOBLES.

Cor. Let them pull all about mine ears, present me

Death on the wheel or at wild horses' heels,
Or pile ten hills on the Tarpeian rock,
That the precipitation might down stretch
Below the beam of sight, yet will I still
Be thus to them.

Enter VOLUMNIA.

Noble. You do the nobler.

Cor. I muse my mother
Does not approve me further, who was wont
To call them woollen vassals, things created
To buy and sell with groats, to show bare heads
In congregations, to yawn, be still and wonder,

When one but of my ordinance stood up
To speak of peace or war. — I talk of you.

[To Vol.]
Why did you wish me milder? Would you have me

False to my nature? Rather say I play 15
The man I am.

Vol. O, sir, sir, sir,
I would have had you put your power well on,
Before you had worn it out.

Cor. Let go.
Vol. You might have been enough the man you are,

With striving less to be so. Lesser had been 20
The thwartings of your dispositions, if
You had not show'd them how ye were dispos'd,
Ere they lack'd power to cross you.

Cor. Let them hang!
Vol. Ay, and burn too.

Enter MENENIUS with the SENATORS.

Men. Come, come, you have been too rough,
something too rough; 25

You must return and mend it.

[I. Sen. There's no remedy;
Unless, by not so doing, our good city
Cleave in the midst, and perish.

Vol. Pray, be counsell'd.
I have a heart as little apt as yours,

But yet a brain that leads my use of anger 30
To better vantage.

Men. Well said, noble woman!
Before he should thus stoop to the herd, but
that

The violent fit o' the time craves it as phisic
For the whole state, I would put mine armour
on, 34

Which I can scarcely bear.

Cor. What must I do?

Men. Return to the tribunes.

Cor. Well, what then? what then?

Men. Repent what you have spoke.

Cor. For them! I cannot do it to the gods;

Must I then do 't to them?

Vol. You are too absolute;

Though therein you can never be too noble, 40
But when extremities speak. I have heard you

Honour and policy, like unsever'd friends,
I' the war do grow together. Grant that, and tell me

In peace what each of them by the other lose
That they combine not there.

Cor. Tush, tush!

Men. A good demand.

Vol. If it be honour in your wars to seem 45
The same you are not, which, for your best ends,
You adopt your policy, how is it less or worse
That it shall hold companionship in peace
With honour, as in war, since that to both 50
It stands in like request?

Cor. Why force you this?

Vol. Because that now it lies you on to speak
To the people; not by your own instruction,
Nor by the matter which your heart prompts
you,

But with such words that are but roted in 55
Your tongue, though but bastards and syllables
Of no allowance to your bosom's truth.

Now, this no more dishonours you at all

Than to take in a town with gentle words,

Which else would put you to your fortune and
The hazard of much blood. 61

I would dissemble with my nature where
My fortunes and my friends at stake requir'd
I should do so in honour. I am in this,

Your wife, your son, these senators, the nobles;

And you will rather show our general louts 65
How you can frown, than spend a fawn upon
em

For the inheritance of their loves and safeguard
Of what that want might ruin.

Men. Noble lady!

Come, go with us; speak fair. You may save 70
so,

Not what is dangerous present, but the loss
Of what is past.

Vol. I prithee now, my son,

Go to them, with this bonnet in thy hand;

And thus far having stretch'd it — here be with them —

Thy knee bussing the stones — for in such business 75

Action is eloquence, and the eyes of the ignorant

More learned than the ears — waving thy head,

Which often thus correcting thy stout heart,
Now humble as the ripest mulberry
That will not hold the handling:—or say to
them,

Thou art their soldier, and being bred in broils
Hast not the soft way which, thou dost confess,
Were fit for thee to use as they to claim,
In asking their good loves, but thou wilt frame
Thyself, forsooth, hereafter theirs, so far
As thou hast power and person.

Men. This but done,
Even as she speaks, why, their hearts were
yours;

For they have pardons, being ask'd, as free
As words to little purpose.

Vol. Prithee now,
Go, and be rul'd; although I know thou hadst
rather
Follow thine enemy in a fiery gulf
Than flatter him in a bower.

Enter COMINIUS.

Here is Cominius.

Com. I have been i' the market-place; and,
sir, 't is fit

You make strong party, or defend yourself
By calmness or by absence. All 's in anger.

Men. Only fair speech.
Com. I think 't will serve, if he
Can thereto frame his spirit.

Vol. He must, and will.
Prithee now, say you will, and go about it.

Cor. Must I go show them my unbarb'd sconce? Must I

With my base tongue give to my noble heart
A lie that it must bear? Well, I will do 't;

Yet, were there but this single plot to lose,
This mould of Marcius, they to dust should grind it

And throw 't against the wind. To the marketplace!

You have put me now to such a part which never

I shall discharge to the life.

Com. Come, come, we 'll prompt you.

Vol. I prithee now, sweet son, as thou hast said

My praises made thee first a soldier, so,
To have my praise for this, perform a part
Thou hast not done before.

Cor. Well, I must do 't.
Away, my disposition, and possess me
Some harlot's spirit! My throat of war be turn'd,

Which choir'd with my drum, into a pipe
Small as an enunch's, or the virgin voice
That babies lull asleep! The smiles of knaves Tent in my cheeks, and schoolboys' tears take up

The glasses of my sight! A beggar's tongue
Make motion through my lips, and my arm'd knees,

Who bow'd but in my stirrup, bend like his
That hath receiv'd an alms!—I will not do 't,
Lest I surcease to honour mine own truth
And by my body's action teach my mind
A most inherent baseness.

Vol. At thy choice, then.
To beg of thee, it is my more dishonour
Than thou of them. Come all to ruin! Let Thy mother rather feel thy pride than fear
Thy dangerous stoutness; for I mock at death
With as big heart as thou. Do as thou list.
Thy valiantness was mine, thou suck'dst it
from me,
But owe thy pride thyself.

Cor. Pray, be content.
Mother, I am going to the market-place;
Chide me no more. I 'll mountebank their
loves,

Cog their hearts from them, and come home
belov'd

Of all the trades in Rome. Look, I am going;
Commend me to my wife. I 'll return consul;
Or never trust to what my tongue can do
I' the way of flattery further.

Vol. Do your will.
[Exit.]

Com. Away! the tribunes do attend you.
Arm yourself

To answer mildly; for they are prepar'd
With accusations, as I hear, more strong
Than are upon you yet.

Cor. The word is "mildly." Pray you, let us go.

Let them accuse me by invention, I
Will answer in mine honour.

Men. Ay, but mildly.
Cor. Well, mildly be it then. Mildly!

[Exeunt.]

[SCENE III. The same. The Forum.]

Enter SICINIUS and BRUTUS.

Bru. In this point charge him home, that he affects

Tyrannical power. If he evade us there,
Enforce him with his envy to the people,
And that the spoil got on the Antiates
Was ne'er distributed.

Enter an ÆDILE.

What, will he come?

Æd. He 's coming.

Bru. How accompanied?

Æd. With old Menenius, and those senators
That always favour'd him.

Sic. Have you a catalogue
Of all the voices that we have procur'd
Set down by the poll?

Æd. I have; 't is ready.

Sic. Have you collected them by tribes?

Æd. I have.

Sic. Assemble presently the people hither;
And when they hear me say, "It shall be so I' the right and strength o' the commons," be it either

For death, for fine, or banishment, then let
them,

If I say fine, cry "Fine!" if death, cry
"Death!"

Insisting on the old prerogative
And power i' the truth o' the cause.

Æd. I shall inform them.

Bru. And when such time they have begun to cry,
Let them not cease, but with a din confus'd 20
Enforce the present execution
Of what we chance to sentence.

Æd. Very well.

Sic. Make them be strong and ready for this hint,
When we shall hap to give 't them.

Bru. Go about it.
[Exit Ædile.]

Put him to choler straight. He hath been us'd
Ever to conquer, and to have his worth 25
Of contradiction. Being once chaf'd, he cannot

Be rein'd again to temperance; then he speaks What's in his heart, and that is there which looks
With us to break his neck.

Enter CORIOLANUS, MENENIUS, and COMINIUS, with others [SENATORS and Patricians].

Sic. Well, here he comes.

Men. Calmly, I do beseech you.

Cor. Ay, as an ostler, that for the poorest
piece
Will bear the knave by the volume. The honour'd gods

Keep Rome in safety, and the chairs of justice
Supplied with worthy men! plant love among 's!
Throng our large temples with the shows of
peace, 30

And not our streets with war!

1. Sen. Amen, amen.

Men. A noble wish.

Re-enter ÆDILE, with CITIZENS.

Sic. Draw near, ye people.

Æd. List to your tribunes. Audience!
peace, I say! 40

Cor. First, hear me speak.

Both Tri. Well, say. Peace, ho!
Cor. Shall I be charg'd no further than this present?

Must all determine here?

Sic. I do demand

If you submit you to the people's voices,
Allow their officers, and are content 45
To suffer lawful censure for such faults
As shall be prov'd upon you?

Cor. I am content.

Men. Lo, citizens, he says he is content.

The warlike service he has done, consider;
think

Upon the wounds his body bears, which show 50
Like graves i' the holy churchyard.

Cor. Scratches with briers,
Scars to move laughter only.

Men. Consider further,

That when he speaks not like a citizen,
You find him like a soldier. Do not take
His rougher accents for malicious sounds, 55
But, as I say, such as become a soldier
Rather than envy you.

Com. Well, well, no more.

Cor. What is the matter
That being pass'd for consul with full voice,

I am so dishonour'd that the very hour
You take it off again? 60

Sic. Answer to us.

Cor. Say, then; 't is true, I ought so.

Sic. We charge you, that you have contriv'd to take

From Rome all season'd office and to wind
Yourself into a power tyrannical; 65
For which you are a traitor to the people.

Cor. How! traitor!

Men. Nay, temperately; your promise.

Cor. The fires i' the lowest hell fold in the people!

Call me their traitor! Thou injurious tribune!
Within thine eyes sat twenty thousand deaths,
In thy hands clutch'd as many millions, in 71
Thy lying tongue both numbers, I would say
"Thou liest" unto thee with a voice as free
As I do pray the gods.

Sic. Mark you this, people?

[Citizens.] To the rock, to the rock with him!

Sic. Peace!

We need not put new matter to his charge. 75
What you have seen him do and heard him
speak,

Beating your officers, cursing yourselves,
Opposing laws with strokes and here defying
Those whose great power must try him; even
this, 80

So criminal and in such capital kind,
Deserves the extremest death.

Bru. But since he hath

Serv'd well for Rome, —

Cor. What do you prate of service?

Bru. I talk of that, that know it.

Cor. You? 85

Men. Is this the promise that you made your mother?

Com. Know, I pray you, —

Cor. I'll know no further.

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death,
Vagabond exile, faying, pent to linger
But with a grain a day, I would not buy 90
Their mercy at the price of one fair word;
Nor check my courage for what they can give,
To have 't with saying "Good morrow."

Sic. For that he has,

As much as in him lies, from time to time
Envi'd against the people, seeking means 95
To pluck away their power, as now at last Given hostile strokes, and that not in the presence

Of dreaded justice, but on the ministers
That do distribute it; in the name o' the
people

And in the power of us the tribunes, we, 100
Even from this instant, banish him our city,
In peril of precipitation

From off the rock Tarpeian never more

To enter our Rome gates. I' the people's name,
I say it shall be so. 105

[Citizens.] It shall be so, it shall be so. Let him away!

He's banish'd, and it shall be so.

Com. Hear me, my masters, and my common friends, —

Sic. He's sentenc'd; no more hearing.

Com. Let me speak.
I have been consul, and can show for Rome 110
Her enemies' marks upon me. I do love
My country's good with a respect more tender,
More holy and profound, than mine own life,
My dear wife's estimate, her womb's increase
And treasure of my loins; then if I would 115 Speak that, —

Sic. We know your drift; speak what?
Bru. There's no more to be said, but he is banish'd

As enemy to the people and his country.

It shall be so.

[Citizens.] It shall be so, it shall be so.

Cor. You common cry of curs! whose breath
I hate 120

As reek o' the rotten fens, whose loves I prize
As the dead carcases of unburied men
That do corrupt my air, I banish you!
And here remain with your uncertainty!
Let every feeble rumour shake your hearts! 125
Your enemies, with nodding of their plumes, Fan you into despair! Have the power still
To banish your defenders; till at length
Your ignorance, which finds not till it feels,
Making not reservation of yourselves, 130
Still your own foes, deliver you as most Abated captives to some nation
That won you without blows! Despising,
For you, the city, thus I turn my back;
There is a world elsewhere. 135

[Exeunt Coriolanus, Cominius [Menenius, Senators, and Patricians].
*They all shout, and throw up
their caps.*

Ed. The people's enemy is gone, is gone!
[Citizens.] Our enemy is banish'd! he is gone! Hoo! hoo!

Sic. Go, see him out at gates, and follow him,
As he hath follow'd you, with all despite;
Give him deserv'd vexation. Let a guard 140
Attend us through the city.

[Citizens.] Come, come; let's see him out at gates; come.

The gods preserve our noble tribunes! Come.
[Exeunt.]

ACT IV

[SCENE I. Rome. Before a gate of the city.]

Enter CORIOLANUS, VOLUMNIA, VIRGILIA, MENENIUS, COMINIUS, with the young Nobility of Rome.

Cor. Come, leave your tears: a brief farewell. The beast

With many heads butts me away. Nay, mother,
Where is your ancient courage? You were us'd
To say extremity was the trier of spirits;
That common chances common men could bear;
That when the sea was calm all boats alike 5
Show'd mastership in floating; fortune's blows,
When most struck home, being gentle,
wounded, craves

A noble cunning. You were us'd to load me
With precepts that would make me invincible 10
The heart that conn'd them.

Vir. O heavens! O heavens!

Cor. Nay, I prithee, woman, —

Vol. Now the red pestilence strike all trades in Rome,

And occupations perish!

Cor. What, what, what!
I shall be lov'd when I am lack'd. Nay, mother, Resume that spirit, when you were wont to
say, 16

If you had been the wife of Hercules,
Six of his labours you'd have done, and sav'd
Your husband so much sweat. Cominius, Droop not; adieu. Farewell, my wife, my
mother; 20

I'll do well yet. Thou old and true Menen-ius,

Thy tears are saltier than a younger man's,
And venomous to thine eyes. My sometime general,

I have seen thee stern, and thou hast oft beheld

Heart-hard'ning spectacles; tell these sad
women 25

'Tis fond to wail inevitable strokes,
As 'tis to laugh at 'em. My mother, you wot
well

My hazards still have been your solace; and Believe 't not lightly — though I go alone,
Like to a lonely dragon, that his fen 30
Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than seen — your son

Will or exceed the common or be caught

With cautelous baits and practice.

Vol. My first son,
Whither wilt thou go? Take good Cominius
With thee a while; determine on some course,
More than a wild exposure to each chance 35
That starts i' the way before thee.

Cor. O the gods!

Com. I'll follow thee a month, devise with
thee

Where thou shalt rest, that thou mayst hear of
us

And we of thee; so if the time thrust forth 40
A cause for thy repeal, we shall not send O'er the vast world to seek a single man,
And lose advantage, which doth ever cool

I' the absence of the needer.

Cor. Fare ye well!

Thou hast years upon thee, and thou art too full
Of the wars' surfeits, to go rove with one 45 That's yet unbruised. Bring me but out at gate.

Come, my sweet wife, my dearest mother, and
My friends of noble touch, when I am forth,
Bid me farewell, and smile. I pray you, come.
While I remain above the ground, you shall 51
Hear from me still, and never of me aught
But what is like me formerly.

Men. That's worthily
As any ear can hear. Come, let's not weep.

If I could shake off but one seven years 55
From these old arms and legs, by the good
gods,

I'd with thee every foot.

Cor. Give me thy hand:
Come. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE II. The same. A street near the gate.]

Enter SICINIUS, BRUTUS, and an Ædile.

Sic. Bid them all home; he's gone, and we'll no further,

The nobility are vexed, whom we see have sided

In his behalf.

Bru. Now we have shown our power,
Let us seem humbler after it is done
Than when it was a-doing.

Sic. Bid them home. Sic. Bid them home. Sic. Bid them home.
Say their great enemy is gone, and they Stand in their ancient strength.

Bru. Dismiss them home.
[Exit Ædile.]

Here comes his mother.

Enter VOLUMNIA, VIRGILIA, and MENENIUS.

Sic. Let's not meet her.

Bru. Why?

Sic. They say she's mad.

Bru. They have ta'en note of us; keep on your way.

Vol. O, you're well met. The hoarded plague o' the gods

Require your love!

Men. Peace, peace; be not so loud.

Vol. If that I could for weeping, you should hear, —

Nay, and you shall hear some. [To Brutus.]

Will you be gone?

Vir. [To Sicinius.] You shall stay too. I would I had the power

To say so to my husband.

Sic. Are you mankind?

Vol. Ay, fool; is that a shame? Note but this fool.

Was not a man my father? Hadst thou foxship

To banish him that struck more blows for Rome

Than thou hast spoken words?

Sic. O blessed heavens!

Vol. More noble blows than ever thou wise words,

And for Rome's good. I'll tell thee what: — yet go.

Nay, but thou shalt stay too: — I would my son

Were in Arabia and thy tribe before him,

His good sword in his hand.

Sic. What then?

Vir. What then!

He'd make an end of thy posterity.

Vol. Bastards and all!

Good man, the wounds that he does bear for Rome!

Men. Come, come, peace.

Sic. I would he had continued to his country

As he began, and not unknit himself

The noble knot he made.

Bru. I would he had.

Vol. "I would he had"! 'T was you increase'd the rabble;

Cats, that can judge as fitly of his worth

As I can of those mysteries which heaven will not have earth to know.

Bru. Pray, let's go.

Vol. Now, pray, sir, get you gone;

You have done a brave deed. Ere you go, hear this:

As far as doth the Capitol exceed the meanest house in Rome, so far my son —

This lady's husband here, this, do you see? — Whom you have banish'd, does exceed you all.

Bru. Well, well, we'll leave you.

Sic. Why stay we to be baited with one that wants her wits?

[Exeunt Tribunes.]

Vol. Take my prayers with you. I would the gods had nothing else to do

But to confirm my curses! Could I meet 'em But once a-day, it would unclug my heart Of what lies heavy to 't.

Men. You have told them home; And, by my troth, you have cause. You'll sup with me?

Vol. Anger's my meat; I sup upon myself, And so shall starve with feeding. Come, let's go.

[To Virgilia.] Leave this faint puling and lament as I do,

In anger, Juno-like. Come, come, come.

[Exeunt.]

Men. Fie, fie, fie!

[Exit.]

[SCENE III. A highway between Rome and Antium.]

Enter a ROMAN and a VOLSCE [meeting].

Rom. I know you well, sir, and you know me. Your name, I think, is Adrian.

Vols. It is so, sir. Truly, I have forgot you.

Rom. I am a Roman; and my services are, as you are, against 'em. Know you me yet?

Vols. Nicanor? No.

Rom. The same, sir.

Vols. You had more beard when I last saw you; but your favour is well appear'd by your tongue. What's the news in Rome? I have a note from the Volscian state, to find you out there. You have well saved me a day's journey.

Rom. There hath been in Rome strange insurrections; the people against the senators, patricians, and nobles.

Vols. Hath been! Is it ended, then? Our state thinks not so. They are in a most warlike preparation, and hope to come upon them in the heat of their division.

Rom. The main blaze of it is past, but a small thing would make it flame again; for the nobles receive so to heart the banishment of that worthy Coriolanus, that they are in a ripe aptness to take all power from the people and to pluck from them their tribunes for ever. This lies glowing, I can tell you, and is almost mature for the violent breaking out.

Vols. Coriolanus banish'd!

Rom. Banish'd, sir.

Vols. You will be welcome with this intelligence, Nicanor.

Rom. The day serves well for them now. I have heard it said, the fittest time to corrupt a man's wife is when she's fallen out with her husband. Your noble Tullus Aufidius will appear well in these wars, his great opposer, Coriolanus, being now in no request of his country.

Vols. He cannot choose. I am most fortunate thus accidentally to encounter you. You have ended my business, and I will merrily accompany you home.

Rom. I shall, between this and supper, tell you most strange things from Rome; all tending to the good of their adversaries. Have you an army ready, say you?

Vols. A most royal one; the centurions and their charges, distinctly billeted, already in the entertainment, and to be on foot at an hour's warning.

Rom. I am joyful to hear of their readiness, and am the man, I think, that shall set them in present action. So, sir, heartily well met, and most glad of your company.

Vols. You take my part from me, sir; I have the most cause to be glad of yours.

Rom. Well, let us go together. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE IV. Antium. Before Aufidius's house.]

Enter CORIOLANUS, in mean apparel, disguis'd and muffled.

Cor. A goodly city is this Antium. City, 'Tis I that made thy widows; many an heir Of these fair edifices 'fore my wars Have I heard groan and drop. Then know-me

not,
Lest that thy wives with spits and boys with stones
In puny battle slay me.

Enter a CITIZEN.

Save you, sir.

Cit. And you.

Cor. Direct me, if it be your will, Where great Aufidius lies. Is he in Antium?

Cit. He is, and feasts the nobles of the state At his house this night.

Cor. Which is his house, beseech you?

Cit. This, here before you.

Cor. Thank you, sir; farewell.

[Exit Citizen.]

O world, thy slippery turns! Friends now fast sworn,

Whose double bosoms seem to wear one heart,
Whose hours, whose bed, whose meal and exercise

Are still together, who twin, as 't were, in love
Unseparable, shall within this hour,

On a dissension of a doit, break out

To bitterest enmity; so, fellest foes,
Whose passions and whose plots have broke their sleep

To take the one the other, by some chance,

Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear friends
And interjoin their issues. So with me;

My birthplace hate I, and my love's upon

This enemy town. I'll enter. If he slay me,
He does fair justice; if he give me way,
I'll do his country service. [Exit.]

[SCENE V. The same. A hall in Aufidius's house.]

Music within. Enter a SERVINGMAN.

1. Serv. Wine; wine, wine! What service is here! I think our fellows are asleep. [Exit.]

Enter a second SERVINGMAN.

2. Serv. Where's Cotus? my master calls for him. Cotus! [Exit.]

Enter CORIOLANUS.

Cor. A goodly house! The feast smells well, but I Appear not like a guest.

Re-enter the first SERVINGMAN.

1. Serv. What would you have, friend? Whence are you? Here's no place for you; pray, go to the door. [Exit.]

Cor. I have deserv'd no better entertainment, In being Coriolanus.

Re-enter second SERVINGMAN.

2. Serv. Whence are you, sir? Has the porter his eyes in his head, that he gives entrance to such companions? Pray, get you out.

Cor. Away! [Exit.]

2. Serv. Away! get you away.

Cor. Now thou'rt troublesome.

2. Serv. Are you so brave? I'll have you talk'd with anon.

Enter a third SERVINGMAN. The first meets him.

3. Serv. What fellow's this?

1. Serv. A strange one as ever I look'd on; I cannot get him out o' th' house. Prithee, call my master to him. [Retires.]

3. Serv. What have you to do here, fellow? Pray you, avoid the house.

Cor. Let me but stand; I will not hurt your hearth.

3. Serv. What are you?

Cor. A gentleman.

3. Serv. A marvellous poor one.

Cor. True, so I am.

3. Serv. Pray you, poor gentleman, take up some other station; here's no place for you. Pray you, avoid. Come.

Cor. Follow your function, go, and batten on cold bits. [Pushes him away from him.]

3. Serv. What, you will not? Prithee, tell my master what a strange guest he has here.

2. Serv. And I shall. [Exit.]

3. Serv. Where dwell'st thou?

Cor. Under the canopy.

3. Serv. Under the canopy?

Cor. Ay.

3. Serv. Where's that?

Cor. I' the city of kites and crows.

3. Serv. I' the city of kites and crows! What an ass it is! Then thou dwell'st with daws too?

Cor. No, I serve not thy master.

3. Serv. How, sir! do you meddle with my master? 51

Cor. Ay; 't is an honest service than to meddle with thy mistress.
Thou prat'st, and prat'st; serve with thy trencher, hence!

[Beats him away. [Exit third Servingman.]

Enter AUFIDIUS with the [second] SERVINGMAN.

Auf. Where is this fellow? 55

2. Serv. Here, sir. I'd have beaten him like a dog, but for disturbing the lords within.

[Retires.]

Auf. Whence com'st thou? What wouldst thou? Thy name?

Why speak'st not? Speak, man: what's thy name?

Cor. If, Tullus [unmuffling], not yet thou 60
know'st me, and, seeing me, dost not think me for the man I am, necessity commands me name myself.

Auf. What is thy name?

Cor. A name unmusical to the Volscians' ears,
And harsh in sound to thine.

Auf. Say, what's thy name?
Thou hast a grim appearance, and thy face 65
Bears a command in 't; though thy tackle's torn,

Thou show'st a noble vessel. What's thy name?

Cor. Prepare thy brow to frown. Know'st thou me yet?

Auf. I know thee not. Thy name? 70

Cor. My name is Caius Marcius, who hath done

To thee particularly and to all the Volscies
Great hurt and mischief; thereto witness may
My surname, Coriolanus. The painful service,
The extreme dangers, and the drops of blood 75
Shed for my thankless country are required
But with that surname; a good memory,
And witness of the malice and displeasure
Which thou shouldst bear me. Only that name remains.

The cruelty and envy of the people, 80
Permitted by our dastard nobles, who Have all forsook me, hath devour'd the rest;
And suffer'd me by the voice of slaves to be Whoop'd out of Rome. Now this extremity Hath brought me to thy hearth; not out of hope — 85

Mistake me not — to save my life, for if
I had fear'd death, of all the men i' the world
I would have voided thee, but in mere spite,
To be full quit of those my banishers,
Stand I before thee here. Then if thou hast 90
A heart of wreak in thee, that wilt revenge Thine own particular wrongs and stop those mains

Of shame seen through thy country, speed thee straight,

And make my misery serve thy turn. So use it
That my revengeful services may prove 95
As benefits to thee, for I will fight Against my cank'red country with the spleen

Of all the under fiends. But if so be

Thou dar'st not this, and that to prove more
fortunes

Thou 'rt tired, then, in a word, I also am 100
Longer to live most weary, and present
My throat to thee and to thy ancient malice;
Which not to cut would show thee but a fool,
Since I have ever followed thee with hate, Drawn tunns of blood out of thy country's breast, 105

And cannot live but to thy shame, unless

It be to do thee service.

Auf. O Marcius, Marcius!
Each word thou hast spoke hath weeded from my heart

A root of ancient envy. If Jupiter

Should from yond cloud speak divine things, 110
And say "'T is true," I'd not believe them
more

Than thee, all noble Marcius. Let me twine
Mine arms about that body, whereagainst
My grained ash an hundred times hath broke,
And scarr'd the moon with splinters. Here I clip 115

The anvil of my sword, and do contest

As hotly and as nobly with thy love

As ever in ambitious strength I did

Contend against thy valour. Know thou first,
I lov'd the maid I married; never man 120

Sigh'd truer breath; but that I see thee here,
Thou noble thing! more dances my rapt heart

Than when I first my wedded mistress saw Bestride my threshold. Why, thou Mars! I tell thee, 125

We have a power on foot; and I had purpose
Once more to hew thy target from thy brawn,
Or lose mine arm for 't. Thou hast beat me
out

Twelve several times, and I have nightly
since

Dreamt of encounters 'twixt thyself and me;

We have been down together in my sleep, 130

Unbuckling helms, fisting each other's throat,
And wak'd half dead with nothing. Worthy Marcius,

Had we no quarrel else to Rome, but that Thou art thence banish'd, we would muster all

From twelve to seventy, and pouring war 135

Into the bowels of ungrateful Rome,
Like a bold flood o'er-beat. O, come, go in,

And take our friendly senators by the hands;
Who now are here, taking their leaves of me,

Who am prepar'd against your territories, 140
Though not for Rome itself.

Cor. You bless me, gods!

Auf. Therefore, most absolute sir, if thou wilt have

The leading of thine own revenges, take

The one half of my commission; and set
down —

As best thou art experienc'd, since thou know'st
Thy country's strength and weakness, — thine, own ways; 145

Whether to knock against the gates of Rome,
Or rudely visit them in parts remote,

To fright them, ere destroy. But come in;
Let me commend the first to those that shall

Say yea to thy desires. A thousand welcomes! 151

And more a friend than e'er an enemy;
Yet, Marcius, that was much. Your hand;
most welcome!

[Exeunt Coriolanus and Aufidius.
The two Servingmen [come forward].

1. Serv. Here 's a strange alteration! 154

2. Serv. By my hand, I had thought to have stricken him with a cudgel; and yet my mind gave me his clothes made a false report of him.

1. Serv. What an arm he has! He turn'd me about with his finger and his thumb, as one would set up a top. 161

2. Serv. Nay, I knew by his face that there was something in him. He had, sir, a kind of face, methought, — I cannot tell how to term it.

1. Serv. He had so; looking as it were — would I were hang'd, but I thought there was more in him than I could think. 167

2. Serv. So did I, I'll be sworn. He is simply the rarest man i' the world.

1. Serv. I think he is; but a greater soldier than he you wot one. 171

2. Serv. Who? My master?

1. Serv. Nay, it's no matter for that.

2. Serv. Worth six on him.

1. Serv. Nay, not so neither; but I take him to be the greater soldier. 176

2. Serv. Faith, look you, one cannot tell how to say that. For the defence of a town, our general is excellent.

1. Serv. Ay, and for an assault too. 180

Re-enter third SERVINGMAN.

3. Serv. O slaves, I can tell you news, — news, you rascals!

1. and 2. Serv. What, what, what? Let 's partake.

3. Serv. I would not be a Roman, of all nations; I had as lieve be a condemn'd man. 186

1. and 2. Serv. Wherefore? wherefore?

3. Serv. Why, here 's he that was wont to thwack our general, Caius Marcius.

1. Serv. Why do you say, "thwack our general"? 191

3. Serv. I do not say, "thwack our general"; but he was always good enough for him.

2. Serv. Come, we are fellows and friends; he was ever too hard for him; I have heard him say so himself. 196

1. Serv. He was too hard for him directly, to say the troth on 't. Before Corioli he scotch'd him and notch'd him like a carbonado.

2. Serv. An he had been canniball given, he might have boil'd and eaten him too. 201

1. Serv. But more of thy news.

3. Serv. Why, he is so made on here within, as if he were son and heir to Mars; set at upper end o' the table; no question ask'd him by [205] any of the senators, but they stand bald before him. Our general himself makes a mistress of him; sanctifies himself with 's hand and turns up the white o' the eye to his discourse. But the bottom of the news is, our general is cut i'

the middle and but one half of what he was [210] yesterday; for the other has half, by the entreaty and grant of the whole table. He'll go, he says, and sowl the porter of Rome gates by the ears. He will mow all down before him, and leave his passage poll'd. 215

2. Serv. And he's as like to do 't as any man I can imagine.

3. Serv. Do 't! he will do 't; for, look you, sir, he has as many friends as enemies; which friends, sir, as it were, durst not, look you, sir, show themselves, as we term it, his friends whilst he's in directitude. 222

1. Serv. Directitude! What 's that?

3. Serv. But when they shall see, sir, his crest up again, and the man in blood, they will out of their burrows, like conies after rain, and revel all with him. 227

1. Serv. But when goes this forward?

3. Serv. To-morrow; to-day; presently; you shall have the drum struck up this afternoon. 'Tis, as it were, a parcel of their feast, and to be executed ere they wipe their lips. 239

2. Serv. Why, then we shall have a stirring world again. This peace is nothing, but to rust iron, increase tailors, and breed ballad-makers. 235

1. Serv. Let me have war, say I; it exceeds peace as far as day does night; it's spritely, waking, audible, and full of vent. Peace is a very apoplexy, lethargy; mull'd, deaf, sleepy, insensible; a getter of more bastard children than war 's a destroyer of men. 241

2. Serv. 'Tis so; and as wars, in some sort, may be said to be a ravisher, so it cannot be denied but peace is a great maker of cuckolds.

1. Serv. Ay, and it makes men hate one another. 246

3. Serv. Reason; because they then less need one another. The wars for my money! I hope to see Romans as cheap as Volscians. — They are rising, they are rising. 250

1. and 2. Serv. In, in, in, in! [Exeunt.]

[SCENE VI. Rome. A public place.]

Enter SICINIUS and BRUTUS.

Sic. We hear not of him, neither need we fear him;

His remedies are tame. The present peace And quietness of the people, which before Were in wild hurry, here do make his friends Blush that the world goes well, who rather had, 5

Though they themselves did suffer by 't, behold

Dissentious numbers pest'ring streets than see Our tradesmen singing in their shops and going About their functions friendly.

Enter MENENIUS.

Br. We stood to 't in good time. Is this Menenius? 10

Sic. 'Tis he, 'tis he. O, he is grown most kind of late.

Hail, sir!

Men. Hail to you both!

Sic. Your Coriolanus
Is not much miss'd, but with his friends,
The commonwealth doth stand, and so would
do,

Were he more angry at it. 15
Men. All's well; and might have been much better, if

He could have temporiz'd.
Sic. Where is he, hear you?

Men. Nay, I hear nothing; his mother and his wife
Hear nothing from him.

Enter three or four CITIZENS.

[Citizens.] The gods preserve you both!

Sic. God-den, our neighbours. 20

Bru. God-den to you all, god-den to you all.

I. Cit. Ourselves, our wives, and children, on our knees,

Are bound to pray for you both.

Sic. Live, and thrive!

Bru. Farewell, kind neighbours! We wish'd
Coriolanus 24

Had lov'd you as we did.

[Citizens.] Now the gods keep you!

Both Tri. Farewell, farewell.

[Exeunt Citizens.]

Sic. This is a happier and more comely time
Than when these fellows ran about the streets,
Crying confusion.

Bru. Caius Marcius was
A worthy officer i' the war; but insolent, 30
O'ercome with pride, ambitious past all think-
ing,

Self-loving, —

Sic. And affecting one sole throne,
Without assistance.

Men. I think not so.

Sic. We should by this, to all our lamenta-
tion,

If he had gone forth consul, found it so. 35

Bru. The gods have well prevented it, and
Rome

Sits safe and still without him.

Enter an ÆDILE.

Æd. Worthy tribunes,

There is a slave, whom we have put in prison,
Reports the Volscies with two several powers 40
Are ent'red in the Roman territories,
And with the deepest malice of the war
Destroy what lies before 'em.

Men. 'Tis Aufidius,
Who, hearing of our Marcius' banishment,
Thrusts forth his horns again into the world;
Which were inshell'd when Marcius stood for
Rome, 45

And durst not once peep out.

Sic. Come, what talk you
Of Marcius?

Bru. Go see this rumourer whipp'd. It cannot be

The Volscies dare break with us.

Men. Cannot be!

We have record that very well it can;
And three examples of the like hath been 50
Within my age. But reason with the fellow,

Before you punish him, where he heard this,
Lest you shall chance to whip your information

And beat the messenger who bids beware
Of what is to be dreaded.

Sic. Tell not me! 55

I know this cannot be.

Bru.

Not possible.

Enter a MESSENGER.

Mess. The nobles in great earnestness are going

All to the Senate-house; some news is come
That turns their countenances.

Sic. 'Tis this slave, — Go whip him 'fore the people's eyes, — his raising; 60

Nothing but his report.

Mess. Yes, worthy sir,
The slave's report is seconded; and more,
More fearful, is deliver'd.

Sic. What more fearful?

Mess. It is spoke freely out of many mouths —

How probable I do not know — that Marcius, 65
Join'd with Aufidius, leads a power 'gainst
Rome,

And vows revenge as spacious as between
The young'st and oldest thing.

Sic. This is most likely!

Bru. Rais'd only, that the weaker sort may wish

Good Marcius home again.

Sic. The very trick on 't. 71

Men. This is unlikely.
He and Aufidius can no more atone
Than violentest contrariety.

Enter [a second] MESSENGER.

[2.] Mess. You are sent for to the Senate. 72

A fearful army, led by Caius Marcius
Associated with Aufidius, rages

Upon our territories; and have already O'erborne their way, consum'd with fire, and took

What lay before them.

Enter COMINIUS.

Com. O, you have made good work!

Men. What news? what news?

Com. You have help to ravish your own daughters and 81

To melt the city leads upon your pates,
To see your wives dishonour'd to your noses, —

Men. What's the news? what's the news?

Com. Your temples burned in their cement,
and 85

Your franchises, whereon you stood, confin'd
Into an auger's bore.

Men. Pray now, your news? —

You have made fair work, I fear me. — Pray, your news?

If Marcius should be join'd with Volscians, —
Com. If!

He is their god. He leads them like a thing. 90
Made by some other deity than nature,

That shapes man better; and they follow him,

Against us brats, with no less confidence
Than boys pursuing summer butterflies,
Or butchers killing flies.

Men. You have made good work,
You and your apron-men; you that stood so
much 96

Upon the voice of occupation and
The breath of garlic-eaters!

Com. He will shake
Your Rome about your ears.

Men. As Hercules
Did shake down mellow fruit. You have made fair work! 100

Bru. But is this true, sir?

Com. Ay; and you'll look pale
Before you find it other. All the regions
Do smilingly revolt; and who resists
Are mock'd for valiant ignorance,
And perish constant fools. Who is 't can blame
him? 105

Your enemies and his find something in him.

Men. We are all undone, unless

The noble man have mercy.

Com. Who shall ask it?
The tribunes cannot do 't for shame; the
people

Deserve such pity of him as his wolf 110 Does of the shepherds. For his best friends, if they

Should say, "Be good to Rome," they charg'd him even

As those should do that had deserv'd his hate,
And therein show'd like enemies.

Men. 'T is true.
If he were putting to my house the brand 115
That should consume it, I have not the face
To say, "Beseech you, cease." You have made fair hands,

You and your crafts! You have crafted fair!

Com. You have brought
A trembling upon Rome, such as was never
So incapable of help.

[Both Tri. Say not we brought it. 120 Men. How! Was 't we? We lov'd him; but, like beasts

And cowardly nobles, gave way unto your clusters,

Who did hoot him out o' the city.

Com. But I fear
They'll roar him in again. Tullus Aufidius, 125
The second name of men, obeys his points
As if he were his officer. Desperation
Is all the policy, strength, and defence,
That Rome can make against them.

Enter a troop of CITIZENS.

Men. Here come the clusters.
And is Aufidius with him? You are they
That made the air unwholesome, when you cast 130

Your stinking greasy caps in hooting at Coriolanus' exile. Now he's coming;
And not a hair upon a soldier's head
Which will not prove a whip. As many coxcombs

As you threw caps up will he tumble down, 135
And pay you for your voices. 'T is no matter;

If he could burn us all into one coal,
We have deserv'd it.

[Citizens.] Faith, we hear fearful news.

1. Cit. For mine own part,
When I said, banish him, I said, 't was pity. 140

2. Cit. And so did I.

3. Cit. And so did I; and, to say the truth, so did very many of us. That we did, we did for the best; and though we willingly consented to his banishment, yet it was against our will. 145

Com. You're goodly things, you voices!

Men. You have made
Good work, you and your cry! Shall 's to the Capitol?

Com. O, ay, what else?

[Exeunt Cominius and Menenius.
Sic. Go, masters, get you home; be not dis-may'd. 150

These are a side that would be glad to have
This true which they so seem to fear. Go home,
And show no sign of fear.

1. Cit. The gods be good to us! Come, masters, let 's home. I ever said we were i' the wrong when we banish'd him. 155

2. Cit. So did we all. But, come, let 's home.
[Exeunt Citizens.

Bru. I do not like this news.

Sic. Nor I.

Bru. Let's to the Capitol. Would half my wealth 160

Would buy this for a lie!

Sic. Pray, let 's go.
[Exeunt.

[*SCENE VII. A camp, at a small distance from
Rome.*]

Enter AUFIDIUS with his LIEUTENANT.

Auf. Do they still fly to the Roman?

Lieu. I do not know what witchcraft 's in him, but

Your soldiers use him as the grace 'fore meat,
Their talk at table, and their thanks at end;
And you are dark'ned in this action, sir, 5
Even by your own.

Auf. I cannot help it now,
Unless, by using means, I lame the foot
Of our design. He bears himself more proud-lier,

Even to my person, than I thought he would
When first I did embrace him; yet his nature 10

In that 's no changeling; and I must excuse
What cannot be amended.

Lieu. Yet I wish, sir, —
I mean for your particular, — you had not Join'd in commission with him; but either
Have borne the action of yourself, or else 15
To him had left it solely.

Auf. I understand thee well; and be thou
sure,

When he shall come to his account, he knows
not

What I can urge against him. Although it seems,

And so he thinks, and is no less apparent. 20

To the vulgar eye, that he bears all things fairly,
And shows good husbandry for the Volscian state,

Fights dragon-like, and does achieve as soon
As draw his sword; yet he hath left undone
That which shall break his neck or hazard mine,

When'er we come to our account.

Lieu. Sir, I beseech you, think you he'll carry Rome?

Ant. All places yield to him ere he sits down,
And the nobility of Rome are his.

The senators and patricians love him too;
The tribunes are no soldiers, and their people
Will be as rash in the repeal as hasty
To expel him thence. I think he'll be to Rome

As is the osprey to the fish, who takes it
By sovereignty of nature. First he was

A noble servant to them, but he could not Carry his honours even. Whether 't was pride,

Which out of daily fortune ever taints
The happy man; whether defect of judgement,

To fail in the disposing of those chances
Which he was lord of; or whether nature,

Not to be other than one thing, not moving
From the casque to the cushion, but commanding peace

Even with the same austerity and garb

As he controll'd the war; but one of these, —
As he hath spices of them all — not all, —

For I dare so far free him, — made him fear'd;
So, hated; and so, banish'd: but he has a merit

To choke it in the utterance. So our virtues
Lie in the interpretation of the time;

And power, unto itself most commendable,
Hath not a tomb so evident as a chair

To extol what it hath done.
One fire drives out one fire; one nail, one nail;

Rights by rights falter, strengths by strengths do fail.

Come, let's away. When, Caius, Rome is
thine,

Thou art poor'st of all; then shortly art thou mine. [Exeunt.]

ACT V

[SCENE I. Rome. A public place.]

Enter MENENIUS, COMINIUS, SICINIUS, BRUTUS, with others.

Men. No, I'll not go. You hear what he hath said

Which was sometime his general; who lov'd
him

In a most dear particular. He call'd me father;
But what o' that? Go, you that banish'd him;

A mile before his tent fall down, and knee
The way into his mercy. Nay, if he coy'd

To hear Cominius speak, I'll keep at home.

Com. He would not seem to know me.

Men. Do you hear?

Com. Yet one time he did call me by my
name,

I urg'd our old acquaintance, and the drops

That we have bled together. Coriolanus
He would not answer to; forbade all names;
He was a kind of nothing, titleless,
Till he had forg'd himself a name o' the fire
Of burning Rome.

Men. Why, so; you have made good work!
A pair of tribunes that have wreck'd fair
Rome

To make coals cheap! A noble memory!

Com. I minded him how royal 't was to pardon

When it was less expected; he replied,
It was a bare petition of a state

To one whom they had punish'd.
Men. Very well;

Could he say less?

Com. I offered to awaken his regard
For 's private friends; his answer to me was,

He could not stay to pick them in a pile
Of noisome musty chaff. He said 't was folly,

For one poor grain or two, to leave unburnt
And still to nose the offence.

Men. For one poor grain or two!
I am one of those; his mother, wife, his child,

And this brave fellow too, we are the grains.
You are the musty chaff, and you are smelt

Above the moon; we must be burnt for you.

Sic. Nay, pray, be patient. If you refuse your aid

In this so never-needed help, yet do not Upbraid's with our distress. But, sure, if

you
Would be your country's pleader, your good
tongue,

More than the instant army we can make,
Might stop our countryman.

Men. No, I'll not meddle.
Sic. Pray you, go to him.

Men. What should I do?
Bru. Only make trial what your love can

do
For Rome, towards Marcius.

Men. Well, and say that Marcius
Return me, as Cominius is return'd,

Unheard; what then?
But as a discontented friend, grief-shot

With his unkindness? Say 't be so?

Sic. Yet your good will Must have that thanks from Rome, after the measure

As you intended well.

Men. I'll undertake 't.
I think he'll hear me. Yet, to bite his lip

And hum at good Cominius, much unhearts me.
He was not taken well; he had not din'd.

The veins unfill'd, our blood is cold, and then
We put upon the morning, are unapt

To give or to forgive; but when we have stuff'd
These pipes and these conveyances of our blood

With wine and feeding, we have suppler souls
Than in our priest-like fasts: therefore I'll watch him

Till he be dieted to my request,

And then I'll set upon him.

Bru. You know the very road into his kind-
ness,
And cannot lose your way.

Men. Good faith, I'll prove him,
Speed how it will. I shall ere long have knowledge

Of my success. [Exit.

Com. He'll never hear him.
Sic. Not?

Com. I tell you, he does sit in gold, his eye
Red as 't would burn Rome; and his injury
The gaoler to his pity. I kneel'd before him; '65
'T was very faintly he said, "Rise"; dismiss'd
me

Thus, with his speechless hand. What he would
do,

He sent in writing after me, what he would not,
Bound with an oath to yield to his conditions;
So that all hope is vain, 70
Unless his noble mother and his wife, —
Who, as I hear, mean to solicit him
For mercy to his country. Therefore, let's
hence,

And with our fair entreaties haste them on.

[Ezeunt.

[SCENE II. Entrance of the Volscian camp before Rome.] The WATCH on guard.

Enter to them, MENENIUS.

1. Watch. Stay! Whence are you?

2. Watch. Stand, and go back.

Men. You guard like men; 't is well; but,
by your leave,

I am an officer of state, and come

To speak with Coriolanus.

1. Watch. From whence?

Men. From Rome.

1. Watch. You may not pass, you must return; our general

Will no more hear from thence.

2. Watch. You'll see your Rome embrac'd with fire before

You'll speak with Coriolanus.

Men. Good my friends,
If you have heard your general talk of Rome
And of his friends there, it is lots to blanks, 10
My name hath touch'd your ears; it is Menen-ius.

1. Watch. Be it so; go back. The virtue of your name

Is not here passable.

Men. I tell thee, fellow,
Thy general is my lover. I have been
The book of his good acts, whence men have read

His fame unparallel'd haply amplified;
For I have ever magnified my friends, 15
Of whom he's chief, with all the size that verity

Would without lapsing suffer; nay, sometimes,
Like to a bowl upon a subtle ground, 20
I have tumbled past the throw; and in his praise

Have almost stamp'd the leasing. Therefore,
fellow,

I must have leave to pass.

1. Watch. Faith, sir, if you had told as many lies in his behalf as you have uttered words in your own, you should not pass here; no,

though it were as virtuous to lie as to live chastely. Therefore, go back. 28

Men. Prithee, fellow, remember my name is Menenius, always factionary on the party of your general. 31

2. Watch. Howsoever you have been his liar, as you say you have, I am one that, telling true under him, must say you cannot pass. Therefore, go back. 35

Men. Has he din'd, canst thou tell? for I would not speak with him till after dinner.

1. Watch. You are a Roman, are you?

Men. I am, as thy general is. 39

1. Watch. Then you should hate Rome, as he does. Can you, when you have push'd out your gates the very defender of them, and, in a violent popular ignorance, given your enemy your shield, think to front his revenges with the easy groans of old women, the virginal 45 palms of your daughters, or with the palsied intercession of such a decay'd dotant as you seem to be? Can you think to blow out the intended fire your city is ready to flame in, with such weak breath as this? No, you are de- 50 ceiv'd; therefore, back to Rome, and prepare for your execution. You are condemn'd, our general has sworn you out of reprieve and par-
don. 54

Men. Sirrah, if thy captain knew I were here, he would use me with estimation.

1. Watch. Come, my captain knows you not.

Men. I mean, thy general. 58

1. Watch. My general cares not for you.
Back, I say, go; lest I let forth your half-pint of blood. Back, that's the utmost of your having; back!

Men. Nay, but, fellow, fellow, —

Enter CORIOLANUS with AUFIDIUS.

Cor. What's the matter? 64

Men. Now, your companion, I'll say an errand for you. You shall know now that I am in estimation; you shall perceive that a Jack guardant cannot office me from my son Coriolanus. Guess but by my entertainment with him if thou stand'st not i' the state of hanging, or of some death more long in spectatorship, 70 and crueller in suffering; behold now presently, and swoon for what's to come upon thee. [To Cor.] The glorious gods sit in hourly synod about thy particular prosperity, and love thee
no worse than thy old father Menenius does! 75
O my son, my son! thou art preparing fire for us; look thee, here's water to quench it. I was hardly moved to come to thee; but being assured none but myself could move thee, I have been blown out of our gates with sighs; and 80 conjure thee to pardon Rome, and thy petition-ary countrymen. The good gods assuage thy wrath, and turn the dregs of it upon this varlet here, — this, who, like a block, hath denied my access to thee. 85

Cor. Away!

Men. How! away!

Cor. Wife, mother, child, I know not. My affairs

Are servanted to others; though I owe

My revenge properly, my remission lies 90
In Volscian breasts. That we have been familiar,

Ingrate forgetfulness shall poison rather Than pity note how much. Therefore, begone.
Mine ears against your suits are stronger than Your gates against my force. Yet, for I loved
thee, 95

Take this along. I writ it for thy sake,
[Gives a letter.]
And would have sent it. Another word, Menenius,

I will not hear thee speak. This man, Aufidius,
Was my belov'd in Rome; yet thou behold'st!
Auf. You keep a constant temper. 100

[Exeunt [Coriolanus and Aufidius].]

1. Watch. Now, sir, is your name Menenius?
2. Watch. 'Tis a spell, you see, of much power. You know the way home again.

1. Watch. Do you hear how we are shent for keeping your greatness back? 105

2. Watch. What cause do you think I have to swoon?

Men. I neither care for the world nor your general; for such things as you, I can scarce think there's any, you're so slight. He that hath a will to die by himself fears it not from 110 another. Let your general do his worst. For you, be that you are, long; and your misery increase with your age! I say to you, as I was said to, Away! [Exit.]

1. Watch. A noble fellow, I warrant him. 115

2. Watch. The worthy fellow is our general.
He's the rock, the oak not to be wind-shaken.
[Exeunt.]

[SCENE III. The tent of Coriolanus.]

Enter CORIOLANUS, AUFIDIUS [and others].

Cor. We will before the walls of Rome to-morrow

Set down our host. My partner in this action,
You must report to the Volscian lords, how plainly

I have borne this business.

Auf. Only their ends
You have respected; stopp'd your ears against's
The general suit of Rome; never admitted
A private whisper, no, not with such friends
That thought them sure of you.

Cor. This last old man,
Whom with a crack'd heart I have sent to Rome,

Lov'd me above the measure of a father; 120
Nay, godded me, indeed. Their latest refuge
Was to send him; for whose old love I have,
Though I show'd sourly to him, once more
offer'd

The first conditions, which they did refuse
And cannot now accept. To grace him only 125

That thought he could do more, a very little
I have yielded to. Fresh embassies and suits, Nor from the state nor private friends, hereafter

Will I lend ear to. Ha! what shout is this?

[Shout within.]

Shall I be tempted to infringe my vow 20
In the same time 't is made? I will not.

Enter [in mourning habits] VIRGILIA, VOLUMNIA [leading] young MARCIUS, Valeria, with Attendants.

My wife comes foremost; then the honour'd
mould

Wherein this trunk was fram'd, and in her
hand

The grandchild to her blood. But out, affection!

All bond and privilege of nature, break! 25
Let it be virtuous to be obstinate.

What is that curtsy worth? or those doves'
eyes,

Which can make gods forsworn? I melt, and am not

Of stronger earth than others. My mother bows,

As if Olympus to a molehill should 30
In supplication nod; and my young boy

Hath an aspect of intercession which Great nature cries, "Deny not." Let the Voices

Plough Rome and harrow Italy, I'll never
Be such a gosling to obey instinct, but stand 35

As if a man were author of himself
And knew no other kin.

Vir. My lord and husband!
Cor. These eyes are not the same I wore in Rome.

Vir. The sorrow that delivers us thus chang'd Makes you think so.

Cor. Like a dull actor now 40
I have forgot my part, and I am out.

Even to a full disgrace. Best of my flesh,
Forgive my tyranny; but do not say

For that, "Forgive our Romans." O, a kiss
Long as my exile, sweet as my revenge! 45

Now, by the jealous queen of heaven, that kiss
I carried from thee, dear; and my true lip

Hath virgin'd it e'er since. You gods! I prate,
And the most noble mother of the world

Leave unsaluted. Sink, my knee, i' the earth;
[Kneels.]

Of thy deep duty more impression show 51
Than that of common sons.

Vol. O, stand up bless'd!
Whilst, with no softer cushion than the flint,

I kneel before thee; and unproperly 55
Show duty, as mistaken all this while

Between the child and parent. [Kneels.]

Cor. [Instantly raising her.] What 's this?
Your knees to me? to your corrected son?

Then let the pebbles on the hungry beach
Fillip the stars; then let the mutinous winds

Strike the proud cedars 'gainst the fiery sun, 60
Murd'ring impossibility, to make

What cannot be, slight work.

Vol. Thou art my warrior;
I help to frame thee. Do you know this lady?

Cor. The noble sister of Publicola,
The moon of Rome, chaste as the icicle 65

That's curdled by the frost from purest snow
And hangs on Dian's temple. Dear Valeria!

Vol. This is a poor epitome of yours.

Which by the interpretation of full time
May show like all yourself.

Cor. The god of soldiers,
With the consent of supreme Jove, inform ⁷¹
Thy thoughts with nobleness; that thou mayst prove

To shame invulnerable, and stick i' the wars
Like a great sea-mark, standing every flaw,
And saving those that eye thee!

Vol. Your knee, sirrah.
Cor. That's my brave boy! ⁷⁵

Vol. Even he, your wife, this lady, and myself,

Are suitors to you.

Cor. I beseech you, peace;
Or, if you'd ask, remember this before:
The thing I have forsworn to grant may never
Be held by you denials. Do not bid me ⁸¹
Dismiss my soldiers, or capitulate
Again with Rome's mechanics; tell me not Wherein I seem unnatural; desire not
To allay my rages and revenges with ⁸⁵
Your colder reasons.

Vol. O, no more, no more!
You have said you will not grant us anything;
For we have nothing else to ask, but that
Which you deny already. Yet we will ask,
That, if you fail in our request, the blame ⁹⁰
May hang upon your hardness; therefore hear
us.

Cor. Aufidius, and you Volsees, mark; for
we'll Hear nought from Rome in private. Your request?

Vol. Should we be silent and not speak, our raiment
And state of bodies would bewray what life ⁹⁵
We have led since thy exile. Think with thy-
self

How more unfortunate than all living women
Are we come hither; since that thy sight, which should

Make our eyes flow with joy, hearts dance with
comforts,

Constrains them weep and shake with fear and sorrow; ¹⁰⁰

Making the mother, wife, and child to see
The son, the husband, and the father tearing His country's bowels out. And to poor we Thine enmity's most capital. Thou barr'st us
Our prayers to the gods, which is a comfort ¹⁰⁵
That all but we enjoy; for how can we,
Alas, how can we for our country pray,
Whereto we are bound, together with thy victory,

Whereto we are bound? Alack, or we must lose

The country, our dear nurse, or else thy person, ¹¹⁰

Our comfort in the country. We must find
An evident calamity, though we had Our wish, which side should win; for either
thou

Must, as a foreign recreant, be led
With manacles through our streets, or else ¹¹⁵
Triumphantly tread on thy country's ruin,
And bear the palm for having bravely shed

Thy wife and children's blood. For myself, son,
I purpose not to wait on fortune till These wars determine. If I cannot persuade thee ¹²⁰

Rather to show a noble grace to both parts
Than seek the end of one, thou shalt no sooner
March to assault thy country than to tread — Trust to't, thou shalt not — on thy mother's womb,

That brought thee to this world.

Vir. Ay, and on mine,
That brought you forth this boy, to keep your name ¹²⁵

Living to time.

Young Mar. 'A shall not tread on me.
I'll run away till I am bigger, but then I'll fight.

Cor. Not of a woman's tenderness to be,
Requires nor child nor woman's face to see, ¹³⁰
I have sat too long. [Rising.]

Vol. Nay, go not from us thus.
If it were so that our request did tend
To save the Romans, thereby to destroy

The Volsees whom you serve, you might condemn us,

As poisonous of your honour. No; our suit ¹³⁵
Is, that you reconcile them: while the Volsees
May say, "This mercy we have show'd"; the Romans,

"This we receiv'd"; and each in either side
Give the all-hail to thee, and cry, "Be blest
For making up this peace!" Thou know'st, great son, ¹⁴⁰

The end of war's uncertain, but this certain,
That, if thou conquer Rome, the benefit
Which thou shalt thereby reap is such a name
Whose repetition will be dogg'd with curses; Whose chronicle thus writ: "The man was noble, ¹⁴⁵

But with his last attempt he wip'd it out;
Destroy'd his country; and his name remains
To the ensuing age abhorr'd." Speak to me,
son.

Thou hast affected the fine strains of honour,
To imitate the graces of the gods; ¹⁵⁰
To tear with thunder the wide cheeks o' the
air,

And yet to charge thy sulphur with a bolt
That should but rive an oak. Why dost not
speak?

Think'st thou it honourable for a noble man
Still to remember wrongs? Daughter, speak you; ¹⁵⁵

He cares not for your weeping. Speak thou,
boy;

Perhaps thy childishness will move him more Than can our reasons. There's no man in the world

More bound to's mother; yet here he lets me
prate

Like one i' the stocks. — Thou hast never in thy life ¹⁶⁰

Show'd thy dear mother any courtesy,
When she, poor hen, fond of no second brood,
Has cluck'd thee to the wars and safely home,
Loaden with honour. Say my request's unjust,
And spurn me back; but if it be not so, ¹⁶⁵

Thou art not honest; and the gods will plague thee,

That thou restrain'st from me the duty which To a mother's part belongs. — He turns away. Down, ladies; let us shame him with our knees. To his surname Coriolanus longs more pride 170 Than pity to our prayers. Down! an end; This is the last. So we will home to Rome, And die among our neighbours. — Nay, behold's!

This boy, that cannot tell what he would have, But kneels and holds up hands for fellowship, 175 Does reason our petition with more strength Than thou hast to deny 't. — Come, let us go. This fellow had a Volseian to his mother; His wife is in Corioli, and his child Like him by chance. — Yet give us our dis- patch. 180

I am hush'd until our city be a-fire,

And then I'll speak a little.

[He holds her by the hand, silent.]

Cor. O mother, mother! What have you done? Behold, the heavens do ope,

The gods look down, and this unnatural scene They laugh at. O my mother, mother! O! 185 You have won a happy victory to Rome; But, for your son, — believe it, O, believe it, Most dangerously you have with him prevail'd, If not most mortal to him. But, let it come. Aufidius, though I cannot make true wars, 190 I'll find convenient peace. Now, good Aufidius,

Were you in my stead, would you have heard A mother less, or granted less, Aufidius?

Auf. I was mov'd withal.

Cor. I dare be sworn you were; And, sir, it is no little thing to make 195 Mine eyes to sweat compassion. But, good sir, What peace you'll make, advise me. For my part, I'll not to Rome, I'll back with you; and pray you, Stand to me in this cause. — O mother! wife!

[Speaks apart with them.]

Auf. [Aside.] I am glad thou hast set thy mercy and thy honour 200 At difference in thee. Out of that I'll work Myself a former fortune.

Cor. [To Volumnia, Virgilia, etc.] Ay, by and by;

But we will drink together; and you shall bear A better witness back than words, which we, On like conditions, will have counter-seal'd. 205 Come, enter with us. Ladies, you deserve To have a temple built you. All the swords In Italy, and her confederate arms, Could not have made this peace. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE IV. — Rome. A public place.]

Enter MENENIUS and SICINIUS.

Men. See you yond coign o' the Capitol, yond corner-stone?

Sic. Why, what of that?

Men. If it be possible for you to displace it with your little finger, there is some hope the [5 ladies of Rome, especially his mother, may prevail with him. But I say there is no hope in 't; our throats are sentenc'd and stay upon execution.

Sic. Is 't possible that so short a time can alter the condition of a man? 14

Men. There is differency between a grub and a butterfly; yet your butterfly was a grub. This Marcius is grown from man to dragon; he has wings; he's more than a creeping thing.

Sic. He lov'd his mother dearly. 15

Men. So did he me; and he no more remembers his mother now than an eight-year-old horse. The tartness of his face sours ripe grapes; when he walks, he moves like an engine, and the ground shrinks before his treading. He is able to pierce a corslet with his [20 eye; talks like a knell, and his hum is a battery. He sits in his state, as a thing made for Alexander. What he bids be done is finish'd with his bidding. He wants nothing of a god but eternity and a heaven to throne in. 25

Sic. Yes, mercy, if you report him truly.

Men. I paint him in the character. Mark what mercy his mother shall bring from him. There is no more mercy in him than there is milk in a male tiger; that shall our poor city find: and all this is long of you. 32

Sic. The gods be good unto us!

Men. No, in such a case the gods will not be good unto us. When we banish'd him, we respected not them; and, he returning to break our necks, they respect not us. 37

Enter a MESSENGER.

Mess. Sir, if you'd save your life, fly to your house.

The plebeians have got your fellow-tribune And hale him up and down, all swearing, if 40 The Roman ladies bring not comfort home, They'll give him death by inches.

Enter a second MESSENGER.

Sic. What's the news?

[2.] Mess. Good news, good news! The ladies have prevail'd, The Volscians are dislodg'd, and Marcius gone. A merrier day did never yet greet Rome, 45 No, not the expulsion of the Tarquins.

Sic. Friend, Art thou certain this is true? Is 't most certain?

[2.] Mess. As certain as I know the sun is fire.

Where have you lurk'd, that you make doubt of it?

Ne'er through an arch so hurried the blown tide, 50

As the recomforted through the gates. Why, hark you!

[Trumpets; hautboys; drums beat; all together.]

The trumpets, sackbuts, psalteries, and fifes, Tabors and cymbals and the shouting Romans, Make the sun dance. Hark you!

[A shout within.]

Men. This is good news ;
I will go meet the ladies. This Volumnia ⁶⁵
Is worth of consuls, senators, patricians,
A city full ; of tribunes, such as you,
A sea and land full. You have pray'd well to-day.

This morning for ten thousand of your throats I'd not have given a doit. Hark, how they joy ! [Sound still, with the shouts. ⁶⁰

Sic. First, the gods bless you for your tidings ; next,

Accept my thankfulness.

[2. Mess. Sir, we have all
Great cause to give great thanks.

Sic. They are near the city ?

[2. Mess. Almost at point to enter.

Sic. We will meet them,
And help the joy. [Exeunt. ⁶⁵

[SCENE V. The same. A street near the gate.]

Enter two SENATORS with Ladies [Volumnia, Virgilia, Valeria, etc.], passing over the stage,
with other Lords.

[1. Sen. Behold our patroness, the life of Rome !

Call all your tribes together, praise the gods,
And make triumphant fires ! Strew flowers before them !

Unshout the noise that banish'd Marcius !
Repeal him with the welcome of his mother ; ⁵
Cry, "Welcome, ladies, welcome !"]

All. Welcome, ladies,
Welcome ! [A flourish with drums and trumpets.
[Exeunt.]

[SCENE VI. Corioli. A public place.]

Enter TULLUS AUFIDIUS, with Attendants.

Auf. Go tell the lords o' the city I am here ;
Deliver them this paper. Having read it,
Bid them repair to the market-place, where I,
Even in theirs and in the commons' ears, ⁵
Will vouch the truth of it. Him I accuse
The city ports by this hath enter'd, and Intends to appear before the people, hoping
To purge himself with words. Dispatch.

[Exeunt Attendants.]

Enter three or four CONSPIRATORS of Aufidius' faction.

Most welcome !

1. Con. How is it with our general ?
Auf. Even so ¹⁰
As with a man by his own alms empoison'd,
And with his charity slain.

2. Con. Most noble sir,
If you do hold the same intent wherein
You wish'd us parties, we'll deliver you
Of your great danger.

Auf. Sir, I cannot tell. ¹⁵
We must proceed as we do find the people.

3. Con. The people will remain uncertain
whilst

'Twixt you there's difference ; but the fall of either

Makes the survivor heir of all.

Auf. I know it ;
And my pretext to strike at him admits ²⁰
A good construction. I rais'd him, and I pawn'd Mine honour for his truth ; who being so height-
en'd,

He watered his new plants with dews of flattery,

Seducing so my friends ; and, to this end,
He bow'd his nature, never known before ²⁵
But to be rough, unswayable, and free.

3. Con. Sir, his stoutness
When he did stand for consul, which he lost
By lack of stooping, —

Auf. That I would have spoke of. ³⁰
Being banish'd for 't, he came unto my hearth,
Presented to my knife his throat. I took him ;
Made him joint-servant with me ; gave him way
In all his own desires ; nay, let him choose
Out of my files, his projects to accomplish,
My best and freshest men ; serv'd his design-
ments ³⁵

In mine own person ; help to reap the fame
Which he did end all his, and took some pride
To do myself this wrong ; till, at the last,
I seem'd his follower, not partner, and
He wag'd me with his countenance, as if ⁴⁰
I had been mercenary.

1. Con. So he did, my lord.
The army marvell'd at it, and, in the last,
When he had carried Rome and that we look'd
For no less spoil than glory, —

Auf. There was it,
For which my sinews shall be stretch'd upon him. ⁴⁵

At a few drops of women's rheum, which are
As cheap as lies, he sold the blood and labour
Of our great action. Therefore shall he die,
And I'll renew me in his fall. But, hark !
[Drums and trumpets sound, with great shouts of the People.

1. Con. Your native town you enter'd like a post, ⁵⁰

And had no welcomes home ; but he returns,
Splitting the air with noise.

2. Con. And patient fools,
Whose children he hath slain, their base throats
tear

With giving him glory.

3. Con. Therefore, at your vantage,
Ere he express himself, or move the people ⁵⁵
With what he would say, let him feel your sword,
Which we will second. When he lies along,
After your way his tale pronounc'd shall bury
His reasons with his body.

Auf. Say no more. ⁶⁰
Here come the lords.

Enter the LORDS of the city.

All the Lords. You are most welcome home.
Auf. I have not deserv'd it.

But, worthy lords, have you with heed perused
What I have written to you ?

Lords. We have.

1. Lord. And grieve to hear 't.
What faults he made before the last, I think Might have found easy fines ; but there to end ⁶⁵

Where he was to begin, and give away
The benefit of our levies, answering us
With our own charge, making a treaty where
There was a yielding, — this admits no excuse.
Auf. He approaches; you shall hear him. 70

Enter CORIOLANUS, marching with drum and colours; Commoners being with him.

Cor. Hail, lords! I am return'd your soldier,

No more infected with my country's love
Than when I parted hence, but still subsisting
Under your great command. You are to know
That prosperously I have attempted and 75
With bloody passage led your wars even to The gates of Rome. Our spoils we have brought home

Do more than counterpoise a full third part
The charges of the action. We have made peace

With no less honour to the Antiates 80
Than shame to the Romans; and we here deliver,

Subscrib'd by the consuls and patricians,
Together with the seal o' the Senate, what We have compounded on.

Auf. Read it not, noble lords;
But tell the traitor, in the highest degree 85
He hath abus'd your powers.

Cor. "Traitor!" How now!

Auf. Ay, traitor, Marcius!

Cor. "Marcius!"

Auf. Ay, Marcius, Caius Marcius! Dost thou think

I'll grace thee with that robbery, thy stolen
name,

Coriolanus, in Corioli? 90

You lords and heads o' the state, perfidiously
He has betray'd your business, and given
up,

For certain drops of salt, your city Rome,
I say "your city," to his wife and mother;
Breaking his oath and resolution like 95
A twist of rotten silk, never admitting Counsel o' the war, but at his nurse's tears
He whin'd and roar'd away your victory,
That pages blush'd at him and men of heart
Look'd wond'ring each at others.

Cor. Hear'st thou, Mars? 100

Auf. Name not the god, thou boy of tears!

Cor. Ha!

Auf. No more.

Cor. Measureless liar, thou hast made my
heart

Too great for what contains it. "Boy!" O
slave!

Pardon me, lords, 't is the first time that ever 105

I was forc'd to scold. Your judgements, my grave lords,

Must give this cur the lie; and his own notion —

Who wears my stripes impress'd upon him,
that

Must bear my beating to his grave — shall join
To thrust the lie unto him. 110

1. Lord. Peace, both, and hear me speak.

Cor. Cut me to pieces, Volscies; men and lads,
Stain all your edges on me. "Boy!" False hound!

If you have writ your annals true, 't is there,
That, like an eagle in a dove-cote, I 115
Flutter'd your Volscians in Corioli;
Alone I did it. "Boy!"

Auf. Why, noble lords,
Will you be put in mind of his blind fortune,
Which was your shame, by this unholy braggart, 120

'Fore your own eyes and ears?

All Consps. Let him die for 't.

All the people. Tear him to pieces! Do it presently! — He kill'd my son! — My daughter!
— He kill'd my cousin Marcus! — He kill'd my
father!

2. Lord. Peace, ho! no outrage: peace! 125
The man is noble and his fame folds in
This orb o' the earth. His last offences to us
Shall have judicious hearing. Stand, Aufidius,
And trouble not the peace.

Cor. O that I had him,
With six Aufidiuses or more, his tribe, 130
To use my lawful sword!

Auf. Insolent villain!

All Consps. Kill, kill, kill, kill, kill him!

[Both the Conspirators draw, and kill Coriolanus, who falls: Au-fidius stands on him.]

Lords. Hold, hold, hold, hold!

Auf. My noble masters, hear me speak.

1. Lord. O Tullus!

2. Lord. Thou hast done a deed whereat valour will weep.

3. Lord. Tread not upon him. Masters all, be quiet; 135

Put up your swords.

Auf. My lords, when you shall know — as in this rage,

Provok'd by him, you cannot — the great danger

Which this man's life did owe you, you'll rejoice

That he is thus cut off. Please it your honours
To call me to your Senate, I'll deliver 141

Myself your loyal servant, or endure
Your heaviest censure.

1. Lord. Bear from hence his body;
And mourn you for him. Let him be regarded

As the most noble corse that ever herald 145
Did follow to his urn.

2. Lord. His own impatience
Takes from Aufidius a great part of blame.

Let's make the best of it.

Auf. My rage is gone,
And I am struck with sorrow. Take him up.

Help, three o' the chiefest soldiers; I'll be
one. 150

Beat thou the drum, that it speak mournfully.
Trail your steel pikes. Though in this city he Hath widowed and unchild'd many a one,

Which to this hour bewail the injury,

Yet he shall have a noble memory. 155

Assist. [Exeunt, bearing the body of Coriolanus. A dead march sounded.]

POEMS

VENUS AND ADONIS

THIS poem, the first product of Shakespeare's pen to issue from the press, was printed in 1593 by his fellow-townsmen, Richard Field. It seems to have become popular at once; and by the middle of the seventeenth century at least twelve editions had appeared. The dedication indicates that it was published with Shakespeare's consent, and it is to be presumed that it was printed from the author's manuscript. The first edition is the sole authority for the text.

Of the date of composition the only additional evidence lies in the words of the dedication, "the first heir of my invention." Since, according to the received chronology, Shakespeare had by this time written several plays, it is necessary to suppose either that he used this phrase in a sense which excluded drama, or that the poem had at least been sketched some years before the date of publication. This second and more plausible hypothesis does not preclude the possibility of polishing and revision down to the date of entry in the Stationers' Register, April 18, 1593.

Venus and Adonis belongs to a somewhat large class of Elizabethan poems in which classical legends were re-told with the luxuriant decoration characteristic of the spirit of the Renaissance. Ovid was the most frequent source of these themes, and in the present instance we find borrowings from several of the poems of the Metamorphoses: the reluctance of the hero from the legend of Hermaphroditus in Book iv; the boar from that of Meleager in Book viii; and other details from the account of Adonis in Book x. A large number of poetical treatments of the myth, going back to Theocritus as well as to Ovid, are found in the works of sixteenth-century poets in Italy, France, and Spain; and traces of their influence are supposed to be discernible in the present poem. The essential feature of the reluctance of Adonis, however, is not explicitly stated in any of the Continental versions, classical or Renaissance. It is present in incidental treatments of the theme by Greene and Marlowe; and Thomas Lodge, in his ornate re-telling of the Ovidian tale of Glaucus and Scilla (1589), had described a situation similar to that in Shakespeare's poem, by reversing, probably under the influence of Ovid's Salmacis and Hermaphroditus, the parts played by the hero and heroine. Lodge also treated in passing the story of Adonis; and the verse-form he employed is that used by Shakespeare. These indications, corroborated by the presence of numerous similarities in detail, point to Lodge's poem as the most important immediate source of Shakespeare's inspiration.

Villâ miretur vulgus : mihi flavus Apollo
Pocula Castalia plena ministret aqua.

TO THE

RIGHT HONOURABLE HENRY WRIOTHESLEY,

EARL OF SOUTHAMPTON AND BARON OF TICHFIELD.

RIGHT HONOURABLE, I know not how I shall offend in dedicating my unpolish'd lines to your Lordship, nor how the world will censure me for choosing so strong a prop to support so weak a burden; only if your Honour seem but pleased, I account myself highly praised, and vow to take advantage of all idle hours till I have honoured you with some graver labour. But if the first heir of my invention prove deformed, I shall be sorry it had so noble a godfather; and never after ear so barren a land, for fear it yield me still so bad a harvest. I leave it to your honourable survey, and your Honour to your heart's content, which I wish may always answer your own wish and the world's hopeful expectation.

Your Honour's in all duty,

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

VENUS AND ADONIS

EVEN as the sun with purple-colour'd face
Had ta'en his last leave of the weeping morn,
Rose-cheek'd Adonis hied him to the chase;
Hunting he lov'd, but love he laugh'd to scorn.
Sick-thoughted Venus makes amain unto
him,
And like a bold-fac'd suitor gins to woo him.

"Thrice fairer than myself," thus she began,
"The field's chief flower, sweet above compare,
Stain to all nymphs, more lovely than a man,
More white and red than doves or roses are;
Nature that made thee, with herself at strife,
Saith that the world hath ending with thy
life.

"Vouchsafe, thou wonder, to alight thy steed,
And rein his proud head to the saddle-bow;
If thou wilt deign this favour, for thy need
A thousand honey secrets shalt thou know.
Here come and sit, where never serpent
hisses,
And being set, I'll smother thee with kisses;

"And yet not cloy thy lips with loath'd satiety,
But rather famish them amid their plenty,
Making them red and pale with fresh variety,
Ten kisses short as one, one long as twenty.
A summer's day will seem an hour but short,
Being wasted in such time-beguiling sport."

With this she seizeth on his sweating palm,
The precedent of pith and livelihood,
And, trembling in her passion, calls it balm,
Earth's sovereign salve to do a goddess good.
Being so enrag'd, desire doth lend her force
Courageously to pluck him from his horse.

Over one arm the lusty courser's rein,
Under her other was the tender boy,
Who blush'd and pouted in a dull disdain,
With leaden appetite, unapt to toy;
She red and hot as coals of glowing fire,
He red for shame, but frosty in desire.

The studded bridle on a ragged bough
Nimble she fastens;—O, how quick is love!—
The steed is stalled up, and even now
To tie the rider she begins to prove.
Backward she push'd him, as she would be thrust,
And govern'd him in strength, though not in
lust.

So soon was she along as he was down,
Each leaning on their elbows and their hips.
Now doth she stroke his cheek, now doth he
frown
And gins to chide, but soon she stops his lips,

And kissing speaks, with lustful language broken,
"If thou wilt chide, thy lips shall never open."

He burns with bashful shame; she with her
tears
Doth quench the maiden burning of his cheeks;
Then with her windy sighs and golden hairs
To fan and blow them dry again she seeks.
He saith she is immodest, blames her miss:
What follows more she murders with a kiss.

Even as an empty eagle, sharp by fast,
Tires with her beak on feathers, flesh, and bone,
Shaking her wings, devouring all in haste,
Till either gorge be stuff'd or prey be gone;
Even so she kiss'd his brow, his cheek, his
chin,
And where she ends she doth anew begin.

Fore'd to content, but never to obey,
Panting he lies and breatheth in her face.
She feedeth on the steam as on a prey,
And calls it heavenly moisture, air of grace;
Wishing her cheeks were gardens full of
flowers,
So they were dew'd with such distilling
showers.

Look, how a bird lies tangled in a net,
So fast'n'd in her arms Adonis lies;
Pure shame and aw'd resistance made him
fret,

Which bred more beauty in his angry eyes.
Rain added to a river that is rank
Perforce will force it overflow the bank.

Still she entreats, and prettily entreats,
For to a pretty ear she tunes her tale;
Still is he sullen, still he lours and frets,
'Twixt crimson shame and anger ashy-pale.
Being red, she loves him best; and being
white,
Her best is better'd with a more delight.

Look how he can, she cannot choose but love;
And by her fair immortal hand she swears
From his soft bosom never to remove Till he take truce with her contending tears,
Which long have rain'd, making her cheeks
all wet;
And one sweet kiss shall pay this countless
debt.

Upon this promise did he raise his chin,
Like a dive-dapper peering through a wave,

Who, being look'd on, ducks as quickly in ;
 So offers he to give what she did crave ;
 But when her lips were ready for his pay,
 He winks, and turns his lips another way. 90

Never did passenger in summer's heat
 More thirst for drink than she for this good turn.

Her help she sees, but help she cannot get ;
 She bathes in water, yet her fire must burn.
 "O, pity," can she cry, "flint-hearted boy ! 95
 'Tis but a kiss I beg ; why art thou coy ?

"I have been wooed, as I entreat thee now,
 Even by the stern and direful god of war,
 Whose sinewy neck in battle ne'er did bow,
 Who conquers where he comes in every jar ; 100
 Yet hath he been my captive and my slave,
 And begg'd for that which thou unask'd shalt have.

"Over my altars hath he hung his lance,
 His batt'rd shield, his uncontrolled crest,
 And for my sake hath learn'd to sport and
 dance, 105
 To toy, to wanton, dally, smile, and jest,
 Scorning his churlish drum and ensign red,
 Making my arms his field, his tent my bed.

"Thus he that overrul'd I overswayed,
 Leading him prisoner in a red-rose chain ; 110
 Strong-temper'd steel his stronger strength obeyed,
 Yet was he servile to my coy disdain.
 O, be not proud, nor brag not of thy might,
 For mastering her that foil'd the god of
 fight !

"Touch but my lips with those fair lips of
 thine, — 115
 Though mine be not so fair, yet are they red, —
 The kiss shall be thine own as well as mine.
 What seest thou in the ground ? Hold up thy
 head ;
 Look in mine eye-balls, there thy beauty lies ;
 Then why not lips on lips, since eyes in
 eyes ? 120

"Art thou asham'd to kiss ? Then wink again,
 And I will wink ; so shall the day seem night ;
 Love keeps his revels where there are but
 twain ;
 Be bold to play, our sport is not in sight ;
 These blue-vein'd violets whereon we lean 125
 Never can blab, nor know not what we mean.

"The tender spring upon thy tempting lip Shows thee unripe ; yet mayst thou well be tasted.
 Make use of time, let not advantage slip ;
 Beauty within itself should not be wasted. 130 Fair flowers that are not gath'rd in their prime
 Rot and consume themselves in little time.

"Were I hard-favour'd, foul, or wrinkled-old,
 Ill-nurtur'd, crooked, churlish, harsh in voice,

O'erworn, despised, rheumatic, and cold, 135
 Thick-sighted, barren, lean, and lacking juice, Then mightst thou pause, for then I were not for thee ;
 But having no defects, why dost abhor me ?

"Thou canst not see one wrinkle in my brow ;
 Mine eyes are grey and bright and quick in turning ; 140
 My beauty as the spring doth yearly grow,
 My flesh is soft and plump, my marrow burn-
 ing ;
 My smooth moist hand, were it with thy hand felt,
 Would in thy palm dissolve, or seem to melt.

"Bid me discourse, I will enchant thine ear,
 Or, like a fairy, trip upon the green, 145
 Or, like a nymph, with long dishevelled hair,
 Dance on the sands, and yet no footing seen.
 Love is a spirit all compact of fire,
 Not gross to sink, but light, and will aspire. 150

"Witness this primrose bank whereon I lie ;
 These forceless flowers like sturdy trees support me ;
 Two strengthless doves will draw me through the sky
 From morn till night, even where I list to sport
 me.

Is love so light, sweet boy, and may it be 155
 That thou should think it heavy unto thee ?

"Is thine own heart to thine own face affected ?
 Can thy right hand seize love upon thy left ?
 Then woo thyself, be of thyself rejected,
 Steal thine own freedom and complain on theft.
 Narcissus so himself himself forsook, 160
 And died to kiss his shadow in the brook.

"Torches are made to light, jewels to wear,
 Dainties to taste, fresh beauty for the use,
 Herbs for their smell, and sappy plants to
 bear ; 165
 Things growing to themselves are growth's abuse.
 Seeds spring from seeds and beauty breedeth beauty ;
 Thou wast begot ; to get it is thy duty.

"Upon the earth's increase why shouldst thou feed,
 Unless the earth with thy increase be fed ? 170
 By law of nature thou art bound to breed,
 That thine may live when thou thyself art
 dead ;
 And so, in spite of death, thou dost survive,
 In that thy likeness still is left alive."

By this the love-sick queen began to sweat, 175
 For where they lay the shadow had forsook
 them,
 And Titan, tired in the mid-day heat,
 With burning eye did hotly overlook them ;
 Wishing Adonis had his team to guide,
 So he were like him and by Venus' side. 180

And now Adonis, with a lazy spright,
And with a heavy, dark, disliking eye,
His louring brows o'erwhelming his fair sight,
Like misty vapours when they blot the sky, Souring his cheeks, cries, "Fie, no more of
love!"

The sun doth burn my face; I must remove."

"Ay me," quoth Venus, "young, and so unkind?"

What bare excuses mak'st thou to be gone!
I'll sigh celestial breath, whose gentle wind
Shall cool the heat of this descending sun: 180
I'll make a shadow for thee of my hairs;
If they burn too, I'll quench them with my
tears.

"The sun that shines from heaven shines but
warm,

And, lo, I lie between that sun and thee; 194
The heat I have from thence doth little harm.
Thine eye darts forth the fire that burneth
me;

And were I not immortal, life were done
Between this heavenly and earthly sun.

"Art thou obdurate, flinty, hard as steel, Nay, more than flint, for stone at rain relent-
eth?" 200

Art thou a woman's son, and canst not feel
What 't is to love? how want of love torment-
eth?"

O, had thy mother borne so hard a mind,
She had not brought forth thee, but died un-
kind.

"What am I, that thou shouldst contemn me
this?" 205

Or what great danger dwells upon my suit?
What were thy lips the worse for one poor kiss?
Speak, fair; but speak fair words, or else be mute.

Give me one kiss, I'll give it thee again, 209
And one for interest, if thou wilt have twain.

"Fie, lifeless picture, cold and senseless stone,
Well-painted idol, image dull and dead,
Statue contenting but the eye alone,
Thing like a man, but of no woman bred!

Thou art no man, though of a man's complexion, 215
For men will kiss even by their own direction."

This said, impatience chokes her pleading
tongue,

And swelling passion doth provoke a pause.
Red cheeks and fiery eyes blaze forth her
wrong;

Being judge in love, she cannot right her cause;
And now she weeps, and now she fain would
speak, 221

And now her sobs do her intendments break.

Sometimes she shakes her head and then his
hand,

Now gazeth she on him, now on the ground;

Sometimes her arms infold him like a band: 225
She would, he will not in her arms be bound;
And when from thence he struggles to be
gone,
She locks her lily fingers one in one.

Fondling, she saith, "Since I have hemm'd thee here

Within the circuit of this ivory pale, 230
I'll be a park, and thou shalt be my deer:
Feed where thou wilt, on mountain or in dale;
Graze on my lips; and if those hills be dry,
Stray lower, where the pleasant fountains lie.

"Within this limit is relief enough, 235
Sweet bottom-grass and high delightful plain, Round rising hillocks, brakes obscure and rough,

To shelter thee from tempest and from rain:
Then be my deer, since I am such a park;
No dog shall rouse thee, though a thousand bark." 240

At this Adonis smiles as in disdain,
That in each cheek appears a pretty dimple.
Love made those hollows, if himself were slain,
He might be buried in a tomb so simple;
Foreknowing well, if there he came to lie, 245
Why, there Love liv'd and there he could not die.

These lovely caves, these round enchanting pits,

Open'd their mouths to swallow Venus' liking.
Being mad before, how doth she now for wits?
Struck dead at first, what needs a second strik-
ing?" 250

Poor Queen of love, in thine own law forlorn,
To love a cheek that smiles at thee in scorn!

Now which way shall she turn? What shall she say?

Her words are done, her woes the more increasing;

The time is spent, her object will away, 255
And from her twining arms doth urge releasing.

"Pity," she cries, "some favour, some remorse!"

Away he springs and hasteth to his horse.

But, lo, from forth a copse that neighbours by,
A breeding jennet, lusty, young, and proud, 260
Adonis' trampling courser doth espy,
And forth she rushes, snorts and neighs aloud.

The strong-neck'd steed, being tied unto a
tree,

Breaketh his rein, and to her straight goes
he.

Imperiously he leaps, he neighs, he bounds, 265
And now his woven girths he breaks asunder;
The bearing earth with his hard hoof he
wounds,

Whose hollow womb resounds like heaven's
thunder;

The iron bit he crusheth 'tween his teeth,
Controlling what he was controlled with, 270

His ears up-prick'd ; his braided hanging mane
Upon his compass'd crest now stand on end ;
His nostrils drink the air, and forth again,
As from a furnace, vapours doth he send ;
His eye, which scornfully glisters like fire, 275
Shows his hot courage and his high desire.

Sometime he trots, as if he told the steps,
With gentle majesty and modest pride ;
Anon he rears upright, curvets, and leaps,
As who should say, "Lo, thus my strength is tried, 280
And this I do to captivate the eye
Of the fair breeder that is standing by."

What reckoneth he his rider's angry stir,
His flattering "Holla," or his "Stand, I say" ?
What cares he now for curb or pricking
spur ? 285

For rich caparisons or trappings gay ?
He sees his love, and nothing else he sees,
For nothing else with his proud sight agrees.

Look, when a painter would surpass the life
In limning out a well-proportioned steed, 290
His art with nature's workmanship at strife,
As if the dead the living should exceed ;
So did this horse excel a common one
In shape, in courage, colour, pace, and bone.

Round-hoof'd, short-jointed, fetlocks shag and
long, 295
Broad breast, full eye, small head, and nostril
wide,
High crest, short ears, straight legs and passing strong,
Thin mane, thick tail, broad buttock, tender
hide :
Look, what a horse should have he did not lack,
Save a proud rider on so proud a back. 300

Sometime he scuds far off and there he stares ;
Anon he starts at stirring of a feather ;
To bid the wind a base he now prepares,
And wh'er he run or fly they know not whether ;
For through his mane and tail the high wind
sings, 305
Fanning the hairs, who wave like feath' red wings.

He looks upon his love and neighs unto her ;
She answers him as if she knew his mind ;
Being proud, as females are, to see him woo
her,
She puts on outward strangeness, seems un-
kind, 310
Spurns at his love, and scorns the heat he feels ;
Beating his kind embracements with her
heels.

Then, like a melancholy malcontent,
He vails his tail that, like a falling plume,
Cool shadow to his melting buttock lent ; 315
He stamps and bites the poor flies in his fume.

His love, perceiving how he is enrag'd,
Grew kinder, and his fury was assuag'd.

His testy master goeth about to take him ;
When, lo, the unback'd breeder, full of fear, 320
Jealous of catching, swiftly doth forsake him,
With her the horse, and left Adonis there.

As they were mad, unto the wood they hie
them,
Out-stripping crows that strive to over-fly
them.

All swoln with chafing, down Adonis sits, 325
Banning his boisterous and unruly beast ;
And now the happy season once more fits,
That love-sick Love by pleading may be blest ;
For lovers say, the heart hath treble wrong
When it is barr'd the aidance of the
tongue. 330

An oven that is stopp'd, or river stay'd,
Burneth more hotly, swelleth with more rage ;
So of concealed sorrow may be said ;
Free vent of words love's fire doth assuage ;
But when the heart's attorney once is
mute, 335
The client breaks, as desperate in his suit.

He sees her coming, and begins to glow,
Even as a dying coal revives with wind,
And with his bonnet hides his angry brow ;
Looks on the dull earth with disturbed mind, 340
Taking no notice that she is so nigh,
For all askance he holds her in his eye.

O, what a sight it was, wistly to view
How she came stealing to the wayward boy !
To note the fighting conflict of her hue, 345
How white and red each other did destroy !
But now her cheek was pale, and by and by
It flash'd forth fire, as lightning from the sky.

Now was she just before him as he sat,
And like a lowly lover down she kneels ; 350
With one fair hand she heaveth up his hat,
Her other tender hand his fair cheek feels :
His tenderer cheek receives her soft hand's print
As apt as new-fallen snow takes any dint.

O, what a war of looks was then between
them ! 355
Her eyes petitioners to his eyes suing ;
His eyes saw her eyes as they had not seen
them ;
Her eyes wooed still, his eyes disdain'd the wooing :
And all this dumb play had his acts made
plain
With tears, which, chorus-like, her eyes did rain. 360

Full gently now she takes him by the hand,
A lily prison'd in a gaol of snow,
Or ivory in an alabaster band ;
So white a friend engirts so white a foe.

This beauteous combat, wilful and unwilling,
Show'd like two silver doves that sit a-billing.

Once more the engine of her thoughts began:
"O fairest mover on this mortal round,
Would thou wert as I am, and I a man,
My heart all whole as thine, thy heart my
wound;
For one sweet look thy help I would assure
thee,
Though nothing but my body's bane would cure thee."

"Give me my hand," saith he, "why dost thou feel it?"

"Give me my heart," saith she, "and thou shalt have it;
O, give it me, lest thy hard heart do steel it,
And being steel'd, soft sighs can never grave it:
Then love's deep groans I never shall regard,
Because Adonis' heart hath made mine
hard."

"For shame," he cries, "let go, and let me
go;
My day's delight is past, my horse is gone,
And 'tis your fault I am bereft him so.
I pray you hence, and leave me here alone;
For all my mind, my thought, my busy care,
Is how to get my palfrey from the mare."

Thus she replies: "Thy palfrey, as he should,
Welcomes the warm approach of sweet desire;
Affection is a coal that must be cool'd,
Else, suffer'd, it will set the heart on fire.
The sea hath bounds, but deep desire hath
none;
Therefore no marvel though thy horse be
gone."

"How like a jade he stood, tied to the tree,
Servilely master'd with a leathern rein!
But when he saw his love, his youth's fair fee,
He held such petty bondage in disdain;
Throwing the base thong from his bending
crest,
Enfranchising his mouth, his back, his breast."

"Who sees his true-love in her naked bed,
Teaching the sheets a whiter hue than white,
But, when his glutton eye so full hath fed,
His other agents aim at like delight?
Who is so faint, that dare not be so bold
To touch the fire, the weather being cold?"

"Let me excuse thy courser, gentle boy;
And learn of him, I heartily beseech thee,
To take advantage on presented joy;
Though I were dumb, yet his proceedings teach thee.
O, learn to love; the lesson is but plain,
And once made perfect, never lost again."

"I know not love," quoth he, "nor will not know it,
Unless it be a boar, and then I chase it;

'T is much to borrow, and I will not owe it;
My love to love is love but to disgrace it;
For I have heard it is a life in death,
That laughs and weeps, and all but with a
breath.

"Who wears a garment shapeless and un-finish'd?
Who plucks the bud before one leaf put forth?
If springing things be any jot diminish'd,
They wither in their prime, prove nothing
worth.
The colt that's back'd and burden'd being young,
Loseth his pride and never waxeth strong."

"You hurt my hand with wringing; let us
part,
And leave this idle theme, this bootless chat;
Remove your siege from my unyielding heart;
To love's alarms it will not ope the gate;
Dismiss your vows, your feigned tears, your flattery;
For where a heart is hard they make no battery."

"What! canst thou talk?" quoth she, "hast
thou a tongue?
O, would thou hadst not, or I had no hearing!
Thy mermaid's voice hath done me double
wrong;
I had my load before, now press'd with bear-
ing:
Melodious discord, heavenly tune harsh-sounding,
Ear's deep sweet music, and heart's deep sore wounding."

"Had I no eyes but ears, my ears would love
That inward beauty and invisible;
Or were I deaf, thy outward parts would move
Each part in me that were but sensible:
Though neither eyes nor ears to hear nor see,
Yet should I be in love by touching thee."

"Say, that the sense of feeling were bereft me,
And that I could not see, nor hear, nor touch,
And nothing but the very smell were left me,
Yet would my love to thee be still as much;
For from the stillitory of thy face excelling:
Comes breath perfum'd that breedeth love by smelling."

"But, O, what banquet wert thou to the taste,
Being nurse and feeder of the other four!
Would they not wish the feast might ever last,
And bid Suspicion double-lock the door,
Lest Jealousy, that sour unwelcome guest,
Should, by his stealing in, disturb the feast?"

Once more the ruby-colour'd portal open'd,
Which to his speech did honey passage yield;
Like a red morn, that ever yet betoken'd
Wreck to the seaman, tempest to the field,

Sorrow to shepherds, woe unto the birds, 455
Gusts and foul flaws to herdmen and to herds.

This ill presage advisably she marketh:
Even as the wind is hush'd before it raineth,
Or as the wolf doth grin before he barketh,
Or as the berry breaks before it staineth, 460
Or like the deadly bullet of a gun,
His meaning struck her ere his words begun.

And at his look she flatly falleth down,
For looks kill love and love by looks reviveth;
A smile recures the wounding of a frown; 465
But blessed bankrupt, that by love so thriveth!
The silly boy, believing she is dead,
Claps her pale cheek, till clapping makes it red;

And all amaz'd brake off his late intent,
For sharply he did think to reprehend her, 470
Which cunning love did wittily prevent:
Fair fall the wit that can so well defend her!
For on the grass she lies as she were slain,
Till his breath breatheth life in her again.

He wrings her nose, he strikes her on the
cheeks, 475
He bends her fingers, holds her pulses hard,
He chafes her lips; a thousand ways he seeks
To mend the hurt that his unkindness marr'd:
He kisses her; and she by her good will
Will never rise, so he will kiss her still. 480

The night of sorrow now is turn'd to day:
Her two blue windows faintly she up-heaveth,
Like the fair sun, when in his fresh array
He cheers the morn and all the earth relieveth;
And as the bright sun glorifies the sky, 485
So is her face illumin'd with her eye;

Whose beams upon his hairless face are fix'd,
As if from thence they borrowed all their shine.
Were never four such lamps together mix'd,
Had not his clouded with his brow's repine; 490
But hers, which through the crystal tears
gave light,
Shone like the moon in water seen by night.

"O, where am I?" quoth she; "in earth or
heaven,
Or in the ocean drench'd, or in the fire?
What hour is this? or morn or weary even? 495
Do I delight to die, or life desire?
But now I liv'd, and life was death's annoy;
But now I died, and death was lively joy.

"O, thou didst kill me; kill me once again.
Thy eyes' shrewd tutor, that hard heart of
thine, 500
Hath taught them scornful tricks and such disdain
That they have murd' red this poor heart of
mine;
And these mine eyes, true leaders to their
queen,
But for thy piteous lips no more had seen.

"Long may they kiss each other, for this cure!
O, never let their crimson liveries wear! 506
And as they last, their verdure still endure
To drive infection from the dangerous year!
That the star-gazers, having writ on death,
May say the plague is banish'd by thy breath.

"Pure lips, sweet seals in my soft lips imprinted, 511
What bargains may I make, still to be sealing?
To sell myself I can be well contented,
So thou wilt buy and pay and use good dealing;
Which purchase if thou make, for fear of slips 515
Set thy seal-manual on my wax-red lips.

"A thousand kisses buys my heart from me;
And pay them at thy leisure, one by one,
What is ten hundred touches unto thee?
Are they not quickly told and quickly gone? 520 Say, for non-payment that the debt should double,
Is twenty hundred kisses such a trouble?"

"Fair queen," quoth he, "if any love you owe
me,
Measure my strangeness with my unripe years;
Before I know myself, seek not to know me: 525
No fisher but the ungrown fry forbears;
The mellow plum doth fall, the green sticks
fast,
Or being early pluck'd is sour to taste.

"Look, the world's comforter with weary gait
His day's hot task hath ended in the west; 530
The owl, night's herald, shrieks; 'tis very late;
The sheep are gone to fold, birds to their nest;
And coal-black clouds that shadow heaven's
light
Do summon us to part and bid good-night.

"Now let me say 'Good-night,' and so say you;
Before I will say so, you shall have a kiss." 536
"Good-night," quoth she, and, ere he says
"Adieu,"

The honey fee of parting tend' red is:
Her arms do lend his neck a sweet embrace;
Incorporate then they seem; face grows to
face; 540

Till, breathless, he disjoin'd, and backward drew
The heavenly moisture, that sweet coral mouth,
Whose precious taste her thirsty lips well knew,
Whereon they surfeit, yet complain on drouth.
He with her plenty press'd, she faint with dearth, 545
Their lips together glued, fall to the earth.

Now quick desire hath caught the yielding prey,
And glutton-like she feeds, yet never filleth;
Her lips are conquerors, his lips obey,
Paying what ransom the insulter willet; 550
Whose vulture thought doth pitch the price
so high
That she will draw his lips' rich treasure dry.

And having felt the sweetness of the spoil,
 With blindfold fury she begins to forage;
 Her face doth reek and smoke, her blood doth boil, 555
 And careless lust stirs up a desperate courage;
 Planting oblivion, beating reason back,
 Forgetting shame's pure blush and honour's
 wrack.

Hot, faint, and weary, with her hard embrac-
 ing,
 Like a wild bird being tam'd with too much handling, 560
 Or as the fleet-foot roe that 's tir'd with chas-
 ing,
 Or like the froward infant still'd with dandling,
 He now obeys, and now no more resisteth,
 While she takes all she can, not all she list-
 eth.

What wax so frozen but dissolves with temp'ring, 565
 And yields at last to every light impression?
 Things out of hope are compass'd oft with ven-t'ring,
 Chiefly in love, whose leave exceeds commission:
 Affection faints not like a pale-fac'd coward,
 But then woos best when most his choice is froward. 570

When he did frown, O, had she then gave over,
 Such nectar from his lips she had not suck'd.
 Foul words and frowns must not repel a lover;
 What though the rose have prickles, yet 'tis pluck'd.
 Were beauty under twenty locks kept fast,
 Yet love breaks through and picks them all
 at last. 575

For pity now she can no more detain him;
 The poor fool prays her that he may depart:
 She is resolv'd no longer to restrain him;
 Bids him farewell, and look well to her
 heart, 580
 The which, by Cupid's bow she doth protest,
 He carries thence incaged in his breast.

"Sweet boy," she says, "this night I'll waste
 in sorrow,
 For my sick heart commands mine eyes to watch.
 Tell me, Love's master, shall we meet tomorrow? 585
 Say, shall we? shall we? Wilt thou make the match?"
 He tells her, no; to-morrow he intends
 To hunt the boar with certain of his friends.

"The boar!" quoth she; whereat a sudden pale,
 Like lawn being spread upon the blushing
 rose, 590
 Usurps her cheek; she trembles at his tale,
 And on his neck her yoking arms she throws:
 She sinketh down, still hanging by his neck,
 He on her belly falls, she on her back.

Now is she in the very lists of love, 595
 Her champion mounted for the hot encounter:
 All is imaginary she doth prove,
 He will not manage her, although he mount
 her;
 That worse than Tantalus' is her annoy,
 To clip Elysium and to lack her joy. 600

Even so poor birds, deceiv'd with painted grapes,
 Do surfeit by the eye and pine the maw;
 Even so she languisheth in her mishaps,
 As those poor birds that helpless berries saw.
 The warm effects which she in him finds
 missing, 605
 She seeks to kindle with continual kissing.

But all in vain; good queen, it will not be.
 She hath assay'd as much as may be prov'd;
 Her pleading hath deserv'd a greater fee;
 She's Love, she loves, and yet she is not lov'd. 610
 "Fie, fie," he says, "you crush me; let me go;
 You have no reason to withhold me so."

"Thou hadst been gone," quoth she, "sweet boy, ere this,
 But that thou told'st me thou wouldst hunt
 the boar.
 O, be advis'd! thou know'st not what it is 615
 With javelin's point a churlish swine to gore,
 Whose tushes never sheath'd he whetteth
 still,
 Like to a mortal butcher bent to kill.

"On his bow-back he hath a battle set
 Of bristly pikes, that ever threat his foes; 620
 His eyes, like glow-worms, shine when he doth
 fret;
 His snout digs sepulchres where'er he goes;
 Being mov'd, he strikes whate'er is in his
 way,
 And whom he strikes his crooked tushes slay.

"His brawny sides, with hairy bristles armed,
 Are better proof than thy spear's point can enter; 625
 His short thick neck cannot be easily harmed;
 Being ireful, on the lion he will venture.
 The thorny brambles and embracing bushes,
 As fearful of him, part, through whom he rushes. 630

"Alas, he nought esteems that face of thine,
 To which Love's eyes pays tributary gazes;
 Nor thy soft hands, sweet lips, and crystal eyne,
 Whose full perfection all the world amazes;
 But having thee at vantage, — wondrous dread! — 635
 Would root these beauties as he roots the mead.

"O, let him keep his loathsome cabin still;
 Beauty hath nought to do with such foul fiends.
 Come not within his danger by thy will;
 They that thrive well take counsel of their
 friends. 640

When thou didst name the bear, not to dis-
semble,
I fear'd thy fortune, and my joints did tremble.

"Didst thou not mark my face? Was it not white?

Saw'st thou not signs of fear lurk in mine eye?
Grew I not faint? and fell I not downright?⁶⁴⁵
Within my bosom, whereon thou dost lie,
My boding heart pants, beats, and takes no
rest,
But, like an earthquake, shakes thee on my breast.

"For where Love reigns, disturbing Jealousy
Doth call himself Affection's sentinel;⁶⁵⁰
Gives false alarms, suggesteth mutiny,
And in a peaceful hour doth cry, 'Kill, kill!'
Distemp'ring gentle Love in his desire,
As air and water do abate the fire.

"This sour informer, this bate-breeding spy,⁶⁵⁵
This canker that eats up Love's tender spring,
This carry-tale, dissentious Jealousy,
That sometime true news, sometime false doth
bring,
Knocks at my heart and whispers in mine
ear
That if I love thee, I thy death should fear:

"And more than so, presenteth to mine eye⁶⁶¹
The picture of an angry chafing boar,
Under whose sharp fangs on his back doth lie
An image like thyself, all stain'd with gore;
Whose blood upon the fresh flowers being shed⁶⁶⁵
Doth make them droop with grief and hang the head.

"What should I do, seeing thee so indeed,
That tremble at the imagination?
The thought of it doth make my faint heart
bleed,
And fear doth teach it divination:⁶⁷⁰
I prophesy thy death, my living sorrow,
If thou encounter with the boar to-morrow.

"But if thou needs wilt hunt, be rul'd by me;
Uncouple at the timorous flying hare,
Or at the fox which lives by subtlety,⁶⁷⁵
Or at the roe which no encounter dare:
Pursue these fearful creatures o'er the downs,
And on thy well-breath'd horse keep with thy hounds.

"And when thou hast on foot the purblind
hare,⁶⁷⁹
Mark the poor wretch, to overshoot his troubles
How he outruns the wind, and with what care
He cranks and crosses with a thousand doubles.
The many musets through the which he goes
Are like a labyrinth to amaze his foes.

"Sometime he runs among a flock of sheep,⁶⁸⁵
To make the cunning hounds mistake their smell,

And sometime where earth-delving conies keep,
To stop the loud pursuers in their yell,
And sometime sorteth with a herd of deer;—
Danger deviseth shifts; wit waits on fear;—

"For there his smell with others being mingled,⁶⁹¹
The hot scent-snuffing hounds are driven to
doubt,
Ceasing their clamorous cry till they have singled
With much ado the cold fault cleanly out;
Then do they spend their mouths: Echo replies,⁶⁹⁵
As if another chase were in the skies.

"By this, poor Wat, far off upon a hill,
Stands on his hinder legs with list'ning ear,
To hearken if his foes pursue him still.
Anon their loud alarms he doth hear;⁷⁰⁰
And now his grief may be compared well
To one sore sick that hears the passing-bell.

"Then shalt thou see the dew-bedabbled
wretch
Turn, and return, indenting with the way;
Each envious brier his weary legs doth scratch,⁷⁰⁵
Each shadow makes him stop, each murmur
stay:
For misery is trodden on by many,
And, being low, never reliev'd by any.

"Lie quietly, and hear a little more;
Nay, do not struggle, for thou shalt not rise.⁷¹⁰
To make thee hate the hunting of the boar,
Unlike myself thou hear'st me moralize,
Applying this to that, and so to so;
For love can comment upon every woe.

"Where did I leave?" "No matter where,"
quoth he;⁷¹⁵
"Leave me, and then the story aptly ends;
The night is spent." "Why, what of that?"
quoth she.
"I am," quoth he, "expected of my friends;
And now 't is dark, and going I shall fall."
"In night," quoth she, "desire sees best of all."⁷²⁰

"But if thou fall, O, then imagine this,
The earth, in love with thee, thy footing trips,
And all is but to rob thee of a kiss.
Rich preys make true men thieves; so do thy lips⁷²⁵
Make modest Dian cloudy and forlorn,
Lest she should steal a kiss and die forsworn.

"Now of this dark night I perceive the reason:
Cynthia for shame obscures her silver shine,
Till forging Nature be condemn'd of treason
For stealing moulds from heaven that were divine;⁷³⁰
Wherein she fram'd thee in high heaven's despite,
To shame the sun by day and her by night.

"And therefore hath she brib'd the Destinies
To cross the curious workmanship of Nature,
To mingle beauty with infirmities, ⁷³⁵
And pure perfection with impure defeature,
Making it subject to the tyranny
Of mad mischances and much misery;

"As burning fevers, agues pale and faint,
Life-poisoning pestilence and frenzies wild, ⁷⁴⁰
The marrow-eating sickness, whose attaint
Disorder breeds by heating of the blood;
Surfeits, imposthumes, grief, and damn'd despair,
Swear Nature's death for framing thee so
fair.

"And not the least of all these maladies ⁷⁴⁵
But in one minute's fight brings beauty under;
Both favour, savour, hue, and qualities,
Whereat the impartial gazer late did wonder,
Are on the sudden wasted, thaw'd and done,
As mountain-snow melts with the midday
sun. ⁷⁵⁰

"Therefore, despite of fruitless chastity,
Love-lacking vestals and self-loving nuns,
That on the earth would breed a scarcity
And barren dearth of daughters and of sons,
Be prodigal: the lamp that burns by night ⁷⁵⁵
Dries up his oil to lend the world his light.

"What is thy body but a swallowing grave,
Seeming to bury that posterity
Which by the rights of time thou needs must have,
If thou destroy them not in dark obscurity? ⁷⁶⁰
If so, the world will hold thee in disdain,
Sith in thy pride so fair a hope is slain.

"So in thyself thyself art made away;
A mischief worse than civil home-bred strife,
Or theirs whose desperate hands themselves do slay, ⁷⁶⁵
Or butcher-sire that reaves his son of life.
Foul-cank'ring rust the hidden treasure frets,
But gold that 's put to use more gold begets."

"Nay, then," quoth Adon, "you will fall again ⁷⁷⁰
Into your idle over-handled theme.
The kiss I gave you is bestow'd in vain,
And all in vain you strive against the stream;
For, by this black-fac'd Night, Desire's foul nurse,
Your treatise makes me like you worse and worse. ⁷⁷⁴

"If love have lent you twenty thousand tongues,
And every tongue more moving than your
own,
Bewitching like the wanton mermaid's songs,
Yet from mine ear the tempting tune is blown;
For know, my heart stands armed in mine
ear,
And will not let a false sound enter there, ⁷⁸⁰

"Lest the deceiving harmony should run
Into the quiet closure of my breast;
And then my little heart were quite undone,
In his bedchamber to be barr'd of rest.
No, lady, no; my heart longs not to groan, ⁷⁸⁵
But soundly sleeps, while now it sleeps alone.

"What have you urg'd that I cannot reprove?
The path is smooth that leadeth on to danger.
I hate not love, but your device in love,
That lends embracements unto every stranger.
You do it for increase: O strange excuse, ⁷⁹¹
When reason is the bawd to lust's abuse!

"Call it not love, for Love to heaven is fled,
Since sweating Lust on earth usurp'd his name;
Under whose simple semblance he hath fed ⁷⁹⁵
Upon fresh beauty, blotting it with blame;
Which the hot tyrant stains and soon be-reaves,
As caterpillars do the tender leaves.

"Love comforteth like sunshine after rain,
But Lust's effect is tempest after sun; ⁸⁰⁰
Love's gentle spring doth always fresh remain,
Lust's winter comes ere summer half be done;
Love surfeits not, Lust like a glutton dies;
Love is all truth, Lust full of forged lies.

"More I could tell, but more I dare not say; ⁸⁰⁵
The text is old, the orator too green.
Therefore, in sadness, now I will away;
My face is full of shame, my heart of teen;
Mine ears, that to your wanton talk attended,
Do burn themselves for having so offended."

With this, he breaketh from the sweet embrace, ⁸¹¹
Of those fair arms which bound him to her
breast,
And homeward through the dark laund runs apace;
Leaves Love upon her back deeply distress'd.
Look, how a bright star shooteth from the sky, ⁸¹⁵
So glides he in the night from Venus' eye;

Which after him she darts, as one on shore
Gazing upon a late-embarked friend,
Till the wild waves will have him seen no more,
Whose ridges with the meeting clouds contend; ⁸²⁰
So did the merciless and pitchy night
Fold in the object that did feed her sight.

Whereat amaz'd, as one that unaware
Hath dropp'd a precious jewel in the flood,
Or stonish'd as night-wanderers often are, ⁸²⁵
Their light blown out in some mistrustful wood,
Even so confounded in the dark she lay,
Having lost the fair discovery of her way.

And now she beats her heart, whereat it groans,
That all the neighbour caves, as seeming troubled, ⁸³⁰
Make verbal repetition of her moans;
Passion on passion deeply is redoubled;

"Ay me!" she cries, and twenty times;
 "Woe, woe!"
 And twenty echoes twenty times cry so.

She marking them begins a wailing note ⁸³⁵
 And sings extemporally a woeful ditty;
 How love makes young men thrall and old men
 dote;
 How love is wise in folly, foolish-witty.
 Her heavy anthem still concludes in woe,
 And still the choir of echoes answer so. ⁸⁴⁰

Her song was tedious and outwore the night,
 For lovers' hours are long, though seeming short;
 If pleas'd themselves, others, they think, de-
 light
 In such-like circumstance, with such-like sport:
 Their copious stories oftentimes begun ⁸⁴⁵
 End without audience and are never done.

For who hath she to spend the night withal
 But idle sounds resembling parasites,
 Like shrill-tongu'd tapsters answering every
 call,
 Soothing the humour of fantastic wits? ⁸⁵⁰
 She says, "T is so:" they answer all,
 "T is so;"
 And would say after her, if she said "No."

Lo, here the gentle lark, weary of rest,
 From his moist cabinet mounts up on high,
 And wakes the morning, from whose silver breast ⁸⁵⁵
 The sun ariseth in his majesty;
 Who doth the world so glorious behold
 That cedar-tops and hills seem burnish'd gold.

Venus salutes him with this fair good-mor-
 row:
 "O thou clear god, and patron of all light, ⁸⁶⁰
 From whom each lamp and shining star doth borrow
 The beauteous influence that makes him bright,
 There lives a son that suck'd an earthly
 mother,
 May lend thee light, as thou dost lend to
 other."

This said, she hasteth to a myrtle grove, ⁸⁶⁵
 Musing the morning is so much o'erworn,
 And yet she hears no tidings of her love.
 She hearkens for his hounds and for his horn;
 Anon she hears them chant it lustily,
 And all in haste she coasteth to the cry. ⁸⁷⁰

And as she runs, the bushes in the way
 Some catch her by the neck, some kiss her face,
 Some twine about her thigh to make her stay.
 She wildly breaketh from their strict embrace,
 Like a milch doe, whose swelling dugs do ache, ⁸⁷⁵
 Hasting to feed her fawn hid in some brake.

By this, she hears the hounds are at a bay;
 Whereat she starts, like one that spies an adder

Wreath'd up in fatal folds just in his way,
 The fear whereof doth make him shake and shudder; ⁸⁸⁰
 Even so the timorous yelping of the hounds
 Appalls her senses and her spirit confounds.

For now she knows it is no gentle chase,
 But the blunt boar, rough bear, or lion proud,
 Because the cry remaineth in one place, ⁸⁸⁵
 Where fearfully the dogs exclaim aloud.
 Finding their enemy to be so curst,
 They all strain courtesy who shall cope him first.

This dismal cry rings sadly in her ear,
 Through which it enters to surprise her heart; ⁸⁹⁰
 Who, overcome by doubt and bloodless fear,
 With cold-pale weakness numbs each feeling
 part.
 Like soldiers, when their captain once doth yield,
 They basely fly and dare not stay the field.

Thus stands she in a trembling ecstasy; ⁸⁹⁵
 Till, cheering up her senses all dismay'd,
 She tells them 't is a causeless fantasy
 And childish error that they are afraid;
 Bids them leave quaking, bids them fear no
 more:—
 And with that word she spied the hunted boar, ⁹⁰⁰

Whose frothy mouth, bepainted all with red,
 Like milk and blood being mingled both together,
 A second fear through all her sinews spread,
 Which madly hurries her she knows not whither:
 This way she runs, and now she will no further, ⁹⁰⁵
 But back retires to rate the boar for mur-
 ther.

A thousand spleens bear her a thousand ways;
 She treads the path that she untreads again;
 Her more than haste is mated with delays,
 Like the proceedings of a drunken brain, ⁹¹⁰
 Full of respects, yet nought at all respecting;
 In hand with all things, nought at all effect-
 ing.

Here kennell'd in a brake she finds a hound,
 And asks the weary caitiff for his master,
 And there another licking of his wound, ⁹¹⁵
 'Gainst venom'd sores the only sovereign plaster;
 And here she meets another sadly scowl-
 ing,
 To whom she speaks, and he replies with howling.

When he hath ceas'd his ill-resounding noise,
 Another flap-mouth'd mourner, black and grim, ⁹²⁰
 Against the welkin volleys out his voice;
 Another and another answer him,

Clapping their proud tails to the ground below,
Shaking their scratch'd ears, bleeding as they go.

Look, how the world's poor people are amazed
At apparitions, signs, and prodigies, 926 Whereon with fearful eyes they long have gazed,

Infusing them with dreadful prophecies;
So she at these sad signs draws up her breath,
And sighing it again, exclaims on Death. 930

"Hard-favour'd tyrant, ugly, meagre, lean, Hateful divorce of love," — thus chides she
Death, —

"Grim-grinning ghost, earth's worm, what dost thou mean

To stifle beauty and to steal his breath,
Who when he liv'd, his breath and beauty set 935

Gloss on the rose, smell to the violet?

"If he be dead, — O no, it cannot be,
Seeing his beauty, thou should'st strike at it:
O yes, it may; thou hast no eyes to see,
But hatefully at random dost thou hit. 940

Thy mark is feeble age, but thy false dart
Mistakes that aim and cleaves an infant's
heart.

"Hadst thou but bid beware, then he had
spoke,

And, hearing him, thy power had lost his power.
The Destinies will curse thee for this stroke; 945
They bid thee crop a weed, thou pluck'st a flower.

Love's golden arrow at him should have fled,
And not Death's ebon dart, to strike him
dead.

"Dost thou drink tears, that thou provok'st such weeping?"

What may a heavy groan advantage thee? 950
Why hast thou cast into eternal sleeping
Those eyes that taught all other eyes to see?

Now Nature cares not for thy mortal vigour, Since her best work is ruin'd with thy rigour."

Here overcome, as one full of despair, 955
She vail'd her eyelids, who, like sluices, stopt
The crystal tide that from her two cheeks fair
In the sweet channel of her bosom dropt;

But through the flood-gates breaks the silver
rain,

And with his strong course opens them
again. 960

O, how her eyes and tears did lend and borrow!
Her eye seen in the tears, tears in her eye;
Both crystals, where they view'd each other's sorrow.

Sorrow that kindly sighs sought still to dry;
But like a stormy day, now wind, now rain,
Sighs dry her cheeks, tears make them wet
again. 965

Variable passions throng her constant woe,
As striving who should best become her grief;
All entertain'd, each passion labours so,
That every present sorrow seemeth chief, 970
But none is best: then join they all together,
Like many clouds consulting for foul weather.

By this, far off she hears some huntsman hallo;
A nurse's song ne'er pleas'd her babe so well.
The dire imagination she did follow 975
This sound of hope doth labour to expel;
For now reviving joy bids her rejoice,
And flatters her it is Adonis' voice.

Whereat her tears began to turn their tide,
Being prison'd in her eye like pearls in glass; 980
Yet sometimes falls an orient drop beside,
Which her cheek melts, as scorning it should pass
To wash the foul face of the sluttish ground,
Who is but drunken when she seemeth
drown'd.

O hard-believing love, how strange it seems 985
Not to believe, and yet too credulous!
Thy weal and woe are both of them extremes;
Despair and hope makes thee ridiculous:

The one doth flatter thee in thoughts unlikely,
In likely thoughts the other kills thee
quickly. 990

Now she unweaves the web that she hath wrought;

Adonis lives, and Death is not to blame;
It was not she that call'd him all to nought:
Now she adds honours to his hateful name;

She clepes him king of graves and grave for kings, 995
Imperious supreme of all mortal things.

"No, no," quoth she, "sweet Death, I did but jest;

Yet pardon me I felt a kind of fear
Whenas I met the boar, that bloody beast,
Which knows no pity, but is still severe; 1000

Then, gentle shadow, — truth I must confess, —

I rail'd on thee, fearing my love's decease.

"'Tis not my fault; the boar provok'd my
tongue;

Be wreak'd on him, invisible commander;
'Tis he, foul creature, that hath done thee
wrong; 1005

I did but act, he's author of thy slander.
Grief hath two tongues, and never woman yet Could rule them both without ten women's wit."

Thus hoping that Adonis is alive,
Her rash suspect she doth extenuate; 1010
And that his beauty may the better thrive,
With Death she humbly doth insinuate;
Tells him of trophies, statues, tombs, and stories.
His victories, his triumphs, and his glories.

"O Jove," quoth she, "how much a fool was I
To be of such a weak and silly mind ¹⁰¹⁶
To wail his death who lives and must not die
Till mutual overthrow of mortal kind!

For he being dead, with him is beauty slain,
And, beauty dead, black chaos come again. ¹⁰²⁰

"Fie, fie, fond love, thou art as full of fear
As one with treasure laden, hemm'd with thieves;
Trifles, unwitnessed with eye or ear,
Thy coward heart with false bethinking grieves."

Even at this word she hears a merry horn, ¹⁰²⁵
Whereat she leaps that was but late forlorn.

As falcons to the lure, away she flies;
The grass stoops not, she treads on it so light;
And in her haste unfortunately spies
The foul boar's conquest on her fair delight; ¹⁰³⁰

Which seen, her eyes, as murd'red with the view,

Like stars asham'd of day, themselves withdrew;

Or, as the snail, whose tender horns being hit,
Shrinks backward in his shelly cave with pain,
And there, all smoth'ed up, in shade doth sit, ¹⁰³⁵

Long after fearing to creep forth again;
So, at his bloody view, her eyes are fled
Into the deep-dark cabins of her head;

Where they resign their office and their light
To the disposing of her troubled brain; ¹⁰⁴⁰
Who bids them still consort with ugly night,
And never wound the heart with looks again;

Who, like a king perplexed in his throne,
By their suggestion gives a deadly groan,

Whereat each tributary subject quakes; ¹⁰⁴⁵
As when the wind, imprison'd in the ground, Struggling for passage, earth's foundation
shakes,

Which with cold terror doth men's minds confound.

This mutiny each part doth so surprise
That from their dark beds once more leap her eyes; ¹⁰⁵⁰

And, being open'd, threw unwilling light
Upon the wide wound that the boar had trench'd

In his soft flank; whose wonted lily white
With purple tears, that his wound wept, was drench'd.

No flower was nigh, no grass, herb, leaf, or weed, ¹⁰⁵⁵

But stole his blood and seem'd with him to bleed.

This solemn sympathy poor Venus noteth;
Over one shoulder doth she hang her head;
Dumbly she passions, frantically she doteth;
She thinks he could not die, he is not dead. ¹⁰⁶⁰

Her voice is stopt, her joints forget to bow;
Her eyes are mad that they have wept till
now.

Upon his hurt she looks so steadfastly,
That her sight dazzling makes the wound seem
three;

And then she reprehends her mangling eye, ¹⁰⁶⁵
That makes more gashes where no breach should be.

His face seems twain, each several limb is doubled;

For oft the eye mistakes, the brain being troubled.

"My tongue cannot express my grief for one,
And yet," quoth she, "behold two Adons dead! ¹⁰⁷⁰

My sighs are blown away, my salt tears gone,
Mine eyes are turn'd to fire, my heart to lead:
Heavy heart's lead, melt at mine eyes' red fire!

So shall I die by drops of hot desire.

"Alas, poor world, what treasure hast thou lost! ¹⁰⁷⁵

What face remains alive that's worth the viewing?

Whose tongue is music now? What canst thou boast

Of things long since, or anything ensuing?

The flowers are sweet, their colours fresh and trim;

But true sweet beauty liv'd and died with
him. ¹⁰⁸⁰

"Bonnet nor veil henceforth no creature wear!
Nor sun nor wind will ever strive to kiss you:
Having no fair to lose, you need not fear;
The sun doth scorn you and the wind doth hiss
you:

But when Adonis liv'd, sun and sharp air ¹⁰⁸⁵ Lurk'd like two thieves, to rob him of his fair.

"And therefore would he put his bonnet on,
Under whose brim the gaudy sun would peep;
The wind would blow it off and, being gone,
Play with his locks: then would Adonis weep;
And straight, in pity of his tender years, ¹⁰⁹¹
They both would strive who first should dry his tears.

"To see his face the lion walk'd along Behind some hedge, because he would not fear
him;

To recreate himself when he hath sung, ¹⁰⁹⁵
The tiger would be tame and gently hear him;
If he had spoke, the wolf would leave his
prey

And never fright the silly lamb that day.

"When he beheld his shadow in the brook,
The fishes spread on it their golden gills; ¹¹⁰⁰
When he was by, the birds such pleasure took,
That some would sing, some other in their bills

Would bring him mulberries and ripe-red cherries;
He fed them with his sight, they him with berries. 1104

"But this foul, grim, and urchin-snouted boar,
Whose downward eye still looketh for a grave,
Ne'er saw the beauteous livery that he wore;
Witness the entertainment that he gave.
If he did see his face, why then I know
He thought to kiss him, and hath kill'd him
so. 1110

"'T is true, 't is true; thus was Adonis slain;
He ran upon the boar with his sharp spear,
Who did not whet his teeth at him again,
But by a kiss thought to persuade him there;
And nuzzling in his flank, the loving swine
Sheath'd unaware the tusk in his soft groat. 1116

"Had I been tooth'd like him, I must confess,
With kissing him I should have kill'd him first;
But he is dead, and never did he bless
My youth with his; the more am I accurst." 1120
With this, she falleth in the place she stood,
And stains her face with his congealed blood.

She looks upon his lips, and they are pale;
She takes him by the hand, and that is cold;
She whispers in his ears a heavy tale, 1125
As if they heard the woeful words she told;
She lifts the coffer-lids that close his eyes,
Where, lo, two lamps, burnt out, in darkness
lies;

Two glasses, where herself herself beheld
A thousand times, and now no more reflect; 1130
Their virtue lost, wherein they late excell'd,
And every beauty robb'd of his effect.

"Wonder of time," quoth she, "this is my spite,
That, thou being dead, the day should yet be
light.

"Since thou art dead, lo, here I prophesy: 1135
Sorrow on love hereafter shall attend;
It shall be waited on with jealousy,
Find sweet beginning, but unsavoury end,
Ne'er settled equally, but high or low,
That all love's pleasure shall not match his
woe. 1140

"It shall be fickle, false, and full of fraud,
Bud and be blasted in a breathing-while;
The bottom poison, and the top o'erstraw'd
With sweets that shall the truest sight beguile.
The strongest body shall it make most
weak, 1145
Strike the wise dumb and teach the fool to
speak.

"It shall be sparing and too full of riot,
Teaching decrepit age to tread the measures;
The staring ruffian shall it keep in quiet,
Pluck down the rich, enrich the poor with treasures; 1150

It shall be raging-mad and silly-mild,
Make the young old, the old become a child.

"It shall suspect where is no cause of fear;
It shall not fear where it should most mistrust;
It shall be merciful and too severe, 1155
And most deceiving when it seems most just;
Perverse it shall be where it shows most toward,
Put fear to valour, courage to the coward.

"It shall be cause of war and dire events,
And set dissension 'twixt the son and sire; 1160
Subject and servile to all discontents,
As dry combustious matter is to fire.
Sith in his prime Death doth my love destroy,
They that love best their loves shall not enjoy."

By this, the boy that by her side lay kill'd 1165
Was melted like a vapour from her sight,
And in his blood that on the ground lay spill'd,
A purple flower sprung up, check'd red with
white,
Resembling well his pale cheeks and the blood
Which in round drops upon their whiteness stood. 1170

She bows her head, the new-sprung flower to
smell,
Comparing it to her Adonis' breath,
And says, within her bosom it shall dwell,
Since he himself is left from her by death.
She crops the stalk, and in the breach appears 1175
Green-dropping sap, which she compares to
tears.

"Poor flower," quoth she, "this was thy father's guise—
Sweet issue of a more sweet-smelling sire—
For every little grief to wet his eyes:
To grow unto himself was his desire, 1180
And so 't is him; but know, it is as good
To wither in my breast as in his blood.

"Here was thy father's bed, here in my breast;
Thou art the next of blood, and 't is thy right.
Lo, in this hollow cradle take thy rest, 1185
My throbbing heart shall rock thee day and
night;
There shall not be one minute in an hour
Wherein I will not kiss my sweet love's
flower."

Thus weary of the world, away she hies,
And yokes her silver doves; by whose swift
aid 1190
Their mistress mounted through the empty
skies
In her light chariot quickly is convey'd; Holding their course to Paphos, where their
queen
Means to immure herself and not be seen.

THE RAPE OF LUCRECE

THE first edition of Lucrece, the source of all succeeding texts, was printed in 1594 for John Harrison by Richard Field, the original publisher of Venus and Adonis. If it is assumed that it represents the "graver labour" promised in the dedication of the earlier poem, the date of composition must have been 1593-94. Eight editions are known to have been issued by 1655.

The story of Lucrece was so widely familiar, and had been so often the theme of various kinds of artistic effort, that it is impossible to state accurately and exhaustively the sources from which Shakespeare drew his knowledge of it. The versions of Ovid and Livy, either in the original or in the translations of Golding and Painter, and that of Chaucer in the Legend of Good Women, seem certainly to have been known to him; and for the ornaments and digressions he seems to have laid under contribution many of his contemporaries. The apostrophe to Time is a commonplace, of which that to Opportunity is a Shakespearean variation. The description of the painting of the fall of Troy derives many details from Virgil's Æneid, Books i and ii. Daniel's Complaint of Rosamond (1592) seems to bear to Lucrece somewhat the same relation as Lodge's Glaucois and Scilla does to Venus and Adonis. It is written in the seven-lined stanza used here, and in the remorse of Rosamond it treats a theme closely parallel in tone and method to the laments of Lucrece.

TO THE

RIGHT HONOURABLE HENRY WRIOTHESLEY,

EARL OF SOUTHAMPTON AND BARON OF TICHFIELD.

THE love I dedicate to your Lordship is without end; whereof this pamphlet, without beginning, is but a superfluous moiety. The warrant I have of your honourable disposition, not the worth of my untutor'd lines, makes it assured of acceptance. What I have done is yours; what I have to do is yours; being part in all I have, devoted yours. Were my worth greater, my duty would show greater; meantime, as it is, it is bound to your Lordship, to whom I wish long life, still length'n'd with all happiness.

Your Lordship's in all duty,

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

THE ARGUMENT

LUCIUS TARQUINIUS, for his excessive pride surnamed Superbus, after he had caused his own father-in-law Servius Tullius to be cruelly murd'rd, and, contrary to the Roman laws and customs, not requiring or staying for the people's suffrages, had possessed himself of the kingdom, went, accompanied with his sons and other noblemen of Rome, to besiege Ardea: during which siege the principal men of the army meeting one evening at the tent of Sextus Tarquinius, the king's son, in their discourses after supper every one commended the virtues of his own wife; among whom Collatinus extolled the incomparable chastity of his wife Lucretia. In that pleasant humour they all posted to Rome; and intending, by their secret and sudden arrival, to make trial of that which every one had before avouched, only Collatinus finds his wife, though it were late in the night, spinning amongst her maids: the other ladies were all found dancing and revelling, or in several disports. Whereupon the noblemen yielded Collatinus the victory, and his wife the fame. At that time Sextus Tarquinius being inflamed with Lucrece's beauty, yet smothering his passions for the present, departed with the rest back to the camp; from whence he shortly after privily withdrew himself, and was, according to his estate, royally entertained and lodged by Lucrece at Collatium. The same night he treacherously stealeth into her chamber, violently ravish'd her, and early in the morning speedeth away. Lucrece, in this lamentable plight, hastily dispatcheth messengers, one to Rome for her father, another to the camp for Collatine. They came, the one accompanied with Junius Brutus, the other with Publius Valerius; and finding Lucrece attired in mourning habit, demanded the cause of her sorrow. She, first taking an oath of them for her revenge, revealed the actor, and whole manner of his dealing, and withal suddenly stabbed herself. Which done, with one consent they all vowed to root out the whole hated family of the Tarquins; and bearing the dead body to Rome, Brutus acquainted the people with the doer and manner of the vile deed, with a bitter invective against the tyranny of the king; wherewith the people were so moved, that with one consent and a general acclamation the Tarquins were all exiled, and the state government changed from kings to consuls.

THE RAPE OF LUCRECE

FROM the besieged Ardea all in post,
 Borne by the trustless wings of false desire,
 Lust-breathed Tarquin leaves the Roman host,
 And to Collatia bears the lightless fire
 Which, in pale embers hid, lurks to aspire ⁵
 And girdle with embracing flames the waist
 Of Collatine's fair love, Lucrece the chaste.

Haply that name of "chaste" unhappily set
 This bateless edge on his keen appetite;
 When Collatine unwisely did not let ¹⁰
 To praise the clear unmatched red and white
 Which triumph'd in that sky of his delight,
 Where mortal stars, as bright as heaven's beauties,

With pure aspects did him peculiar duties.

For he the night before, in Tarquin's tent, ¹⁵
 Unlock'd the treasure of his happy state;
 What priceless wealth the heavens had him
 lent

In the possession of his beauteous mate;
 Reck'ning his fortune at such high proud rate,

That kings might be espoused to more fame, ²⁰

But king nor peer to such a peerless dame.

O happiness enjoy'd but of a few!

And, if possess'd, as soon decay'd and done
 As is the morning's silver melting dew
 Against the golden splendour of the sun! ²⁵

An expir'd date, cancell'd ere well begun:

Honour and beauty, in the owner's arms,
 Are weakly fortress'd from a world of harms.

Beauty itself doth of itself persuade
 The eyes of men without an orator; ³⁰
 What needeth then apology be made,
 To set forth that which is so singular?
 Or why is Collatine the publisher

Of that rich jewel he should keep unknown
 From thievish ears, because it is his own? ³⁵

Perchance his boast of Lucrece' sovereignty
 Suggested this proud issue of a king,
 For by our ears our hearts oft tainted be;
 Perchance that envy of so rich a thing,
 Braving compare, disdainfully did sting ⁴⁰
 His high-pitch'd thoughts, that meaner men should vaunt
 That golden hap which their superiors want.

But some untimely thought did instigate
 His all too timeless speed, if none of those.
 His honour, his affairs, his friends, his state, ⁴⁵
 Neglected all, with swift intent he goes
 To quench the coal which in his liver glows.

O rash false heat, wrapp'd in repentant cold,
 Thy hasty spring still blasts, and ne'er grows
 old!

When at Collatia this false lord arrived, ⁵⁰
 Well was he welcom'd by the Roman dame,
 Within whose face beauty and virtue strived
 Which of them both should underprop her fame.
 When virtue bragg'd, beauty would blush for
 shame;
 When beauty boasted blushes, in despite ⁵⁵
 Virtue would stain that o'er with silver
 white.

But beauty, in that white intitled,
 From Venus' doves doth challenge that fair
 field;

Then virtue claims from beauty beauty's red,
 Which virtue gave the golden age to gild ⁶⁰
 Their silver cheeks, and call'd it then their shield;

Teaching them thus to use it in the fight,
 When shame assail'd, the red should fence
 the white.

This heraldry in Lucrece' face was seen,
 Argu'd by beauty's red and virtue's white; ⁶⁵
 Of either's colour was the other queen,
 Proving from world's minority their right:
 Yet their ambition makes them still to fight,
 The sovereignty of either being so great That oft they interchange each other's seat. ⁷⁰

Their silent war of lilies and of roses,
 Which Tarquin view'd in her fair face's field,
 In their pure ranks his traitor eye encloses;
 Where, lest between them both it should be
 kill'd,

The coward captive vanquished doth yield ⁷⁵
 To those two armies that would let him go,
 Rather than triumph in so false a foe.

Now thinks he that her husband's shallow
 tongue,—
 The niggard prodigal that prais'd her so,—
 In that high task hath done her beauty wrong, ⁸⁰
 Which far exceeds his barren skill to show;
 Therefore that praise which Collatine doth owe Enchanted Tarquin answers with surmise,
 In silent wonder of still-gazing eyes.

This earthly saint, adored by this devil, ⁸⁵
 Little suspecteth the false worshipper;
 For unstain'd thoughts do seldom dream on
 evil;

Birds never lim'd no secret bushes fear :
 So guiltless she securely gives good cheer
 And reverend welcome to her princely guest,
 Whose inward ill no outward harm express'd :

For that he colour'd with his high estate,
 Hiding base sin in plaits of majesty ;
 That nothing in him seem'd inordinate,
 Save sometime too much wonder of his eye, 95
 Which, having all, all could not satisfy ;
 But, poorly rich, so wanteth in his store,
 That, cloy'd with much, he pineth still for
 more.

But she, that never cop'd with stranger eyes,
 Could pick no meaning from their parling
 looks,
 Nor read the subtle shining secrecies 100
 Writ in the glassy margents of such books.
 She touch'd no unknown baits, nor fear'd no
 hooks ;
 Nor could she moralize his wanton sight,
 More than his eyes were open'd to the light.

He stories to her ears her husband's fame, 105
 Won in the fields of fruitful Italy ;
 And decks with praises Collatine's high name,
 Made glorious by his manly chivalry
 With bruised arms and wreaths of victory. 110
 Her joy with heav'd-up hand she doth express,
 And, wordless, so greets Heaven for his success.

Far from the purpose of his coming thither,
 He makes excuses for his being there.
 No cloudy show of stormy blust'ring weather 115
 Doth yet in his fair welkin once appear ;
 Till sable Night, mother of Dread and Fear,
 Upon the world dim darkness doth display,
 And in her vaulty prison stows the Day.

For then is Tarquin brought unto his bed, 120
 Intending weariness with heavy spright ;
 For, after supper, long he questioned
 With modest Lucrece, and wore out the night.
 Now laden slumber with life's strength doth
 fight ;
 And every one to rest themselves betake, 125
 Save thieves, and cares, and troubled minds, that wake.

As one of which doth Tarquin lie revolving
 The sundry dangers of his will's obtaining ;
 Yet ever to obtain his will resolving,
 Though weak-built hopes persuade him to ab-staining. 130
 Despair to gain doth traffic oft for gaining ;
 And when great treasure is the meed proposed,
 Though death be adjunct, there's no death supposed.

Those that much covet are with gain so fond
 That what they have not, that which they possess, 135

They scatter and unloose it from their bond,
 And so, by hoping more, they have but less ;
 Or, gaining more, the profit of excess
 Is but to surfeit, and such griefs sustain,
 That they prove bankrupt in this poor-rich
 gain. 140

The aim of all is but to nurse the life
 With honour, wealth, and ease, in waning age ;
 And in this aim there is such thwarting strife
 That one for all, or all for one, we gage,
 As life for honour in fell battle's rage, 145
 Honour for wealth ; and oft that wealth doth
 cost
 The death of all, and all together lost.

So that in vent'ring ill we leave to be
 The things we are for that which we expect ;
 And this ambitious foul infirmity, 150
 In having much, torments us with defect
 Of that we have : so then we do neglect
 The thing we have ; and, all for want of wit,
 Make something nothing by augmenting it.

Such hazard now must doting Tarquin make, 155
 Pawning his honour to obtain his lust ;
 And for himself himself he must forsake :
 Then where is truth, if there be no self-trust ?
 When shall he think to find a stranger just,
 When he himself himself confounds, betrays
 To slanderous tongues and wretched hateful days ? 161

Now stole upon the time the dead of night,
 When heavy sleep had clos'd up mortal eyes.
 No comfortable star did lend his light,
 No noise but owls' and wolves' death-boding
 cries ; 165
 Now serves the season that they may surprise
 The silly lambs. Pure thoughts are dead and
 still,
 While lust and murder wakes to stain and kill.

And now this lustful lord leap'd from his bed,
 Throwing his mantle rudely o'er his arm ; 170
 Is madly toss'd between desire and dread ;
 The one sweetly flatters, the other feareth
 harm ;
 But honest fear, bewitch'd with lust's foul
 charm,
 Doth too too oft betake him to retire,
 Beaten away by brain-sick rude desire. 175

His falchion on a flint he softly smiteth,
 That from the cold stone sparks of fire do fly ;
 Whereat a waxen torch forthwith he lighteth,
 Which must be lode-star to his lustful eye ;
 And to the flame thus speaks advisedly : 180
 " As from this cold flint I enforc'd this fire,
 So Lucrece must I force to my desire."

Here pale with fear he doth premeditate
 The dangers of his loathsome enterprise,
 And in his inward mind he doth debate 185
 What following sorrow may on this arise.
 Then looking scornfully, he doth despise

His naked armour of still slaughtered lust,
And justly thus controls his thoughts unjust :

"Fair torch, burn out thy light, and lend it not
To darken her whose light excelleth thine ; 191
And die, unhallow'd thoughts, before you blot
With your uncleanness that which is divine ;
Offer pure incense to so pure a shrine :
Let fair humanity abhor the deed 195
That spots and stains love's modest snow-white weed.

"O shame to knighthood and to shining arms !
O foul dishonour to my household's grave !
O impious act, including all foul harms !
A martial man to be soft fancy's slave ! 200
True valour still a true respect should have ;
Then my digression is so vile, so base,
That it will live engraven in my face.

"Yea, though I die, the scandal will survive,
And be an eye-sore in my golden coat ; 205
Some loathsome dash the herald will contrive,
To cipher me how fondly I did dote ;
That my posterity, sham'd with the note,
Shall curse my bones, and hold it for no sin,
To wish that I their father had not been. 210

"What win I, if I gain the thing I seek ?
A dream, a breath, a froth of fleeting joy.
Who buys a minute's mirth to wail a week,
Or sells eternity to get a toy ? 214
For one sweet grape who will the vine destroy ?
Or what fond beggar, but to touch the crown,
Would with the sceptre straight be stricken
down ?

"If Collatinus dream of my intent,
Will he not wake, and in a desperate rage
Post hither, this vile purpose to prevent ? 220
This siege that hath engirt his marriage,
This blur to youth, this sorrow to the sage,
This dying virtue, this surviving shame,
Whose crime will bear an ever-during blame ?

"O, what excuse can my invention make, 225
When thou shalt charge me with so black a deed ?
Will not my tongue be mute, my frail joints
shake,
Mine eyes forgo their light, my false heart
bleed ?
The guilt being great, the fear doth still exceed ;
And extreme fear can neither fight nor fly, 230
But coward-like with trembling terror die.

"Had Collatinus kill'd my son or sire,
Or lain in ambush to betray my life,
Or were he not my dear friend, this desire
Might have excuse to work upon his wife, 235
As in revenge or quittal of such strife ;
But as he is my kinsman, my dear friend,
The shame and fault finds no excuse nor end.

"Shameful it is ; ay, if the fact be known :
Hateful it is ; there is no hate in loving : 240

I'll beg her love ; but she is not her own :
The worst is but denial and reproving.
My will is strong, past reason's weak remov-
ing.

Who fears a sentence or an old man's saw
Shall by a painted cloth be kept in awe." 245

Thus, graceless, holds he disputation
'Tween frozen conscience and hot burning will,
And with good thoughts makes dispensation,
Urging the worse sense for vantage still ;
Which in a moment doth confound and kill 250
All pure effects, and doth so far proceed,
That what is vile shows like a virtuous deed.

Quoth he, "She took me kindly by the hand,
And gaz'd for tidings in my eager eyes,
Fearing some hard news from the warlike
band, 255

Where her beloved Collatinus lies.
O, how her fear did make her colour rise !
First red as roses that on lawn we lay,
Then white as lawn, the roses took away.

"And how her hand, in my hand being lock'd,
Forc'd it to tremble with her loyal fear ! 261
Which struck her sad, and then it faster lock'd,
Until her husband's welfare she did hear ;
Whereat she smiled with so sweet a cheer,
That had Narcissus seen her as she stood, 265
Self-love had never drown'd him in the flood.

"Why hunt I then for colour or excuses ?
All orators are dumb when beauty pleadeth ;
Poor wretches have remorse in poor abuses ;
Love thrives not in the heart that shadows
dreadeth ; 270
Affection is my captain, and he leadeth ;
And when his gaudy banner is display'd,
The coward fights, and will not be dismay'd.

"Then, childish fear, avaunt ! debating, die !
Respect and reason, wait on wrinkled age ! 275
My heart shall never countermand mine eye.
Sad pause and deep regard beseeem the sage ;
My part is youth, and beats these from the stage.
Desire my pilot is, beauty my prize ;
Then who fears sinking where such treasure
lies ? 280

As corn o'ergrown by weeds, so heedful fear
Is almost chok'd by unresisted lust.
Away he steals with open list'ning ear,
Full of foul hope and full of fond mistrust ;
Both which, as servitors to the unjust, 285
So cross him with their opposite persuasion,
That now he vows a league, and now invasion.

Within his thought her heavenly image sits,
And in the self-same seat sits Collatine.
That eye which looks on her confounds his
wits ; 290
That eye which him beholds, as more divine,
Unto a view so false will not incline ;
But with a pure appeal seeks to the heart,
Which once corrupted takes the worse part ;

And therein heartens up his servile powers, 295
 Who, flatt'ring by their leader's jocund show,
 Stuff up his lust, as minutes fill up hours;
 And as their captain, so their pride doth grow,
 Paying more slavish tribute than they owe.
 By reprobate desire thus madly led, 300
 The Roman lord marcheth to Lucrece' bed.

The locks between her chamber and his will,
 Each one by him enforc'd, retires his ward;
 But, as they open, they all rate his ill,
 Which drives the creeping thief to some regard. 305
 The threshold grates the door to have him
 heard:
 Night-wand'ring weasels shriek to see him
 there;
 They fright him, yet he still pursues his fear.

As each unwilling portal yields him way,
 Through little vents and crannies of the
 place 310
 The wind wars with his torch to make him
 stay,
 And blows the smoke of it into his face,
 Extinguishing his conduct in this case;
 But his hot heart, which fond desire doth scorch,
 Puffs forth another wind that fires the torch.

And being lighted, by the light he spies 315
 Lucretia's glove, wherein her needle sticks.
 He takes it from the rushes where it lies,
 And gripping it, the needle his finger pricks;
 As who should say, "This glove to wanton
 tricks 320
 Is not inur'd; return again in haste;
 Thou see'st our mistress' ornaments are chaste."

But all these poor forbiddings could not stay
 him;
 He in the worst sense construes their denial:
 The doors, the wind, the glove that did delay
 him, 325
 He takes for accidental things of trial;
 Or as those bars which stop the hourly dial,
 Who with a ling'ring stay his course doth let,
 Till every minute pays the hour his debt.

"So, so," quoth he, "these lets attend the
 time, 330
 Like little frosts that sometime threat the
 spring,
 To add a more rejoicing to the prime,
 And give the sneaped birds more cause to sing.
 Pain pays the income of each precious thing;
 Huge rocks, high winds, strong pirates,
 shelves and sands, 335
 The merchant fears, ere rich at home he lands."

Now is he come unto the chamber-door,
 That shuts him from the heaven of his thought,
 Which with a yielding latch, and with no more,
 Hath barr'd him from the blessed thing he sought. 340

So from himself impiety hath wrought,
 That for his prey to pray he doth begin,
 As if the heavens should countenance his sin.

But in the midst of his unfruitful prayer,
 Having solicited the eternal power 345
 That his foul thoughts might compass his fair
 fair,
 And they would stand auspicious to the hour,
 Even there he starts: quoth he, "I must de-
 flower:

The powers to whom I pray abhor this fact,
 How can they then assist me in the act? 350

"Then Love and Fortune be my gods, my
 guide!

My will is back'd with resolution.
 Thoughts are but dreams till their effects be tried:

The blackest sin is clear'd with absolution;
 Against love's fire fear's frost hath dissolution.
 The eye of heaven is out, and misty night 355
 Covers the shame that follows sweet delight."

This said, his guilty hand pluck'd up the latch,
 And with his knee the door he opens wide.
 The dove sleeps fast that this night-owl will catch; 360

Thus treason works ere traitors be esp'd.
 Who sees the lurking serpent steps aside;
 But she, sound sleeping, fearing no such thing,
 Lies at the mercy of his mortal sting.

Into the chamber wickedly he stalks, 365
 And gazeth on her yet unstained bed.
 The curtains being close, about he walks,
 Rolling his greedy eyeballs in his head.
 By their high treason is his heart misled;
 Which gives the watch-word to his hand full
 soon 370
 To draw the cloud that hides the silver moon.

Look, as the fair and fiery-pointed sun,
 Rushing from forth a cloud, bereaves our sight;
 Even so, the curtain drawn, his eyes begun
 To wink, being blinded with a greater light: 375
 Whether it is that she reflects so bright,
 That dazzleth them, or else some shame supposed;
 But blind they are, and keep themselves enclosed.

O, had they in that darksome prison died!
 Then had they seen the period of their ill; 380
 Then Collatine again, by Lucrece' side,
 In his clear bed might have repos'd still:
 But they must ope, this blessed league to kill;
 And holy-thoughted Lucrece to their sight
 Must sell her joy, her life, her world's delight.

Her lily hand her rosy cheek lies under, 385
 Coz'ning the pillow of a lawful kiss;
 Who, therefore angry, seems to part in sunder,
 Swelling on either side to want his bliss;
 Between whose hills her head entombed is: 390
 Where, like a virtuous monument, she lies;
 To be admir'd of lewd unhallo'd eyes.

Without the bed her other fair hand was,
On the green coverlet; whose perfect white
Show'd like an April daisy on the grass, 395
With pearly sweat, resembling dew of night.
Her eyes, like marigolds, had sheath'd their
light,

And canopi'd in darkness sweetly lay,
Till they might open to adorn the day.

Her hair, like golden threads, play'd with her
breath; 400

O modest wantons! wanton modesty!
Showing life's triumph in the map of death,
And death's dim look in life's mortality.

Each in her sleep themselves so beautify,

As if between them twain there were no
strife, 405

But that life liv'd in death, and death in
life.

Her breasts, like ivory globes circled with blue,
A pair of maiden worlds unconquered,
Save of their lord no bearing yoke they knew,
And him by oath they truly honoured: 410

These worlds in Tarquin new ambition bred;

Who, like a foul usurper, went about

From this fair throne to heave the owner out.

What could he see but mightily he noted?

What did he note but strongly he desired? 415

What he beheld, on that he firmly doted,

And in his will his wilful eye he tired.

With more than admiration he admired

Her azure veins, her alabaster skin,

Her coral lips, her snow-white dimpled
chin. 420

As the grim lion fawneth o'er his prey,

Sharp hunger by the conquest satisfied,

So o'er this sleeping soul doth Tarquin stay,

His rage of lust by gazing qualified;

Slack'd, not suppress'd: for standing by her
side, 425

His eye, which late this mutiny restrains,

Unto a greater uproar tempts his veins.

And they, like straggling slaves for pillage
fighting,

Obdurate vassals fell exploits effecting,

In bloody death and ravishment delighting, 430

Nor children's tears nor mothers' groans respecting,

Swell in their pride, the onset still expecting.

Anon his beating heart, alarm striking,

Gives the hot charge and bids them do their liking.

His drumming heart cheers up his burning
eye, 435

His eye commends the leading to his hand;

His hand, as proud of such a dignity,

Smoking with pride, march'd on to make his
stand

On her bare breast, the heart of all her land;

Whose ranks of blue veins, as his hand did scale, 440

Left their round turrets destitute and pale.

They, must'ring to the quiet cabinet
Where their dear governess and lady lies,

Do tell her she is dreadfully beset,

And fright her with confusion of their cries, 445

She, much amaz'd, breaks ope her lock'd-up
eyes,

Who, peeping forth this tumult to behold,

Are by his flaming torch dimm'd and con-
troll'd.

Imagine her as one in dead of night

From forth dull sleep by dreadful fancy wak-
ing, 450

That thinks she hath beheld some ghastly
sprite,

Whose grim aspect sets every joint a-shaking;

What terror 't is! but she in worsè taking,

From sleep disturbed, heedfully doth view

The sight which makes supposed terror
true. 455

Wrapp'd and confounded in a thousand fears,

Like to a new-kill'd bird she trembling lies;

She dares not look; yet, winking, there appears

Quick-shifting anties, ugly in her eyes.

Such shadows are the weak brain's forgeries;
Who, angry that the eyes fly from their lights, 461

In darkness daunts them with more dreadful sights.

His hand, that yet remains upon her breast, —

Rude ram, to batter such an ivory wall! —

May feel her heart — poor citizen! — distress'd, 465

Wounding itself to death, rise up and fall,

Beating her bulk, that his hand shakes withal.

This moves in him more rage and lesser pity

To make the breach and enter this sweet city.

First, like a trumpet, doth his tongue begin 470

To sound a parley to his heartless foe;

Who o'er the white sheet peers her whiter chin,

The reason of this rash alarm to know,

Which he by dumb demeanour seeks to show;

But she with vehement prayers urgeth still 475

Under what colour he commits this ill.

Thus he replies: "The colour in thy face,

That even for anger makes the lily pale,

And the red rose blush at her own disgrace,

Shall plead for me and tell my loving tale. 480

Under that colour am I come to scale

Thy never-conquered fort. The fault is thine,

For those thine eyes betray thee unto mine.

"Thus I forestall thee, if thou mean to chide:

Thy beauty hath ensnar'd thee to this night, 485

Where thou with patience must my will abide;

My will that marks thee for my earth's delight,

Which I to conquer sought with all my might;

But as reproof and reason beat it dead,

By thy bright beauty was it newly bred. 490

"I see what crosses my attempt will bring;

I know what thorns the growing rose defends;

I think the honey guarded with a sting :
 All this beforehand counsel comprehends ;
 But Will is deaf and hears no heedful
 friends ; 495
 Only he hath an eye to gaze on beauty,
 And dotes on what he looks, 'gainst law or duty.

"I have debated, even in my soul,
 What wrong, what shame, what sorrow I shall breed ;
 But nothing can affection's course control, 500
 Or stop the headlong fury of his speed.
 I know repentant tears ensue the deed,
 Reproach, disdain, and deadly enmity ;
 Yet strive I to embrace mine infamy."

This said, he shakes aloft his Roman blade, 505
 Which, like a falcon tow'ring in the skies,
 Coucheth the fowl below with his wings' shade,
 Whose crooked beak threatens, if he mount, he
 dies :

So under his insulting falchion lies
 Harmless Lucretia, marking what he tells 510
 With trembling fear, as fowl hear falcon's bells.

"Lucrece," quoth he, "this night I must enjoy thee.

If thou deny, then force must work my way,
 For in thy bed I purpose to destroy thee ;
 That done, some worthless slave of thine I'll slay, 515
 To kill thine honour with thy life's decay ;
 And in thy dead arms do I mean to place
 him,
 Swearing I slew him, seeing thee embrace
 him.

"So thy surviving husband shall remain
 The scornful mark of every open eye ; 520
 Thy kinsmen hang their heads at this disdain,
 Thy issue blurr'd with nameless bastardy ;
 And thou, the author of their obloquy,
 Shalt have thy trespass cited up in rhymes,
 And sung by children in succeeding times, 525

"But if thou yield, I rest thy secret friend :
 The fault unknown is as a thought unacted ;
 A little harm done to a great good end
 For lawful policy remains enacted.
 The poisonous simple sometime is compacted 530
 In a pure compound ; being so applied,
 His venom in effect is purified.

"Then, for thy husband and thy children's sake,

Tender my suit ; bequeath not to their lot
 The shame that from them no device can take, 535

The blemish that will never be forgot,
 Worse than a slavish wipe or birth-hour's blot ;
 For marks descri'd in men's nativity
 Are nature's faults, not their own infamy."

Here with a cockatrice' dead-killing eye 540
 He rouseth up himself and makes a pause ;

While she, the picture of pure piety,
 Like a white hind under the gripe's sharp
 claws,

Pleads, in a wilderness where are no laws,
 To the rough beast that knows no gentle
 right, 545
 Nor aught obeys but his foul appetite.

But when a black-fac'd cloud the world doth
 threaten,
 In his dim mist the aspiring mountains hiding,
 From earth's dark womb some gentle gust doth
 get,

Which blow these pitchy vapours from their bidding, 550

Hind'ring their present fall by this dividing ;
 So his unallow'd haste her words delays,
 And moody Pluto winks while Orpheus plays.

Yet, foul night-waking cat, he doth but dally,
 While in his hold-fast foot the weak mouse
 panteth. 555

Her sad behaviour feeds his vulture folly,
 A swallowing gulf that even in plenty wanteth.
 His ear her prayers admits, but his heart
 granteth

No penetrable entrance to her plaining ;
 Tears harden lust, though marble wear with raining. 560

Her pity-pleading eyes are sadly fixed
 In the remorseless wrinkles of his face ;
 Her modest eloquence with sighs is mixed,
 Which to her oratory adds more grace.
 She puts the period often from his place ; 565
 And midst the sentence so her accent breaks,
 That twice she doth begin ere once she speaks.

She conjures him by high almighty Jove,
 By knighthood, gentry, and sweet friendship's oath ;

By her untimely tears, her husband's love, 570
 By holy human law, and common troth,
 By heaven and earth, and all the power of
 both,

That to his borrow'd bed he make retire,
 And stoop to honour, not to foul desire.

Quoth she, "Reward not hospitality 575
 With such black payment as thou hast pretended ;

Mud not the fountain that gave drink to thee ;
 Mar not the thing that cannot be amended ;
 End thy ill aim before thy shoot be ended ;
 He is no woodman that doth bend his bow 580
 To strike a poor unseasonable doe.

"My husband is thy friend ; for his sake spare
 me :

Thyself art mighty ; for thine own sake leave
 me :

Myself a weakling ; do not then ensnare me :
 Thou look'st not like deceit ; do not deceive
 me. 585

My sighs, like whirlwinds, labour hence to heave thee.

If ever man were mov'd with woman's moans,
Be moved with my tears, my sighs, my groans:

"All which together, like a troubled ocean,
Beat at thy rocky and wreck-threat'ning heart,
To soften it with their continual motion; 591
For stones dissolv'd to water do convert.
O, if no harder than a stone thou art,
Melt at my tears, and be compassionate!
Soft pity enters at an iron gate. 595

"In Tarquin's likeness I did entertain thee:
Hast thou put on his shape to do him shame?
To all the host of heaven I complain me,
Thou wrong'st his honour, wound'st his princely
name.
Thou art not what thou seem'st; and if the same, 600
Thou seem'st not what thou art, a god, a
king;
For kings like gods should govern everything.

"How will thy shame be seeded in thine age,
When thou put'st thy vices bud before thy spring?
If in thy hope thou dar'st do such outrage, 605
What dar'st thou not when once thou art a
king?

O, be rememb'rd, no outrageous thing
From vassal actors can be wip'd away;
Then kings' misdeeds cannot be hid in clay.

"This deed will make thee only lov'd for
fear; 610
But happy monarchs still are fear'd for love:
With foul offenders thou perforce must bear,
When they in thee the like offences prove.
If but for fear of this, thy will remove;
For princes are the glass, the school, the book, 615
Where subjects' eyes do learn, do read, do
look.

"And wilt thou be the school where Lust shall learn?
Must he in thee read lectures of such shame?
Wilt thou be glass wherein it shall discern Authority for sin, warrant for blame, 620
To privilege dishonour in thy name?
Thou back'st reproach against long-living laud,
And mak'st fair reputation but a bawd.

"Hast thou command? By him that gave it
thee,
From a pure heart command thy rebel will; 625
Draw not thy sword to guard iniquity,
For it was lent thee all that brood to kill.
Thy princely office how canst thou fulfil,
When, pattern'd by thy fault, foul sin may
say,
He learn'd to sin, and thou didst teach the
way! 630

"Think but how vile a spectacle it were
To view thy present trespass in another.

Men's faults do seldom to themselves appear;
Their own transgressions partially they smother:

This guilt would seem death-worthy in thy
brother. 635
O, how are they wrapt in with infanies
That from their own misdeeds askance their
eyes!

"To thee, to thee, my heav'd-up hands appeal,
Not to seducing lust, thy rash relier:
I sue for exil'd majesty's repeal; 640
Let him return, and flatt'ring thoughts retire:
His true respect will prison false desire,
And wipe the dim mist from thy doting
eyne,
That thou shalt see thy state and pity mine."

"Have done," quoth he; "my uncontrolled tide 645
Turns not, but swells the higher by this let.
Small lights are soon blown out, huge fires abide,
And with the wind in greater fury fret.
The petty streams that pay a daily debt
To their salt sovereign, with their fresh falls'
haste 650
Add to his flow, but alter not his taste."

"Thou art," quoth she, "a sea, a sovereign
king;
And, lo, there falls into thy boundless flood.
Black lust, dishonour, shame, misgoverning,
Who seek to stain the ocean of thy blood, 655
If all these petty ills shall change thy good,
Thy sea within a puddle's womb is hearsed,
And not the puddle in thy sea dispersed.

"So shall these slaves be king, and thou their
slave;
Thou nobly base, they basely dignifi'd; 660
Thou their fair life, and they thy fouler grave;
Thou loathed in their shame, they in thy pride.
The lesser thing should not the greater hide;
The cedar stoops not to the base shrub's foot,
But low shrubs wither at the cedar's root. 665

"So let thy thoughts, low vassals to thy
state, —
"No more," quoth he; "by heaven, I will not
hear thee.
Yield to my love; if not, enforced hate,
Instead of love's coy touch, shall rudely tear
thee;
That done, despitefully I mean to bear thee 670
Unto the base bed of some rascal groom,
To be thy partner in this shameful doom."

This said, he sets his foot upon the light,
For light and lust are deadly enemies;
Shame folded up in blind concealing night, 675
When most unseen, then most doth tyrannize.
The wolf hath seiz'd his prey, the poor lamb
cries;
Till with her own white fleece her voice con-
troll'd
Entombs her outcry in her lips' sweet fold.

For with the nightly linen that she wears 680
 He pens her piteous clamours in her head ;
 Cooling his hot face in the chastest tears
 That ever modest eyes with sorrow shed.
 O, that prone lust should stain so pure a bed !
 The spots whereof could weeping purify, 685
 Her tears should drop on them perpetually.

But she hath lost a dearer thing than life,
 And he hath won what he would lose again ;
 This forced league doth force a further strife,
 This momentary joy breeds months of pain, 690
 This hot desire converts to cold disdain ;
 Pure Chastity is rifled of her store,
 And Lust, the thief, far poorer than before.

Look, as the full-fed hound or gorged hawk,
 Unapt for tender smell or speedy flight, 695
 Make slow pursuit, or altogether balk
 The prey wherein by nature they delight ;
 So surfeit-taking Tarquin fares this night :
 His taste delicious, in digestion souring,
 Devours his will, that liv'd by foul devour-
 ing. 700

O, deeper sin than bottomless conceit
 Can comprehend in still imagination !
 Drunken Desire must vomit his receipt,
 Ere he can see his own abomination.
 While Lust is in his pride, no exclamation 705
 Can curb his heat or rein his rash desire,
 Till, like a jade, Self-will himself doth tire.

And then with lank and lean discolour'd cheek,
 With heavy eye, knit brow, and strengthless
 pace,

Feeble Desire, all recreant, poor, and meek, 710
 Like to a bankrupt beggar wails his case.
 The flesh being proud, Desire doth fight with Grace,

For there it revels ; and when that decays,
 The guilty rebel for remission prays.

So fares it with this faultful lord of Rome, 715
 Who this accomplishment so hotly chased ;
 For now against himself he sounds this doom,
 That through the length of times he stands disgraced :

Besides, his soul's fair temple is defaced ;
 To whose weak ruins muster troops of cares, 720
 To ask the spotted princess how she fares.

She says, her subjects with foul insurrection
 Have batter'd down her consecrated wall,
 And by their mortal fault brought in subjec-
 tion

Her immortality, and made her thrall 725
 To living death and pain perpetual ;
 Which in her prescience she controlled still,
 But her foresight could not forestall their
 will.

Even in this thought through the dark night
 he stealeth,

A captive victor that hath lost in gain ; 730
 Bearing away the wound that nothing healeth,

The scar that will, despite of cure, remain ;
 Leaving his spoil perplex'd in greater pain.
 She bears the load of lust he left behind,
 And he the burden of a guilty mind. 735

He like a thievish dog creeps sadly thence ;
 She like a wearied lamb lies panting there ;
 He scowls and hates himself for his offence ;
 She, desperate, with her nails her flesh doth
 tear ;

He faintly flies, sweating with guilty fear ; 740
 She stays, exclaiming on the direful night ;
 He runs, and chides his vanish'd, loath'd de-
 light.

He thence departs a heavy convertite ;
 She there remains a hopeless castaway ;
 He in his speed looks for the morning light ; 745
 She prays she never may behold the day,
 "For day," quoth she, "night's scapes doth open lay,
 And my true eyes have never practis'd how
 To cloak offences with a cunning brow.

"They think not but that every eye can see 750
 The same disgrace which they themselves be-
 hold ;

And therefore would they still in darkness be,
 To have their unseen sin remain untold ;
 For they their guilt with weeping will unfold,
 And grave, like water that doth eat in steel, 755

Upon my cheeks what helpless shame I feel."

Here she exclaims against repose and rest,
 And bids her eyes hereafter still be blind.
 She wakes her heart by beating on her breast,
 And bids it leap from thence, where it may find 760

Some purer chest to close so pure a mind.
 Frantic with grief thus breathes she forth her spite
 Against the unseen secrecy of night :

"O comfort-killing Night, image of hell !
 Dim register and notary of shame ! 765
 Black stage for tragedies and murders fell !
 Vast sin-concealing chaos ! nurse of blame !
 Blind muffled bawd ! dark harbour for defame !
 Grim cave of death ! whispering conspirator
 With close-tongu'd Treason and the ravisher ! 770

"O hateful, vaporous, and foggy Night !
 Since thou art guilty of my cureless crime,
 Muster thy mists to meet the eastern light,
 Make war against proportion'd course of time ;
 Or if thou wilt permit the sun to climb 775
 His wonted height, yet ere he go to bed,
 Knit poisonous clouds about his golden head.

"With rotten damps ravish the morning air ;
 Let their exhal'd unwholesome breaths make
 sick

The life of purity, the supreme fair, 780
 Ere he arrive his weary neon-tide prick ;
 And let thy musty vapours march so thick,

That in their smoky ranks his smoth' red light
May set at noon and make perpetual night.

"Were Tarquin Night, as he is but Night's child, 785

The silver-shining queen he would disdain;
Her twinkling handmaids too, by him defil'd,
Through Night's black bosom should not peep
again:

So should I have co-partners in my pain;
And fellowship in woe doth woe assuage, 790
As palmers' chat makes short their pilgrimage:

"Where now I have no one to blush with me,
To cross their arms and hang their heads with
mine,

To mask their brows and hide their infamy;
But I alone, alone must sit and pine, 796
Seasoning the earth with showers of silver brine, Mingling my talk with tears, my grief with
groans,

Poor wasting monuments of lasting moans.

"O Night, thou furnace of foul reeking smoke,
Let not the jealous Day behold that face 800
Which underneath thy black all-hiding cloak Immodestly lies martyr'd with disgrace!

Keep still possession of thy gloomy place,
That all the faults which in thy reign are made

May likewise be sepulchr'd in thy shade! 805

"Make me not object to the tell-tale Day!
The light will show, character'd in my brow,
The story of sweet chastity's decay,
The impious breach of holy wedlock vow;
Yea, the illiterate, that know not how 810
To cipher what is writ in learned books,
Will quote my loathsome trespass in my looks.

"The nurse, to still her child, will tell my story,
And fright her crying babe with Tarquin's
name;

The orator, to deck his oratory, 815
Will couple my reproach to Tarquin's shame;
Feast-finding minstrels, tuning my defame,
Will tie the hearers to attend each line,
How Tarquin wronged me, I Collatine. 819

"Let my good name, that senseless reputation,
For Collatine's dear love be kept unspotted:
If that be made a theme for disputation,
The branches of another root are rotted,
And undeserv'd reproach to him allotted
That is as clear from this attain of mine 825
As I, ere this, was pure to Collatine.

"O unseen shame! invisible disgrace!
O unfelt sore! crest-wounding, private scar!
Reproach is stamp'd in Collatinus' face,
And Tarquin's eye may read the mot afar, 830
How he in peace is wounded, not in war.
Alas, how many bear such shameful blows,
Which not themselves, but he that gives them knows!

"If, Collatine, thine honour lay in me,
From me by strong assault it is bereft. 835
My honey lost, and I, a drone-like bee,
Have no perfection of my summer left,
But robb'd and ransack'd by injurious theft.

In thy weak hive a wand'ring wasp hath crept,
And suck'd the honey which thy chaste bee
kept. 840

"Yet am I guilty of thy honour's wrack;
Yet for thy honour did I entertain him;
Coming from thee, I could not put him back,
For it had been dishonour to disdain him.
Besides, of weariness he did complain him, 845
And talk'd of virtue: O unlook'd-for evil,
When virtue is profan'd in such a devil!

"Why should the worm intrude the maiden
bud?
Or hateful cuckoos hatch in sparrows' nests?
Or toads infect fair founts with venom mud? 850
Or tyrant folly lurk in gentle breasts?
Or kings be breakers of their own behests?
But no perfection is so absolute,
That some impurity doth not pollute.

"The aged man that coffers-up his gold 855
Is plagu'd with cramps and gout and painful fits;
And scarce hath eyes his treasure to behold,
But like still-pining Tantalus he sits
And useless burns the harvest of his wits;
Having no other pleasure of his gain 860
But torment that it cannot cure his pain.

"So then he hath it when he cannot use it,
And leaves it to be mast' red by his young;
Who in their pride do presently abuse it.
Their father was too weak, and they too strong, 865
To hold their cursed-blessed fortune long.
The sweets we wish for turn to loathed
sours
Even in the moment that we call them ours.

"Unruly blasts wait on the tender spring;
Unwholesome weeds take root with precious
flowers; 870
The adder hisses where the sweet birds sing
What virtue breeds, iniquity devours.
We have no good that we can say is ours,
But ill-annexed Opportunity
Or kills his life or else his quality. 875

"O Opportunity, thy guilt is great!
'T is thou that execut'st the traitor's treason.
Thou sets the wolf where he the lamb may
get;
Whoever plots the sin, thou 'point'st the season;
'T is thou that spurn'st at right, at law, at
reason; 880
And in thy shady cell, where none may spy
him,
Sits Sin, to seize the souls that wander by
him.

"Thou mak'st the vestal violate her oath;
 Thou blow'st the fire when temperance is thaw'd;
 Thou smother'st honesty, thou murd'rest
 troth;
 Thou foul abettor! thou notorious bawd!
 Thou plantest scandal and displace land.
 Thou ravisher, thou traitor, thou false thief,
 Thy honey turns to gall, thy joy to grief!

"Thy secret pleasure turns to open shame, 990
 Thy private feasting to a public fast,
 Thy smoothing titles to a ragged name,
 Thy sug'red tongue to bitter wormwood taste;
 Thy violent vanities can never last.
 How comes it then, vile Opportunity, 995
 Being so bad, such numbers seek for thee?

"When wilt thou be the humble suppliant's
 friend
 And bring him where his suit may be obtained?
 When wilt thou sort an hour great strifes to
 end?
 Or free that soul which wretchedness hath chained? 900
 Give physic to the sick, ease to the pained?
 The poor, lame, blind, halt, creep, cry out
 for thee;
 But they ne'er meet with Opportunity.

"The patient dies while the physician sleeps;
 The orphan pines while the oppressor feeds; 905
 Justice is feasting while the widow weeps;
 Advice is sporting while infection breeds.
 Thou grant'st no time for charitable deeds Wrath, envy, treason, rape, and murder's rages,
 Thy heinous hours wait on them as their pages. 910

"When Truth and Virtue have to do with
 thee,
 A thousand crosses keep them from thy aid:
 They buy thy help; but Sin ne'er gives a fee,
 He gratis comes; and thou art well appaid
 As well to hear as grant what he hath said. 915
 My Collatine would else have come to me
 When Tarquin did, but he was stay'd by
 thee.

"Guilty thou art of murder and of theft,
 Guilty of perjury and subornation,
 Guilty of treason, forgery, and shift, 920
 Guilty of incest, that abomination;
 An accessory by thine inclination
 To all sins past, and all that are to come,
 From the creation to the general doom.

"Mis-shapen Time, copesmate of ugly Night, 925
 Swift subtle post, carrier of grisly care,
 Eater of youth, false slave to false delight,
 Base watch of woes, sin's pack-horse, virtue's
 snare;
 Thou nurset all and murd'rest all that are.
 O, hear me then, injurious, shifting Time! 930
 Be guilty of my death, since of my crime.

"Why hath thy servant, Opportunity,
 Betray'd the hours thou gav'st me to repose?
 Cancell'd my fortunes, and enchained me
 To endless date of never-ending woes? 935
 Time's office is to fine the hate of foes,
 To eat up errors by opinion bred,
 Not spend the dowry of a lawful bed.

"Time's glory is to calm contending kings,
 To unmask falsehood and bring truth to light,
 To stamp the seal of time in aged things, 940
 To wake the morn and sentinel the night,
 To wrong the wronger till he render right,
 To rinate proud buildings with thy hours,
 And smear with dust their glitt'ring golden towers; 945

"To fill with worm-holes stately monuments,
 To feed oblivion with decay of things,
 To blot old books and alter their contents,
 To pluck the quills from ancient ravens' wings,
 To dry the old oak's sap and cherish springs, 950
 To spoil antiquities of hammer'd steel,
 And turn the giddy round of Fortune's wheel;

"To show the beldam daughters of her
 daughter,
 To make the child a man, the man a child,
 To slay the tiger that doth live by slaughter, 955
 To tame the unicorn and lion wild,
 To mock the subtle in themselves beguil'd,
 To cheer the ploughman with increaseful crops,
 And waste huge stones with little water-drops.

"Why work'st thou mischief in thy pilgrimage, 960
 Unless thou couldst return to make amends?
 One poor retiring minute in an age
 Would purchase thee a thousand thousand
 friends,
 Lending him wit that to bad debtors lends:
 O, this dread night, wouldst thou one hour
 come back, 965
 I could prevent this storm and shun thy
 wrack!

"Thou ceaseless lackey to eternity,
 With some mischance cross Tarquin in his flight.
 Devise extremes beyond extremity, 970
 To make him curse this cursed crimeful night.
 Let ghastly shadows his lewd eyes affright;
 And the dire thought of his committed evil
 Shape every bush a hideous shapeless devil.

"Disturb his hours of rest with restless trances,
 Afflict him in his bed with bedrid groans; 975
 Let there bechance him pitiful mischances
 To make him moan, but pity not his moans;
 Stone him with hard'ned hearts, harder than
 stones;
 And let mild women to him lose their mild-
 ness,
 Wilder to him than tigers in their wildness.

"Let him have time to tear his curled hair, 981
 Let him have time against himself to rave,
 Let him have time of Time's help to despair,
 Let him have time to live a loathed slave,
 Let him have time a beggar's orts to crave, 985
 And time to see one that by alms doth live
 Disdain to him disdained scraps to give.

"Let him have time to see his friends his foes,
 And merry fools to mock at him resort;
 Let him have time to mark how slow time goes
 In time of sorrow, and how swift and short 991
 His time of folly and his time of sport;
 And ever let his unrecalling crime
 Have time to wail the abusing of his time.

"O Time, thou tutor both to good and bad, 995 Teach me to curse him that thou taught'st this ill!

At his own shadow let the thief run mad,
 Himself himself seek every hour to kill!
 Such wretched hands such wretched blood should spill;

For who so base would such an office have 1000
 As slanderous deathsmen to so base a slave?

"The baser is he, coming from a king,
 To shame his hope with deeds degenerate.
 The mightier man, the mightier is the thing
 That makes him honour'd, or begets him hate; 1005

For greatest scandal waits on greatest state.
 The moon being clouded presently is miss'd,
 But little stars may hide them when they list.

"The crow may bathe his coal-black wings in mire,
 And unperceiv'd fly with the filth away; 1010
 But if the like the snow-white swan desire,
 The stain upon his silver down will stay.
 Poor grooms are sightless night, kings glorious
 day.

Gnats are unnoted wheresoe'er they fly,
 But eagles gaz'd upon with every eye. 1015

"Out, idle words, servants to shallow fools!
 Unprofitable sounds, weak arbitrators!
 Busy yourselves in skill-contending schools;
 Debate where leisure serves with dull debaters;
 To trembling clients be you mediators. 1020
 For me, I force not argument a straw,
 Since that my case is past the help of law.

"In vain I rail at Opportunity,
 At Time, at Tarquin, and uncheerful Night;
 In vain I cavil with mine infamy, 1025
 In vain I spurn at my confirm'd despite:
 This helpless smoke of words doth me no right.
 The remedy indeed to do me good
 Is to let forth my foul defiled blood.

"Poor hand, why quiver'st thou at this decree? 1030

Honour thyself to rid me of this shame;
 For if I die, my honour lives in thee;
 But if I live, thou liv'st in my defame.
 Since thou couldst not defend thy loyal dame,

And wast afraid to scratch her wicked
 foe, 1035
 Kill both thyself and her for yielding so."

This said, from her be-tumbled couch she starteth,

To find some desperate instrument of death:
 But this no slaughterhouse no tool imparteth
 To make more vent for passage of her
 breath; 1040

Which, thronging through her lips, so vanish-
 eth

As smoke from Ætna, that in air consumes,
 Or that which from discharged cannon fumes.

"In vain," quoth she, "I live, and seek in vain

Some happy mean to end a hapless life. 1045
 I fear'd by Tarquin's fashion to be slain,
 Yet for the self-same purpose seek a knife;
 But when I fear'd, I was a loyal wife:
 So an I now: O no, that cannot be;
 Of that true type hath Tarquin rifled me, 1050

"O, that is gone for which I sought to live,
 And therefore now I need not fear to die.
 To clear this spot by death, at least I give
 A badge of fame to slander's livery,
 A dying life to living infamy. 1055
 Poor helpless help, the treasure stolen away,
 To burn the guiltless casket where it lay!

"Well, well, dear Collatine, thou shalt not
 know

The stained taste of violated troth;
 I will not wrong thy true affection so, 1060
 To flatter thee with an infringed oath;
 This bastard graff shall never come to growth.
 He shall not boast who did thy stock pollute

That thou art doting father of his fruit.

"Nor shall he smile at thee in secret
 thought, 1065

Nor laugh with his companions at thy state;
 But thou shalt know thy interest was not bought

Basely with gold, but stolen from forth thy gate.

For me, I am the mistress of my fate,
 And with my trespass never will dispense, 1070
 Till life to death acquit my fore'd offence.

"I will not poison thee with my attainit,
 Nor fold my fault in cleanly-coin'd excuses;
 My sable ground of sin I will not paint,
 To hide the truth of this false night's abuses, 1075
 My tongue shall utter all; mine eyes, like sluices,

As from a mountain-spring that feeds a dale,
 Shall gush pure streams to purge my impure
 tale."

By this, lamenting Philomel had ended
 The well-tun'd warble of her nightly sorrow, 1080
 And solemn night with slow sad gait descended

To ugly hell ; when, lo, the blushing morrow
Lends light to all fair eyes that light will bor-
row ;

But cloudy Lucrece shames herself to see,
And therefore still in night' would cloist' red
be. 1085

Revealing day through every cranny spies,
And seems to point her out where she sits weeping ;

To whom she sobbing speaks : " O eye of eyes, Why pry'st thou through my window ? Leave thy peeping ;

Mock with thy tickling beams eyes that are sleeping ; 1090

Brand not my forehead with thy piercing
light,

For day hath nought to do what 's done by
night."

Thus cavils she with everything she sees.

True grief is fond and testy as a child,
Who wayward once, his mood with nought agrees. 1095

Old woes, not infant sorrows, bear them mild ;
Continuance tames the one ; the other wild ;

Like an unpractis'd swimmer plunging still,
With too much labour drowns for want of skill.

So she, deep-drenched in a sea of care, 1100
Holds disputation with each thing she views,
And to herself all sorrow doth compare ;
No object but her passion's strength renews ;
And as one shifts, another straight ensues.

Sometime her grief is dumb and hath no
words ; 1105

Sometime 'tis mad and too much talk affords.

The little birds that tune their morning's joy
Make her moans mad with their sweet melody ;

For mirth doth search the bottom of annoy,
Sad souls are slain in merry company ; 1110

Grief best is pleas'd with grief's society ;
True sorrow then is feelingly suffic'd

When with like semblance it is sympathiz'd.

'T is double death to drown in ken of shore ;
He ten times pines that pines beholding food ; 1115

To see the salve doth make the wound ache
more ;

Great grief grieves most at that would do it
good ;

Deep woes roll forward like a gentle flood,
Who, being stopp'd, the bounding banks
o'erflows ;

Grief dallied with nor law nor limit knows. 1120

" You mocking birds," quoth she, " your tunes
entomb

Within your hollow-swelling feathered breasts,
And in my hearing be you mute and dumb ;

My restless discord loves no stops nor rests ;
A woeful hostess brooks not merry guests. 1125

Relish your nimble notes to pleasing ears ;
Distress likes dumps when time is kept with
tears.

" Come, Philomel, that sing'st of ravishment,
Make thy sad grove in my dishevell'd hair :
As the dank earth weeps at thy languishment,
So I at each sad strain will strain a tear, 1131
And with deep groans the diapason bear ;
For burden-wise I'll hum on Tarquin still,
While thou on Tereus descants better skill.

" And whiles against a thorn thou bear'st thy
part 1135

To keep thy sharp woes waking, wretched I,
To imitate thee well, against my heart

Will fix a sharp knife to affright mine eye ;
Who, if it wink, shall thereon fall and die.

These means, as frets upon an instrument, 1140
Shall tune our heart-strings to true languish-
ment.

" And for, poor bird, thou sing'st not in the
day,

As shaming any eye should thee behold,
Some dark deep desert, seated from the way,

That knows not parching heat nor freezing
cold, 1145

Will we find out ; and there we will unfold
To creatures stern, sad tunes to change their kinds ;

Since men prove beasts, let beasts bear gentle
minds."

As the poor frightened deer, that stands at gaze,
Wildly determining which way to fly, 1150

Or one encompass'd with a winding maze,
That cannot tread the way out readily ;

So with herself is she in mutiny,
To live or die which of the twain were better,

When life is sham'd, and death reproach's debtor. 1155

" To kill myself," quoth she, " alack, what were it,

But with my body my poor soul's pollution ?
They that lose half with greater patience bear it

Than they whose whole is swallowed in confusion.

That mother tries a merciless conclusion 1160
Who, having two sweet babes, when death takes one,

Will slay the other and be nurse to none.

" My body or my soul, which was the dearer,
When the one pure, the other made divine ?

Whose love of either to myself was nearer, 1165
When both were kept for Heaven and Colla-tine ?

Ay me ! the bark peel'd from the lofty pine,
His leaves will wither and his sap decay ;

So must my soul, her bark being peel'd away.

" Her house is sack'd, her quiet interrupted,
Her mansion batter'd by the enemy ; 1171

Her sacred temple spotted, spoil'd, corrupted,
Grossly engirt with daring impiety :

Then let it not be call'd impiety,
If in this blemish'd fort I make some hole 1175

Through which I may convey this troubled soul.

"Yet die I will not till my Collatine
Have heard the cause of my untimely death;
That he may vow, in that sad hour of mine, Revenge on him that made me stop my
breath. 1180

My stained blood to Tarquin I'll bequeath,
Which by him tainted shall for him bespent,
And as his due writ in my testament.

"My honour I'll bequeath unto the knife
That wounds my body so dishonoured. 1185
'T is honour to deprive dishonour'd life;
The one will live, the other being dead;
So of shame's ashes shall my fame be bred;
For in my death I murder shameful scorn:
My shame so dead, mine honour is newborn. 1190

"Dear lord of that dear jewel I have lost,
What legacy shall I bequeath to thee?
My resolution, love, shall be thy boast,
By whose example thou reveng'd mayst be.
How Tarquin must be us'd, read it in me: 1195
Myself, thy friend, will kill myself, thy foe,
And for my sake serve thou false Tarquin so.

"This brief abridgement of my will I make:
My soul and body to the skies and ground;
My resolution, husband, do thou take; 1200
Mine honour be the knife's that makes my
wound;
My shame be his that did my fame confound;
And all my fame that lives disbursed be
To those that live, and think no shame of
me.

"Thou, Collatine, shalt oversee this will; 1205
How was I overseen that thou shalt see it!
My blood shall wash the slander of mine ill;
My life's foul deed, my life's fair end shall free
it.
Faint not, faint heart, but stoutly say, 'So be
it:'
Yield to my hand; my hand shall conquer
thee: 1210
Thou dead, both die, and both shall victors
be."

This plot of death when sadly she had laid,
And wip'd the brinish pearl from her bright
eyes,
With untun'd tongue she hoarsely calls her
maid,
Whose swift obedience to her mistress hies; 1215
For fleet-wing'd duty with thought's feathers
flies.
Poor Lucrece' cheeks unto her maid seem so As winter meads when sun doth melt their snow.

Her mistress she doth give demure good-mor-
row,
With soft slow tongue, true mark of modesty, 1220
And sorts a sad look to her lady's sorrow,
For why her face wore sorrow's livery;
But durst not ask of her audaciously

Why her two suns were cloud-eclipsed so,
Nor why her fair cheeks over-wash'd with
woe: 1225

But as the earth doth weep, the sun being set,
Each flower moist'ned like a melting eye;
Even so the maid with swelling drops gan wet
Her circled eyne, enforc'd by sympathy
Of those fair suns set in her mistress' sky, 1230
Who in a salt-wav'd ocean quench their light,
Which makes the maid weep like the dewy
night.

A pretty while these pretty creatures stand,
Like ivory conduits coral cisterns filling:
One justly weeps; the other takes in hand 1235
No cause, but company, of her drops spilling.
Their gentle sex to weep are often willing,
Grieving themselves to guess at others'
smarts,
And then they drown their eyes or break
their hearts.

For men have marble, women waxen, minds, 1240
And therefore are they form'd as marble will;
The weak oppress'd, the impression of strange
kinds
Is form'd in them by force, by fraud, or skill.
Then call them not the authors of their ill,
No more than wax shall be accounted
evil 1245
Wherein is stamp'd the semblance of a devil.

Their smoothness, like a goodly champaign
plain,
Lays open all the little worms that creep;
In men, as in a rough-grown grove, remain
Cave-keeping evils that obscurely sleep. 1250 Through crystal walls each little mote will peep;
Though men can cover crimes with bold stern
looks,
Poor women's faces are their own faults'
books.

No man inveigh against the withered flower,
But chide rough winter that the flower hath
kill'd; 1255
Not that devour'd, but that which doth devour,
Is worthy blame. O, let it not be hid Poor women's faults, that they are so fulfill'd
With men's abuses: those proud lords, to blame,
Make weak-made women tenants to their
shame. 1260

The precedent whereof in Lucrece view,
Assail'd by night with circumstances strong
Of present death, and shame that might ensue
By that her death, to do her husband wrong.
Such danger to resistance did belong, 1265
That dying fear through all her body spread;
And who cannot abuse a body dead?

By this, mild patience bid fair Lucrece speak
To the poor counterfeit of her complaining:

"My girl," quoth she, "on what occasion
break 1270
Those tears from thee, that down thy cheeks are raining?"

If thou dost weep for grief of my sustaining,
Know, gentle wench, it small avails my mood;
If tears could help, mine own would do me
good.

"But tell me, girl, when went"—and there
she stay'd 1275
Till after a deep groan—"Tarquin from
hence?"

"Madam, ere I was up," repli'd the maid,
"The more to blame my sluggard negligence.
Yet with the fault I thus far can dispense;
Myself was stirring ere the break of day, 1280
And, ere I rose, was Tarquin gone away."

"But, lady, if your maid may be so bold,
She would request to know your heaviness."
"O, peace!" quoth Lucrece:—"if it should be told,
The repetition cannot make it less; 1285
For more it is than I can well express,
And that deep torture may be call'd a hell
When more is felt than one hath power to tell."

"Go, get me hither paper, ink, and pen;
Yet save that labour, for I have them here. —
What should I say?—One of my husband's
men 1291
Bid thou be ready, by and by, to bear
A letter to my lord, my love, my dear.
Bid him with speed prepare to carry it;
The cause craves haste, and it will soon be writ." 1295

Her maid is gone, and she prepares to write,
First hovering o'er the paper with her quill.
Conceit and grief an eager combat fight;
What wit sets down is blotted straight with ill;
This is too curious-good, this blunt and ill: 1300
Much like a press of people at a door,
Through her inventions, which shall go before.

At last she thus begins: "Thou worthy lord
Of that unworthy wife that greeteth thee, Health to thy person! Next vouchsafe to afford— 1305

If ever, love, thy Lucrece thou wilt see—
Some present speed to come and visit me.
So, I commend me from our house in grief;
My woes are tedious, though my words are brief."

Here folds she up the tenour of her woe, 1310
Her certain sorrow writ uncertainly.
By this short schedule Collatine may know
Her grief, but not her grief's true quality.
She dares not thereof make discovery,
Lest he should hold it her own gross abuse,
Ere she with blood had stain'd her stain'd excuse. 1315

Besides, the life and feeling of her passion
She hoards, to spend when he is by to hear her;

When sighs and groans and tears may grace the fashion
Of her disgrace, the better so to clear her 1320
From that suspicion which the world might bear
her.

To shun this blot, she would not blot the letter

With words, till action might become them better.

To see sad sights moves more than hear them
told;

For then the eye interprets to the ear 1325
The heavy motion that it doth behold,
When every part a part of woe doth bear.

'Tis but a part of sorrow that we hear;
Deep sounds make lesser noise than shallow
fords,

And sorrow ebbs, being blown with wind of
words. 1330

Her letter now is seal'd, and on it writ,
"At Ardea to my lord with more than haste."
The post attends, and she delivers it,
Charging the sour-fac'd groom to hie as fast
As lagging fowls before the northern blast, 1335 Speed more than speed but dull and slow she deems:

Extremity still urgeth such extremes.

The homely villain curtsies to her low;
And, blushing on her, with a steadfast eye
Receives the scroll without or yea or no, 1340
And forth with bashful innocence doth hie.
But they whose guilt within their bosoms lie
Imagine every eye beholds their blame;
For Lucrece thought he blush'd to see her
shame,

When, silly groom! God wot, it was defect 1345
Of spirit, life, and bold audacity.
Such harmless creatures have a true respect
To talk in deeds, while others saucily
Promise more speed, but do it leisurely;
Even so this pattern of the worn-out age 1350
Pawn'd honest looks, but laid no words to gage.

His kindled duty kindled her mistrust,
That two red fires in both their faces blazed;
She thought he blush'd, as knowing Tarquin's
lust, 1355

And, blushing with him, wistly on him gazed;
Her earnest eye did make him more amazed;
The more she saw the blood his cheeks replenish,
The more she thought he spied in her some blemish.

But long she thinks till he return again,
And yet the duteous vassal scarce is gone. 1360
The weary time she cannot entertain,
For now 't is stale to sigh, to weep, and groan.
So woe hath wearied woe, moan tired moan,
That she her plants a little while doth stay,
Paising for means to mourn some newer
way. 1365

At last she calls to mind where hangs a piece
Of skilful painting, made for Priam's Troy;
Before the which is drawn the power of Greece,
For Helen's rape the city to destroy,
Threat'ning cloud-kissing Ilium with annoy; 1370
Which the conceited painter drew so proud,
As heaven, it seem'd, to kiss the turrets
bow'd.

A thousand lamentable objects there,
In scorn of nature, art gave lifeless life:
Many a dry drop seem'd a weeping tear, 1375
Shed for the slaughter'd husband by the wife;
The red blood reek'd, to show the painter's
strife;
And dying eyes gleam'd forth their ashy
lights,
Like dying coals burnt out in tedious nights.

There might you see the labouring plover 1380
Begrin'd with sweat, and smeared all with dust;
And from the towers of Troy there would appear
The very eyes of men through loop-holes thrust,
Gazing upon the Greeks with little lust.
Such sweet observance in this work was had,
That one might see those far-off eyes look
sad. 1386

In great commanders grace and majesty
You might behold, triumphing in their faces;
In youth, quick bearing and dexterity;
And here and there the painter interlaces 1390
Pale cowards, marching on with trembling paces;
Which heartless peasants did so well resemble,
That one would swear he saw them quake
and tremble.

In Ajax and Ulysses, O, what art
Of physiognomy might one behold! 1395
The face of either cipher'd either's heart;
Their face their manners most expressly told:
In Ajax' eyes blunt rage and rigour roll'd;
But the mild glance that sly Ulysses lent Showed deep regard and smiling government. 1400

There pleading might you see grave Nestor
stand,
As 'twere encouraging the Greeks to fight;
Making such sober action with his hand,
That it beguill'd attention, charm'd the sight.
In speech, it seem'd, his beard, all silver white, Wagg'd up and down, and from his lips did fly 1406
Thin winding breath, which purld up to the sky.

About him was a press of gaping faces,
Which seem'd to swallow up his sound advice;
All jointly list'ning, but with several graces,
As if some mermaid did their ears entice, 1411
Some high, some low, the painter was so nice;
The scalps of many, almost hid behind,
To jump up higher seem'd, to mock the mind.

Here one man's hand lean'd on another's head,
His nose being shadowed by his neighbour's
ear; 1416
Here one being throng'd bears back, all-boll'n and red;
Another smother'd seems to pelt and swear;
And in their rage such signs of rage they
bear,
As, but for loss of Nestor's golden words, 1420
It seem'd they would debate with angry swords.

For much imaginary work was there;
Conceit deceitful, so compact, so kind,
That for Achilles' image stood his spear,
Gripp'd in an armed hand; himself, behind, 1425
Was left unseen, save to the eye of mind.
A-hand, a foot, a face, a leg, a head,
Stood for the whole to be imagined.

And from the walls of strong-besieged Troy
When their brave hope, bold Hector, march'd to field, 1430
Stood many Trojan mothers, sharing joy
To see their youthful sons bright weapons wield;
And to their hope they such odd action yield,
That through their light joy seemed to appear,
Like bright things stain'd, a kind of heavy
fear. 1436

And from the strand of Dardan, where they fought,
To Simois' reedy banks the red blood ran,
Whose waves to imitate the blood sought
With swelling ridges; and their ranks began
To break upon the galled shore, and than 1440
Retire again, till, meeting greater ranks,
They join and shoot their foam at Simois'
banks.

To this well-painted piece is Lucrece come,
To find a face where all distress is steel'd. 1444
Many she sees where cares have carved some,
But none where all distress and colour dwell'd
Till she despairing Hecuba beheld,
Staring on Priam's wounds with her old eyes,
Which bleeding under Pyrrhus' proud foot
lies.

In her the painter had anatomiz'd 1450
Time's ruin, beauty's wreck, and grim care's reign.
Her cheeks with chaps and wrinkles were dis-
guis'd;
Of what she was, no semblance did remain.
Her blue blood chang'd to black in every vein,
Wanting the spring that those shrunk pipes had fed, 1456
Show'd life imprison'd in a body dead.

On this sad shadow Lucrece spends her eyes,
And shapes her sorrow to the beldam's woes,
Who nothing wants to answer her but cries,
And bitter words to ban her cruel foes; 1460
The painter was no god to lend her those.

And therefore Lucrece swears he did her
wrong,
To give her so much grief and not a tongue.

"Poor instrument," quoth she, "without a
sound,
I'll tune thy woes with my lamenting tongue;
And drop sweet balm in Priam's painted
wound,
And rail on Pyrrhus that hath done him wrong;
And with my tears quench Troy that burns so
long;
And with my knife scratch out the angry
eyes
Of all the Greeks that are thine enemies. 1470

"Show me the strumpet that began this stir,
That with my nails her beauty I may tear.
Thy heat of lust, fond Paris, did incur
This load of wrath that burning Troy doth
bear;
Thy eye kindled the fire that burneth here; 1475
And here in Troy, for trespass of thine eye,
The sire, the son, the dame, and daughter
die.

"Why should the private pleasure of some one
Become the public plague of many moe?
Let sin, alone committed, light alone 1480
Upon his head that hath transgressed so;
Let guiltless souls be freed from guilty woe:
For one's offence why should so many fall,
To plague a private sin in general?

"Lo, here weeps Hecuba, here Priam dies, 1485
Here manly Hector faints, here Troilus wounds,
Here friend by friend in bloody channel lies,
And friend to friend gives unadvised wounds,
And one man's lust these many lives confounds.
Had doting Priam check'd his son's desire, Troy had been bright with fame and not with
fire." 1491

Here feelingly she weeps Troy's painted woes;
For sorrow, like a heavy-hanging bell,
Once set on ringing, with his own weight goes;
Then little strength rings out the doleful
knell. 1495

So Lucrece, set a-work, sad tales doth tell
To pencill'd pensiveness and colour'd sorrow;
She lends them words, and she their looks doth borrow.

She throws her eyes about the painting round,
And who she finds forlorn she doth lament. 1500
At last she sees a wretched image bound,
That piteous looks to Phrygian shepherds lent:
His face, though full of cares, yet show'd content;

Onward to Troy with the blunt swains he goes,
So mild, that Patience seem'd to scorn his woes. 1505

In him the painter labour'd with his skill
To hide deceit, and give the harmless show
An humble gait, calm looks, eyes wailing still,

A brow unbent, that seem'd to welcome woe;
Cheeks neither red nor pale, but mingled so 1510
That blushing red no guilty instance gave,
Nor ashy pale the fear that false hearts have

But, like a constant and confirmed devil,
He entertain'd a show so seeming-just,
And therein so ensconced his secret evil, 1515
That jealousy itself could not mistrust
False creeping craft and perjury should thrust
Into so bright a day such black-fac'd storms,
Or blot with hell-born sin such saint-like forms.

The well-skill'd workman this mild image
drew 1520
For perjurd Sinon, whose enchanting story
The credulous old Priam after saw;
Whose words like wildfire burnt the shining
glory
Of rich-built Ilium, that the skies were sorry,
And little stars shot from their fixed places, 1525
When their glass fell wherein they view'd their faces.

This picture she advisedly perus'd,
And chid the painter for his wondrous skill,
Saying, some shape in Sinon's was abus'd;
So fair a form lodg'd not a mind so ill. 1530
And still on him she gaz'd; and gazing still,
Such signs of truth in his plain face she spied,
That she concludes the picture was belied.

"It cannot be," quoth she, "that so much guile"—
She would have said, "can lurk in such a
look;" 1535
But Tarquin's shape came in her mind the
while,
And from her tongue "can lurk" from "cannot" took:
"It cannot be" she in that sense forsook,
And turn'd it thus, "It cannot be, I find,
But such a face should bear a wicked
mind: 1540

"For even as subtle Sinon here is painted,
So sober-sad, so weary, and so mild,
As if with grief or travail he had fainted,
To me came Tarquin armed to begild
With outward honesty, but yet defil'd 1545
With inward vice. As Priam him did cherish,
So did I Tarquin; so my Troy did perish.

"Look, look, how list'ning Priam wets his
eyes,
To see those borrowed tears that Sinon sheds!
Priam, why art thou old and yet not wise? 1550
For every tear he falls a Trojan bleeds;
His eye drops fire, no water thence proceeds;
Those round clear pearls of his, that move
thy pity,
Are balls of quenchless fire to burn thy city.

"Such devils steal effects from lightless hell ; 1555

For Sinon in his fire doth quake with cold,
And in that cold, hot-burning fire doth dwell ;
These contraries such unity do hold

Only to flatter fools and make them bold :
So Priam's trust false Sinon's tears doth flatter, 1560

That he finds means to burn his Troy with water."

Here, all enrag'd, such passion her assails
That patience is quite beaten from her breast.
She tears the senseless Sinon with her nails,
Comparing him to that unhappy guest 1565
Whose deed hath made herself herself detest.

At last she smilingly with this gives o'er ;
" Fool, fool ! " quoth she, " his wounds will not be sore."

Thus ebbs and flows the current of her sorrow,
And time doth weary time with her complain-
ing. 1570

She looks for night, and then she longs for
morrow,
And both she thinks too long with her remaining.

Short time seems long in sorrow's sharp sustaining ;

Though woe be heavy, yet it seldom sleeps ;
And they that watch see time how slow it creeps : 1575

Which all this time hath overslipp'd her thought,
That she with painted images hath spent ;
Being from the feeling of her own grief brought
By deep surmise of others' detriment,
Losing her woes in shows of discontent. 1580

It easeth some, though none it ever cures,
To think their dolour others have endured.

But now the mindful messenger, come back,
Brings home his lord and other company,
Who finds his Lucrece clad in mourning black ;
And round about her tear-distained eye 1585

Blue circles stream'd, like rainbows in the sky.
These water-galls in her dim element

Foretell new storms to those already spent :

Which when her sad-beholding husband saw,
Amazed in her sad face he stares : 1591
Her eyes, though sod in tears, look'd red and raw,

Her lively colour kill'd with deadly cares.
He hath no power to ask her how she fares.

Both stood, like old acquaintance in a trance, 1595

Met far from home, wond'ring each other's chance.

At last he takes her by the bloodless hand,
And thus begins : " What uncouth ill event
Hath thee befallen, that thou dost trembling
stand ?

Sweet love, what spite hath thy fair colour
spent ? 1600

Why art thou thus attir'd in discontent ?

Unmask, dear dear, this moody heaviness,
And tell thy grief, that we may give redress."

Three times with sighs she gives her sorrow
fire,

Ere once she can discharge one word of woe.
At length address'd to answer his desire, 1605

She modestly prepares to let them know
Her honour is ta'en prisoner by the foe ;

While Collatine and his consorted lords
With sad attention long to hear her words.

And now this pale swan in her watery nest 1611
Begins the sad dirge of her certain ending ;

" Few words," quoth she, " shall fit the trespass best,

Where no excuse can give the fault amend-
ing.

In me moe woes than words are now depend-
ing ; 1615

And my laments would be drawn out too
long,

To tell them all with one poor tired tongue.

" Then be this all the task it hath to say :
Dear husband, in the interest of thy bed

A stranger came, and on that pillow lay 1620
Where thou wast wont to rest thy weary head ;

And what wrong else may be imagined
By foul enforcement might be done to me,

From that, alas, thy Lucrece is not free.

" For in the dreadful dead of dark midnight,
With shining falchion in my chamber came 1625

A creeping creature, with a flaming light,
And softly cried, ' Awake, thou Roman dame,

And entertain my love ; else lasting shame
On thee and thine this night I will inflict, 1630

If thou my love's desire do contradict.

" ' For some hard-favour'd groom of thine,' quoth he,

' Unless thou yoke thy liking to my will,
I'll murder straight, and then I'll slaughter
thee

And swear I found you where you did fulfil
The loathsome act of lust, and so did kill 1635

The lechers in their deed. This act will be My fame and thy perpetual infamy.'

" With this, I did begin to start and cry ;
And then against my heart he set his sword,

Swearing, unless I took all patiently, 1641
I should not live to speak another word ;

So should my shame still rest upon record,

And never be forgot in mighty Rome

The adulterate death of Lucrece and her groom. 1645

" Mine enemy was strong, my poor self weak,
And far the weaker with so strong a fear.

My bloody judge forbade my tongue to speak ;
No rightful plea might plead for justice there.

His scarlet lust came evidence to swear 1650
That my poor beauty had purloin'd his eyes ;

And when the judge is robb'd, the prisoner
dies.

"O, teach me how to make mine own excuse !
 Or at the least this refuge let me find ;
 Though my gross blood be stain'd with this
 abuse, 1655
 Immaculate and spotless is my mind ;
 That was not forc'd ; that never was inclin'd
 To accessory yieldings, but still pure
 Doth in her poison'd closet yet endure."

Lo, here, the hopeless merchant of this loss, 1660
 With head declin'd, and voice damm'd up with
 woe,
 With sad set eyes, and wretched arms across,
 From lips new-waxen pale begins to blow
 The grief away that stops his answer so :
 But, wretched as he is, he strives in vain ;
 What he breathes out his breath drinks up
 again. 1665

As through an arch the violent roaring tide
 Outruns the eye that doth behold his haste,
 Yet in the eddy boundeth in his pride 1669
 Back to the strait that forc'd him on so fast ;
 In rage sent out, recall'd in rage, being past :
 Even so his sighs, his sorrows, make a saw,
 To push grief on and back the same grief
 draw.

Which speechless woe of his, poor she attend-
 eth,
 And his untimely frenzy thus awaketh : 1675
 "Dear lord, thy sorrow to my sorrow lendeth
 Another power ; no flood by raining slaketh.
 My woe too sensible thy passion maketh
 More feeling-painful : let it then suffice
 To drown one woe, one pair of weeping eyes.

"And for my sake, when I might charm thee
 so 1681
 For she that was thy Lucrece, now attend me :
 Be suddenly revenged on my foe,
 Thine, mine, his own : suppose thou dost defend me
 From what is past : the help that thou shalt lend me 1685
 Comes all too late, yet let the traitor die,
 For sparing justice feeds iniquity.

"But ere I name him, you fair lords," quoth she,
 Speaking to those that came with Collatine,
 "Shall plight your honourable faiths to me,
 With swift pursuit to venge this wrong of
 mine ; 1691
 For 't is a meritorious fair design
 To chase injustice with revengeful arms.
 Knights, by their oaths, should right poor ladies' harms."

At this request, with noble disposition 1695
 Each present lord began to promise aid,
 As bound in knighthood to her imposition,
 Longing to hear the hateful foe bewray'd.
 But she, that yet her sad task hath not said,
 The protestation stops. "O, speak," quoth
 she, 1700
 "How may this forced stain be wip'd from
 me ?

"What is the quality of mine offence,
 Being constrain'd with dreadful circumstance ?
 May my pure mind with the foul act dispense, 1705
 My low-declined honour to advance ?
 May any terms acquit me from this chance ?
 The poisoned fountain clears itself again ;
 And why not I from this compelled stain ?

With this, they all at once began to say,
 Her body's stain her mind untainted clears ;
 While with a joyless smile she turns away 1711
 The face, that map which deep impression
 bears
 Of hard misfortune, carv'd in it with tears.
 "No, no," quoth she, "no dame, hereafter living, 1714
 By my excuse shall claim excuse's giving."

Here with a sigh, as if her heart would break,
 She throws forth Tarquin's name: "He, he,"
 she says,
 But more than "he" her poor tongue could not speak ;
 Till after many accents and delays, 1719
 Untimely breathings, sick and short assays,
 She utters this, "He, he, fair lords, 't is
 he,
 That guides this hand to give this wound to
 me."

Even here she sheathed in her harmless breast
 A harmful knife, that thence her soul unsheathed.
 That blow did bail it from the deep unrest 1725
 Of that polluted prison where it breathed.
 Her contrite sighs unto the clouds bequeathed
 Her winged sprite, and through her wounds doth fly
 Life's lasting date from cancell'd destiny.

Stone-still, astonish'd with this deadly deed, 1730
 Stood Collatine and all his lordly crew ;
 Till Lucrece' father, that beholds her bleed,
 Himself on her self-slaught'ed body threw ;
 And from the purple fountain Brutus drew
 The murderous knife, and, as it left the
 place, 1735
 Her blood, in poor revenge, held it in chase ;

And bubbling from her breast, it doth divide
 In two slow rivers, that the crimson blood
 Circles her body in on every side,
 Who, like a late-sack'd island, vastly stood 1740
 Bare and unpeopled in this fearful flood.
 Some of her blood still pure and red re-
 main'd,
 And some look'd black, and that false Tar-
 quin stain'd.

About the mourning and congealed face
 Of that black blood a watery rigol goes, 1745
 Which seems to weep upon the tainted place ;
 And ever since, as pitying Lucrece' woes,
 Corrupted blood some watery token shows ;
 And blood untainted still doth red abide,
 Blushing at that which is so putrid'd. 1750

"Daughter, dear daughter," old Lucretius cries,
 "That life was mine which thou hast here deprived."

If in the child the father's image lies,
 Where shall I live now Lucrece is unliv'd?
 Thou wast not to this end from me derived.

If children pre-decease progenitors,
 We are their offspring, and they none of ours.

"Poor broken glass, I often did behold
 In thy sweet semblance my old age new born;
 But now that fair fresh mirror, dim and old,

Shows me a bare-bon'd death by time outworn.
 O, from thy cheeks my image thou hast torn,
 And shiver'd all the beauty of my glass,
 That I no more can see what once I was!

"O Time, cease thou thy course and last no longer,
 If they surcease to be that should survive.
 Shall rotten Death make conquest of the stronger

And leave the falt'ring feeble souls alive?
 The old bees die, the young possess their hive:
 Then live, sweet Lucrece, live again and see

Thy father die, and not thy father thee!"

By this, starts Collatine as from a dream,
 And bids Lucretius give his sorrow place;
 And then in key-cold Lucrece' bleeding stream
 He falls, and bathes the pale fear in his face,

And counterfeits to die with her a space;
 Till manly shame bids him possess his breath
 And live to be revenged on her death.

The deep vexation of his inward soul
 Hath serv'd a dumb arrest upon his tongue;
 Who, mad that sorrow should his use control,
 Or keep him from heart-easing words so long,
 Begins to talk; but through his lips do throng
 Weak words, so thick come in his poor heart's aid,

That no man could distinguish what he said.

Yet sometime "Tarquin" was pronounced plain,

But through his teeth, as if the name he tore.
 This windy tempest, till it blow up rain,
 Held back his sorrow's tide, to make it more;
 At last it rains, and busy winds give o'er:
 Then son and father weep with equal strife
 Who should weep most, for daughter or for wife.

The one doth call her his, the other his,
 Yet neither may possess the claim they lay.
 The father says, "She's mine." "O, mine she is,"

Replies her husband: "do not take away
 My sorrow's interest; let no mourner say

He weeps for her, for she was only mine,
 And only must be wail'd by Collatine."

"O," quoth Lucretius, "I did give that life Which she too early and too late hath spill'd."
 "Woe, woe," quoth Collatine, "she was my wife,

I ow'd her, and 't is mine that she hath kill'd."
 "My daughter!" and "My wife!" with clamours fill'd

The dispers'd air, who, holding Lucrece' life,
 Answer'd their cries, "My daughter!" and "My wife!"

Brutus, who pluck'd the knife from Lucrece' side,

Seeing such emulation in their woe,
 Began to clothe his wit in state and pride,
 Burying in Lucrece' wound his folly's show.
 He with the Romans was esteemed so
 As silly jeering idiots are with kings,
 For sportive words and utt'ring foolish things.

But now he throws that shallow habit by,
 Wherein deep policy did him disguise;
 And arm'd his long-hid wits advisedly,
 To check the tears in Collatinus' eyes.
 "Thou wronged lord of Rome," quoth he,
 "arise.

Let my unsounded self, suppos'd a fool,
 Now set thy long-experienc'd wit to school.

"Why, Collatine, is woe the cure for woe?
 Do wounds help wounds, or grief help grievous deeds?

Is it revenge to give thyself a blow
 For his foul act by whom thy fair wife bleeds?
 Such childish humour from weak minds proceeds;

Thy wretched wife mistook the matter so,
 To slay herself, that should have slain her foe.

"Courageous Roman, do not steep thy heart
 In such relenting dew of lamentations;
 But kneel with me and help to bear thy part,
 To rouse our Roman gods with invocations
 That they will suffer these abominations,
 Since Rome herself in them doth stand disgraced,
 By our strong arms from forth her fair streets chased.

"Now, by the Capitol that we adore,
 And by this chaste blood so unjustly stained,
 By heaven's fair sun that breeds the fat earth's store,
 By all our country rights in Rome maintained,
 And by chaste Lucrece' soul that late complained

Her wrongs to us, and by this bloody knife,
 We will revenge the death of this true wife."

This said, he struck his hand upon his breast,
 And kiss'd the fatal knife, to end his vow:

And to his protestation urg'd the rest,
 Who, wond'ring at him, did his words allow.
 Then jointly to the ground their knees they bow; 1840
 And that deep vow, which Brutus made before,
 He doth again repeat, and that they swore.

When they had sworn to this advised doom,
 They did conclude to bear dead Lucrece thence;
 To show her bleeding body thorough Rome, 1851
 And so to publish Tarquin's foul offence:
 Which being done with speedy diligence,
 The Romans plausibly did give consent
 To Tarquin's everlasting banishment. 1855

SONNETS

THE first collective edition of Shakespeare's Sonnets was published by Thomas Thorpe in 1609. It is manifest that the copy was surreptitiously obtained, and the volume issued without the author's consent. The Sonnets were not again reprinted till they appeared with much miscellaneous matter in an edition published in 1640. Thorpe's edition is the basis of the present text.

The date of composition is a matter of dispute. It is recognized that the period during which they were written must have included several years, but which years is not agreed. The chief external evidence is the reference in Meres's Palladis Tamia (1598) to his "sugred Sonnets among his private friends," a phrase which implies that some were then in private circulation. This is strengthened by the printing of Sonnets 138 and 144 in the Passionate Pilgrim in 1599.

There is nothing but internal evidence to tell us whether the order in which they appear in the edition of 1609 is due to the poet. A certain amount of reason in the present arrangement is admitted by all. A large number of the Sonnets 1 to 126 are addressed to a man; many of those after 126 to a woman. But many in both divisions have no indication of the sex of the person addressed; and not a few are generalized utterances addressed to no one in particular.

Viewed in the light of the vast contemporary sonnet literature, many of these poems belong to well-recognized literary conventions. The pleading with a beautiful youth to marry; the power of verse to bestow immortality; the analysis of amorous emotion; the vituperation of the lady; the adulation of a noble patron; — these and other themes belong to the traditions of the form which were well established before Shakespeare essayed it. But after this is recognized, the question remains whether, in re-working these ideas with unexampled brilliance and intensity, Shakespeare was prompted by mere professional emulation, or by actual personal experiences for which the current conventions gave a suitable form of utterance, or by such an imaginative impulse as lies behind the living utterances of his dramatic creations. It must be admitted that some sonnets are so artificial as to make plausible for them the first explanation; others, especially those expressing the uncommon situation in which his friend wins his lady away from him, while the poet retains his passion for both, and those referring to the indignity of the actor's profession, may have reference to real incidents in his life; but the splendor of the poems as a whole is mainly due to the same cause as gave supreme distinction to his dramatic productions, — the intensity of the imaginative fervor of an essentially poetic mind. From this point of view it will be seen that attempts to decide the question of "sincerity" by historical identifications are bound to be futile and misleading, implying as they do a misconception of the nature of artistic emotion.

As to the personages involved, one party identifies the fair youth with William Herbert, Earl of Pembroke, and finds confirmation in the "Mr. W. H." to whom Thorpe dedicated the volume. But it is possible that the "onlie begetter" was merely the publisher's friend who procured the manuscript. The Pembroke theory implies the later dating of the majority of the poems (1598–1601), and is usually, though not necessarily, held to imply the identification of the "dark lady" with the blond Mistress Mary Fitton. Another finds in the young nobleman Shakespeare's early patron, the Earl of Southampton; and this view implies that most of the personal sonnets belong to the years 1594–98. As to the rival poet or poets alluded to in Sonnets 78–86, Chapman, Drayton, Jonson, Barnes, and others have been proposed; but on this point we have not, nor are likely to have, anything approaching assurance.

FROM fairest creatures we desire increase,
That thereby beauty's rose might never die,
But as the ripper should by time decease,
His tender heir might bear his memory:
But thou, contracted to thine own bright eyes,
Feed'st thy light's flame with self-substantial fuel,

Making a famine where abundance lies,
Thyself thy foe, to thy sweet self too cruel.
Thou that art now the world's fresh ornament
And only herald to the gaudy spring, ¹⁰
Within thine own buduriest thy content
And, tender churl, mak'st waste in niggard-
ing.

Pity the world, or else this glutton be,
To eat the world's due, by the grave and
thee.

2

When forty winters shall besiege thy brow,
And dig deep trenches in thy beauty's field,
Thy youth's proud livery, so gaz'd on now,
Will be a tatter'd weed, of small worth held. ⁵
Then being ask'd where all thy beauty lies,
Where all the treasure of thy lusty days,
To say, within thine own deep-sunken eyes,
Were an all-eating shame and thriftless praise.
How much more praise deserv'd thy beauty's
use

If thou couldst answer, "This fair child of mine ¹⁰
Shall sum my count and make my old excuse,"
Proving his beauty by succession time!

This were to be new made when thou art
old,

And see thy blood warm when thou feel'st it
cold.

3

Look in thy glass, and tell the face thou viewest
Now is the time that face should form another;
Whose fresh repair if now thou not renewest,
Thou dost beguile the world, unless some
mother.

For where is she so fair whose unear'd womb ⁵
Disdains the tillage of thy husbandry?
Or who is he so fond will be the tomb
Of his self-love, to stop posterity?
Thou art thy mother's glass, and she in thee
Calls back the lovely April of her prime; ¹⁰
So thou through windows of thine age shalt see
Despite of wrinkles this thy golden time.

But if thou live, rememb'ed not to be,
Die single, and thine image dies with thee.

Unthrifty loveliness, why dost thou spend
Upon thyself thy beauty's legacy?
Nature's bequest gives nothing, but doth lend,
And being frank she lends to those are free.
Then, beauteous niggard, why dost thou abuse
The bounteous largess given thee to give? ⁶
Profitless usurer, why dost thou use
So great a sum of sums, yet canst not live?
For having traffic with thyself alone,
Thou of thyself thy sweet self dost deceive. ¹⁰
Then how, when Nature calls thee to be gone,
What acceptable audit canst thou leave?

Thy unus'd beauty must be tomb'd with thee,
Which, used, lives the executor to be.

5

Those hours, that with gentle work did frame
The lovely gaze where every eye doth dwell,
Will play the tyrants to the very same
And that unfair which fairly doth excel;

For never-resting time leads summer on 5
To hideous winter and confounds him there, Sap cheek'd with frost and lusty leaves quite
gone,

Beauty o'ersnow'd and bareness everywhere;
Then, were not summer's distillation left,
A liquid prisoner pent in walls of glass, 10
Beauty's effect with beauty were bereft,
Nor it nor no remembrance what it was:

But flowers distill'd, though they with winter
meet,

Leese but their show; their substance still lives sweet.

6

Then let not winter's ragged hand deface
In thee thy summer, ere thou be distill'd:
Make sweet some vial; treasure thou some
place

With beauty's treasure, ere it be self-kill'd.
That use is not forbidden usury 5

Which happies those that pay the willing loan;
That's for thyself to breed another thee,
Or ten times happier, be it ten for one;
Ten times thyself were happier than thou art,
If ten of thine ten times refigur'd thee: 10
Then what could death do, if thou shouldst
depart,

Leaving thee living in posterity?

Be not self-will'd, for thou art much too fair
To be death's conquest and make worms thine heir.

7

Lo! in the orient when the gracious light
Lifts up his burning head, each under eye
Doth homage to his new-appearing sight,
Serving with looks his sacred majesty;
And having climb'd the steep-up heavenly hill, 5
Resembling strong youth in his middle age,
Yet mortal looks adore his beauty still,
Attending on his golden pilgrimage;
But when from highest pitch, with weary car,
Like feeble age, he reeleth from the day, 10
The eyes, 'fore duteous, now converted are
From his low tract and look another way:

So thou, thyself out-going in thy noon,
Unlook'd on diest, unless thou get a son.

8

Music to hear, why hear'st thou music sadly?
Sweets with sweets war not, joy delights in joy.
Why lov'st thou that which thou receiv'st not gladly,

Or else receiv'st with pleasure thine annoy?
If the true concord of well-tuned sounds, 5

By unions married, do offend thine ear,
They do but sweetly chide thee, who confounds
In singleness the parts that thou shouldst bear.
Mark how one string, sweet husband to another,
Strikes each in each by mutual ordering, 10
Resembling sire and child and happy mother,
Who all in one, one pleasing note do sing;

Whose speechless song, being many, seeming
one,

Sings this to thee: "Thou single wilt prove none."

9

Is it for fear to wet a widow's eye
That thou consum'st thyself in single life?
Ah! if thou issueless shalt hap to die,
The world will wail thee, like a makeless wife;
The world will be thy widow and still weep 5
That thou no form of thee hast left behind,
When every private widow well may keep
By children's eyes her husband's shape in
mind.

Look, what an unthrift in the world doth spend Shifts but his place, for still the world enjoys
it; 10

But beauty's waste hath in the world an end,
And kept unus'd, the user so destroys it.

No love toward others in that bosom sits
That on himself such murderous shame commits.

10

For shame! deny that thou bear'st love to any,
Who for thyself art so unprovident.
Grant, if thou wilt, thou art lov'd of many,
But that thou none lov'st is most evident;
For thou art so possess'd with murderous hate
That 'gainst thyself thou stick'st not to conspire, 5

Seeking that beauteous roof to ruinate
Which to repair should be thy chief desire.

O, change thy thought, that I may change my
mind!

Shall hate be fairer lodg'd than gentle love?
Be, as thy presence is, gracious and kind, 11
Or to thyself at least kind-hearted prove:

Make thee another self, for love of me,
That beauty still may live in thine or thee.

11

As fast as thou shalt wane, so fast thou grow'st
In one of thine, from that which thou depart-
est;

And that fresh blood which youngly thou bestow'st

Thou mayst call thine when thou from youth convertest.

Herein lives wisdom, beauty, and increase; 5
Without this, folly, age, and cold decay.

If all were minded so, the times should cease
And threescore year would make the world
away.

Let those whom Nature hath not made for store,

Harsh, featureless, and rude, barrenly perish:
Look, whom she best endow'd she gave the
more; 11

Which bounteous gift thou shouldst in bounty cherish.

She carv'd thee for her seal, and meant thereby

Thou shouldst print more, not let that copy
die.

12

When I do count the clock that tells the time,
And see the brave day sunk in hideous night;
When I behold the violet past prime,
And sable curls all silver'd o'er with white;

When lofty trees I see barren of leaves 5
 Which erst from heat did canopy the herd,
 And summer's green all girded up in sheaves
 Borne on the bier with white and bristly beard;
 Then of thy beauty do I question make,
 That thou among the wastes of time must go,
 Since sweets and beauties do themselves forsake 11
 And die as fast as they see others grow;
 And nothing 'gainst Time's scythe can make defence
 Save breed, to brave him when he takes thee
 hence.

13

O that you were yourself! but, love, you are
 No longer yours than you yourself here live:
 Against this coming end you should prepare,
 And your sweet semblance to some other give.
 So should that beauty which you hold in lease
 Find no determination; then you were 6
 Yourself again after yourself's decease,
 When your sweet issue your sweet form should
 bear.
 Who lets so fair a house fall to decay,
 Which husbandry in honour might uphold 10
 Against the stormy gusts of winter's day
 And barren rage of death's eternal cold?
 O, none but unthriffs! Dear my love, you
 know
 You had a father: let your son say so.

14

Not from the stars do I my judgement pluck;
 And yet methinks I have astronomy,
 But not to tell of good or evil luck,
 Of plagues, of dearths, or seasons' quality;
 Nor can I fortune to brief minutes tell, 5
 'Pointing to each his thunder, rain, and wind,
 Or say with princes if it shall go well,
 By oft predict that I in heaven find:
 But from thine eyes my knowledge I derive,
 And, constant stars, in them I read such art 10
 As truth and beauty shall together thrive,
 If from thyself to store thou wouldst convert;
 Or else of thee this I prognosticate:
 Thy end is truth's and beauty's doom and date.

15

When I consider everything that grows
 Holds in perfection but a little moment,
 That this huge stage presenteth nought but shows
 Whereon the stars in secret influence comment;
 When I perceive that men as plants increase, 5
 Cheered and check'd even by the self-same
 sky,
 Vaunt in their youthful sap, at height decrease,
 And wear their brave state out of memory;
 Then the conceit of this inconstant stay
 Sets you most rich in youth before my sight, 10
 Where wasteful Time debateth with Decay.
 To change your day of youth to sullied night;
 And all in war with Time for love of you,
 As he takes from you, I engraft you new.

16

But wherefore do not you a mightier way
 Make war upon this bloody tyrant, Time?
 And fortify yourself in your decay
 With means more blessed than my barren
 rhyme?
 Now stand you on the top of happy hours, 5
 And many maiden gardens yet unset
 With virtuous wish would bear your living
 flowers,
 Much liker than your painted counterfeit:
 So should the lines of life that life repair,
 Which this, Time's pencil, or my pupil pen, 10
 Neither in inward worth nor outward fair,
 Can make you live yourself in eyes of men.
 To give away yourself keeps yourself still,
 And you must live, drawn by your own sweet skill.

17

Who will believe my verse in time to come,
 If it were fill'd with your most high deserts?
 Though yet, heaven knows, it is but as a tomb
 Which hides your life and shows not half your parts.
 If I could write the beauty of your eyes 5
 And in fresh numbers number all your graces,
 The age to come would say, "This poet lies;
 Such heavenly touches ne'er touch'd earthly faces."
 So should my papers, yellowed with their age,
 Be scorn'd like old men of less truth than
 tongue, 10
 And your true rights be term'd a poet's rage
 And stretched metre of an antique song:
 But were some child of yours alive that time,
 You should live twice, in it and in my rhyme.

18

Shall I compare thee to a summer's day?
 Thou art more lovely and more temperate:
 Rough winds do shake the darling buds of May,
 And summer's lease hath all too short a date;
 Sometime too hot the eye of heaven shines, 5
 And often is his gold complexion dimm'd;
 And every fair from fair sometime declines,
 By chance or nature's changing course untrimm'd:
 But thy eternal summer shall not fade
 Nor lose possession of that fair thou ow'st; 10
 Nor shall Death brag thou wand'rest in his shade,
 When in eternal lines to time thou grow'st;
 So long as men can breathe or eyes can see,
 So long lives this and this gives life to thee.

19

Devouring Time, blunt thou the lion's paws,
 And make the earth devour her own sweet brood;
 Pluck the keen teeth from the fierce tiger's
 jaws,
 And burn the long-liv'd phoenix in her blood;
 Make glad and sorry seasons as thou fleets, 5
 And do whate'er thou wilt, swift-footed Time,
 To the wide world and all her fading sweets;
 But I forbid thee one most heinous crime:

O, carve not with thy hours my love's fair brow,
Nor draw no lines there with thine antique pen;
Him in thy course untainted do allow
For beauty's pattern to succeeding men.

Yet, do thy worst, old Time: despite thy
wrong,

My love shall in my verse ever live young.

20

A woman's face with Nature's own hand painted

Hast thou, the master mistress of my passion;

A woman's gentle heart, but not acquainted
With shifting change, as is false women's fashion;

An eye more bright than theirs, less false in rolling,

Gilding the object whereupon it gazeth;

A man in hue, all hues in his controlling,

Which steals men's eyes and women's souls amazeth.

And for a woman wert thou first created;

Till Nature, as she wrought thee, fell a-doting,
And by addition me of thee defeated

By adding one thing to my purpose nothing.

But since she prick'd thee out for women's
pleasure,

Mine be thy love, and thy love's use their treasure.

21

So is it not with me as with that Muse,

Stirr'd by a painted beauty to his verse,

Who heaven itself for ornament doth use

And every fair with his fair doth rehearse,

Making a couplement of proud compare

With sun and moon, with earth and sea's rich gems,

With April's first-born flowers, and all things rare

That heaven's air in this huge rondure hems.

O let me, true in love, but truly write,

And then believe me, my love is as fair

As any mother's child, though not so bright

As these gold candles fix'd in heaven's air:

Let them say more that like of hearsay well;

I will not praise, that purpose not to sell.

22

My glass shall not persuade me I am old,

So long as youth and thou are of one date;

But when in thee time's furrows I behold,

Then look I death my days should expiate.

For all that beauty that doth cover thee

Is but the seemly raiment of my heart,

Which in thy breast doth live, as thine in me:

How can I then be elder than thou art?

O, therefore, love, be of thyself so wary

As I, not for myself, but for thee will;

Bearing thy heart, which I will keep so chary

As tender nurse her babe from faring ill.

Presume not on thy heart when mine is slain;

Thou gav'st me thine, not to give back again.

23

As an unperfect actor on the stage

Who with his fear is put besides his part,

Or some fierce thing replete with too much
rage,

Whose strength's abundance weakens his own
heart,

So I, for fear of trust, forget to say

The perfect ceremony of love's rite,

And in mine own love's strength seem to decay,
O'ercharg'd with burden of mine own love's might.

O, let my books be then the eloquence

And dumb presagers of my speaking breast,

Who plead for love and look for recompense

More than that tongue that more hath more express'd.

O, learn to read what silent love hath writ:

To hear with eyes belongs to love's fine wit.

24

Mine eye hath play'd the painter and hath steel'd

Thy beauty's form in table of my heart;

My body is the frame wherein 't is held,

And perspective it is best painter's art.

For through the painter must you see his skill

To find where your true image pictur'd lies;

Which in my bosom's shop is hanging still,

That hath his windows glazed with thine eyes.

Now see what good turns eyes for eyes have
done:

Mine eyes have drawn thy shape, and thine for
me

Are windows to my breast, wherethrough the sun

Delights to peep, to gaze therein on thee;

Yet eyes this cunning want to grace their art;

They draw but what they see, know not the
heart.

25

Let those who are in favour with their stars

Of public honour and proud titles boast,

Whilst I, whom fortune of such triumph bars,

Unlook'd for joy in that I honour most.

Great princes' favourites their fair leaves spread

But as the marigold at the sun's eye,

And in themselves their pride lies buried,

For at a frown they in their glory die.

The painful warrior famoused for fight,

After a thousand victories once foil'd,

Is from the book of honour razed quite,

And all the rest forgot for which he toil'd.

Then happy I, that love and am beloved

Where I may not remove nor be removed.

26

Lord of my love, to whom in vassalage

Thy merit hath my duty strongly knit,

To thee I send this written ambassador,

To witness duty, not to show my wit;

Duty so great, which wit so poor as mine

May make seem bare, in wanting words to show
it,

But that I hope some good conceit of thine

In thy soul's thought, all naked, will bestow it;

Till whatsoever star that guides my moving

Points on me graciously with fair aspect,

And puts apparel on my tattered loving,
To show me worthy of thy sweet respect:
Then may I dare to boast how I do love thee;
Till then not show my head where thou mayst prove me.

27

Weary with toil, I haste me to my bed,
The dear repose for limbs with travel tired;
But then begins a journey in my head,
To work my mind, when body's work 's expired;
For then my thoughts, from far where I abide,
Intend a zealous pilgrimage to thee,
And keep my drooping eyelids open wide,
Looking on darkness which the blind do see;
Save that my soul's imaginary sight
Presents thy shadow to my sightless view,
Which, like a jewel hung in ghastly night,
Makes black night beauteous and her old face
new.

Lo! thus, by day my limbs, by night my
mind,

For thee and for myself no quiet find.

28

How can I then return in happy plight,
That am debar'd the benefit of rest?
When day's oppression is not eas'd by night,
But day by night, and night by day, oppress'd?
And each, though enemies to either's reign,
Do in consent shake hands to torture me;
The one by toil, the other to complain
How far I toil, still farther off from thee.
I tell the day, to please him thou art bright
And dost him grace when clouds do blot the
heaven;

So flatter I the swart-complexion'd night,
When sparkling stars twire not, thou gild'st
the even:

But day doth daily draw my sorrows longer,
And night doth nightly make grief's length seem stronger.

29

When, in disgrace with Fortune and men's eyes,
I all alone beweep my outcast state,
And trouble deaf heaven with my bootless
cries,

And look upon myself and curse my fate,
Wishing me like to one more rich in hope,
Featur'd like him, like him with friends posssess'd,

Desiring this man's art, and that man's scope,
With what I most enjoy contented least;
Yet in these thoughts myself almost despising,
Haply I think on thee; and then my state,
Like to the lark at break of day arising
From sullen earth, sings hymns at heaven's
gate;

For thy sweet love rememb' red such wealth brings

That then I scorn to change my state with kings.

30

When to the sessions of sweet silent thought
I summon up remembrance of things past,

I sigh the lack of many a thing I sought,
And with old woes new wail my dear time's waste:

Then can I drown an eye, unus'd to flow,
For precious friends hid in death's dateless
night,

And weep afresh love's long since cancell'd
woe,

And moan the expense of many a vanish'd
sight:

Then can I grieve at grievances foregone,
And heavily from woe to woe tell o'er
The sad account of fore-bemoan'd moan,
Which I new pay as if not paid before.

But if the while I think on thee, dear friend,
All losses are restor'd and sorrows end.

31

Thy bosom is endeared with all hearts
Which I by lacking have supposed dead;
And there reigns love and all love's loving
parts,

And all those friends which I thought buried.
How many a holy and obsequious tear
Hath dear religious love stolen from mine eye
As interest of the dead, which now appear
But things remov'd that hidden in thee lie!
Thou art the grave where buried love doth live,
Hung with the trophies of my lovers gone,
Who all their parts of me to thee did give,
That due of many now is thine alone.

Their images I lov'd I view in thee,
And thou, all they, hast all the all of me.

32

If thou survive my well-contented day,
When that churl Death my bones with dust shall cover,

And shalt by fortune once more re-survey
These poor rude lines of thy deceased lover,
Compare them with the bett'ring of the time,
And though they be outstripp'd by every pen,
Reserve them for my love, not for their rhyme,
Exceeded by the height of happier men.

O, then vouchsafe me but this loving thought:
"Had my friend's Muse grown with this growing age,

A dearer birth than this his love had brought,
To march in ranks of better equipage;

But since he died and poets better prove,
Theirs for their style I'll read, his for his
love."

33

Full many a glorious morning have I seen
Flatter the mountain tops with sovereign eye,
Kissing with golden face the meadows green,
Gilding pale streams with heavenly alchemy;
Anon permit the basest clouds to ride
With ugly rack on his celestial face,
And from the forlorn world his visage hide,
Stealing unseen to west with this disgrace:
Even so my sun one early morn did shine
With all-triumphant splendour on my brow;
But out, alack! he was but one hour mine;
The region-cloud hath mask'd him from me
now.

Yet him for this my love no whit disdaineth;
Suns of the world may stain when heaven's sun staineth.

34

Why didst thou promise such a beauteous day
And make me travel forth without my cloak,
To let base clouds o'ertake me in my way,
Hiding thy bravery in their rotten smoke?
'T is not enough that through the cloud thou
break,

To dry the rain on my storm-beaten face,
For no man well of such a salve can speak
That heals the wound and cures not the disgrace.

Nor can thy shame give physic to my grief;
Though thou repent, yet I have still the loss:
The offender's sorrow lends but weak relief
To him that bears the strong offence's cross.

Ah! but those tears are pearl which thy love sheds,
And they are rich, and ransom all ill deeds.

35

No more be griev'd at that which thou hast
done:

Roses have thorns, and silver fountains mud;
Clouds and eclipses stain both moon and sun,
And loathsome canker lives in sweetest bud.
All men make faults, and even I in this,
Authorizing thy trespass with compare,
Myself corrupting, salving thy amiss,

Excusing thy sins more than thy sins are;
For to thy sensual fault I bring in sense —
Thy adverse party is thy advocate —
And 'gainst myself a lawful plea commence.
Such civil war is in my love and hate

That I an accessory needs must be
To that sweet thief which sourly robs from me.

36

Let me confess that we two must be twain,
Although our undivided loves are one:
So shall those blots that do with me remain,
Without thy help by me be borne alone.
In our two loves there is but one respect,
Though in our lives a separable spite,
Which though it alter not love's sole effect,
Yet doth it steal sweet hours from love's de-
light.

I may not evermore acknowledge thee,
Lest my bewailed guilt should do thee shame,
Nor thou with public kindness honour me,
Unless thou take that honour from thy name:

But do not so; I love thee in such sort
As, thou being mine, mine is thy good report.

37

As a decrepit father takes delight
To see his active child do deeds of youth,
So I, made lame by fortune's dearest spite,
Take all my comfort of thy worth and truth.
For whether beauty, birth, or wealth, or wit,
Or any of these all, or all, or more,
Entitled in their parts do crowned sit,
I make my love engrafted to this store:

So then I am not lame, poor, nor despis'd,
Whilst that this shadow doth such substance
give

That I in thy abundance am suffic'd
And by a part of all thy glory live.

Look, what is best, that best I wish in thee:
This wish I have; then ten times happy me!

38

How can my Muse want subject to invent,
While thou dost breathe, that pour'st into my verse

Thine own sweet argument, too excellent
For every vulgar paper to rehearse?

O, give thyself the thanks, if aught in me
Worthy perusal stand against thy sight;
For who's so dumb that cannot write to thee,
When thou thyself dost give invention light?
Be thou the tenth Muse, ten times more in
worth

Than those old nine which rhymers invoke;
And he that calls on thee, let him bring forth
Eternal numbers to outlive long date.

If my slight Muse do please these curious days,
The pain be mine, but thine shall be the praise.

39

O, how thy worth with manners may I sing,
When thou art all the better part of me?
What can mine own praise to mine own self
bring?

And what is't but mine own when I praise thee?
Even for this let us divided live,
And our dear love lose name of single one,
That by this separation I may give

That due to thee which thou deserv'st alone.
O absence, what a torment wouldst thou prove,
Were it not thy sour leisure gave sweet leave
To entertain the time with thoughts of love,
Which time and thoughts so sweetly doth deceive,

And that thou teachest how to make one
twain,

By praising him here who doth hence remain!

40

Take all my loves, my love, yea, take them all;
What hast thou then more than thou hadst before?

No love, my love, that thou mayst true love
call;

All mine was thine before thou hadst this more.
Then if for my love thou my love receivest,
I cannot blame thee for my love thou ushest;
But yet be blam'd, if thou thyself deceivest
By wilful taste of what thyself refusest.

I do forgive thy robbery, gentle thief,
Although thou steal thee all my poverty;

And yet, love knows, it is a greater grief
To bear love's wrong than hate's known injury.

Lascivious grace, in whom all ill well shows,
Kill me with spites; yet we must not be foes

41

Those pretty wrongs that liberty commits,
When I am sometime absent from thy heart.

Thy beauty and thy years full well befits,
 For still temptation follows where thou art.
 Gentle thou art and therefore to be won;
 Beauteous thou art, therefore to be assailed;
 And when a woman woos, what woman's son
 Will sourly leave her till she have prevailed?
 Ay me! but yet thou mightst my seat forbear,
 And chide thy beauty and thy straying youth,
 Who lead thee in their riot even there;
 Where thou art forc'd to break a twofold truth;
 Hers, by thy beauty tempting her to thee,
 Thine, by thy beauty being false to me.

42

That thou hast her, it is not all my grief,
 And yet it may be said I lov'd her dearly;
 That she hath thee, is of my wailing chief.
 A loss in love that touches me more nearly.
 Loving offenders, thus I will excuse ye:
 Thou dost love her, because thou know'st I love her:

And for my sake even so doth she abuse me,
 Suffring my friend for my sake to approve her.
 If I lose thee, my loss is my love's gain,
 And losing her, my friend hath found that loss;
 Both find each other, and I lose both tway,
 And both for my sake lay on me this cross.

But here's the joy; my friend and I are one;
 Sweet flattery! then she loves but me alone.

43

When most I wink, then do mine eyes best see,
 For all the day they view things unexpected;
 But when I sleep, in dreams they look on thee,
 And darkly bright are bright in dark directed.
 Then thou, whose shadow shadows doth make bright,

How would thy shadow's form form happy
 show

To the clear day with thy much clearer light,
 When to unseeing eyes thy shade shines so!
 How would, I say, mine eyes be blessed made
 By looking on thee in the living day,
 When in dead night thy fair imperfect shade
 Through heavy sleep on sightless eyes doth
 stay!

All days are nights to see till I see thee,
 And nights bright days when dreams do show thee me.

44

If the dull substance of my flesh were thought,
 Injurious distance should not stop my way;
 For then, despite of space, I would be brought,
 From limits far remote, where thou dost stay.
 No matter then although my foot did stand
 Upon the farthest earth remov'd from thee;
 For nimble thought can jump both sea and land
 As soon as think the place where he would be.
 But, ah! thought kills me that I am not
 thought,

To leap large lengths of miles when thou art
 gone,

But that so much of earth and water wrought
 I must attend time's leisure with my moan,
 Receiving nought by elements so slow
 But heavy tears, badges of either's woe.

45

The other two, slight air and purging fire,
 Are both with thee, wherever I abide;
 The first my thought, the other my desire,
 These present-absent with swift motion slide.
 For when these quicker elements are gone
 In tender embassy of love to thee,
 My life, being made of four, with two alone
 Sinks down to death, oppress'd with melancholy;

Until life's composition be recured
 By those swift messengers return'd from thee,
 Who even but now come back again, assured
 Of thy fair health, recounting it to me:

This told, I joy; but then no longer glad,
 I send them back again and straight grow sad.

46

Mine eye and heart are at a mortal war
 How to divide the conquest of thy sight;
 Mine eye my heart thy picture's sight would bar,

My heart mine eye the freedom of that right.
 My heart doth plead that thou in him dost lie,
 A closet never pierc'd with crystal eyes;
 But the defendant doth that plea deny
 And says in him thy fair appearance lies.
 To side this title is impanneled

A quest of thoughts, all tenants to the heart,
 And by their verdict is determined
 The clear eye's moiety and the dear heart's
 part;

As thus: mine eye's due is thy outward part,
 And my heart's right thy inward love of
 heart.

47

Betwixt mine eye and heart a league is took,
 And each doth good turns now unto the other.
 When that mine eye is famish'd for a look,
 Or heart in love with sighs himself doth
 smother,

With my love's picture then my eye doth feast
 And to the painted banquet bids my heart.
 Another time mine eye is my heart's guest
 And in his thoughts of love doth share a part.
 So, either by thy picture or my love,
 Thyself away art present still with me;
 For thou not farther than my thoughts canst
 move,

And I am still with them and they with thee;
 Or, if they sleep, thy picture in my sight
 Awakes my heart to heart's and eye's delight.

48

How careful was I, when I took my way,
 Each trifle under truest bars to thrust,
 That to my use it might unused stay
 From hands of falsehood, in sure wards of trust!
 But thou, to whom my jewels trifles are,
 Most worthy comfort, now my greatest grief,
 Thou, best of dearest and mine only care,
 Art left the prey of every vulgar thief.
 Thee have I not lock'd up in any chest,
 Save where thou art not, though I feel thou art.

Within the gentle closure of my breast,
From whence at pleasure thou mayst come and
part;

And even thence thou wilt be stolen, I fear,
For truth proves thievish for a prize so dear.

49

Against that time, if ever that time come,
When I shall see thee frown on my defects,
Whenas thy love hath cast his utmost sum,
Call'd to that audit by advi'sd respects;
Against that time when thou shalt strangely
pass

5

And scarcely greet me with that sun, thine eye,
When love, converted from the thing it was,
Shall reasons find of settled gravity,—
Against that time do I ensconce me here
Within the knowledge of mine own desert, 10
And this my hand against myself uprear,
To guard the lawful reasons on thy part:

To leave poor me thou hast the strength of
laws,

Since why to love I can allege no cause.

50

How heavy do I journey on the way,
When what I seek, my weary travel's end,
Doth teach that ease and that repose to say,
"Thus far the miles are measur'd from thy friend!"

The beast that bears me, tired with my woe, 5
Plods dully on, to bear that weight in me,
As if by some instinct the wretch did know
His rider lov'd not speed, being made from
thee.

The bloody spur cannot provoke him on
That sometimes anger thrusts into his hide; 10
Which heavily he answers with a groan,
More sharp to me than spurring to his side;

For that same groan doth put this in my
mind;

My grief lies onward and my joy behind.

51

Thus can my love excuse the slow offence
Of my dull bearer when from thee I speed:
From where thou art why should I haste me
thence?

Till I return, of posting is no need.

O, what excuse will my poor beast then find, 5
When swift extremity can seem but slow?
Then should I spur, though mounted on the wind;

In blinding speed no motion shall I know:
Then can no horse with my desire keep pace;
Therefore desire, of perfect'st love being made,
Shall neigh—no dull flesh—in his fiery race; 11
But love, for love, thus shall excuse my jade;

Since from thee going he went wilful-slow,
Towards thee I'll run, and give him leave to go.

52

So am I as the rich, whose blessed key
Can bring him to his sweet up-locked treasure,
The which he will not every hour survey,
For blunting the fine point of seldom pleasure.

Therefore are feasts so solemn and so rare, 5
Since, seldom coming, in the long year set,
Like stones of worth they thinly placed are,
Or captain jewels in the carcanet.
So is the time that keeps you as my chest,
Or as the wardrobe which the robe doth hide, 10
To make some special instant special blest
By new unfolding his imprison'd pride.

Blessed are you, whose worthiness gives scope,

Being had, to triumph, being lack'd, to hope.

53

What is your substance, whereof are you made,
That millions of strange shadows on you tend?
Since every one hath, every one, one shade,
And you, but one, can every shadow lend. 5
Describe Adonis, and the counterfeit
Is poorly imitated after you;
On Helen's cheek all art of beauty set,
And you in Grecian tires are painted new:
Speak of the spring and foison of the year;
The one doth shadow of your beauty show, 10
The other as your bounty doth appear;
And you in every blessed shape we know.

In all external grace you have some part,
But you like none, none you, for constant
heart.

54

O, how much more doth beauty beauteous seem
By that sweet ornament which truth doth give!
The rose looks fair, but fairer we deem
For that sweet odour which doth in it live. 5
The canker-blooms have full as deep a dye
As the perfumed tincture of the roses,
Hang on such thorns, and play as wantonly
When summer's breath their masked buds dis-closes:

But, for their virtue only is their show,
They live unwood'd and unprotected fade, 10
Die to themselves. Sweet roses do not so;
Of their sweet deaths are sweetest odours
made:

And so of you, beauteous and lovely youth,
When that shall fade, by verse distills your truth.

55

Not marble, nor the gilded monuments
Of princes, shall outlive this powerful rhyme;
But you shall shine more bright in these contents

Than unswept stone besmear'd with sluttish
time.

When wasteful war shall statues overturn, 5
And broils root out the work of masonry, Nor Mars his sword nor war's quick fire shall burn

The living record of your memory.
'Gainst death and all-oblivious enmity Shall you pace forth; your praise shall still find room 10

Even in the eyes of all posterity
That wear this world out to the ending doom,
So, till the judgement that yourself arise,
You live in this, and dwell in lovers' eyes.

56

Sweet love, renew thy force; be it not said
Thy edge should blunter be than appetite,
Which but to-day by feeding is allay'd,
To-morrow sharp'n'd in his former might.
So, love, be thou; although to-day thou fill Thy hungry eyes even till they wink with full-
ness,

To-morrow see again, and do not kill
The spirit of love with a perpetual dullness.
Let this sad interim like the ocean be
Which parts the shore, where two contracted
new
Come daily to the banks, that, when they see
Return of love, more blest may be the view;
Or call it winter, which being full of care
Makes summer's welcome thrice more wish'd, more rare.

57

Being your slave, what should I do but tend Upon the hours and times of your desire?
I have no precious time at all to spend,
Nor services to do, till you require.
Nor dare I chide the world-without-end hour
Whilst I, my sovereign, watch the clock for you,
Nor think the bitterness of absence sour
When you have bid your servant once adieu;
Nor dare I question with my jealous thought
Where you may be, or your affairs suppose,
But, like a sad slave, stay and think of nought Save, where you are how happy you make those.

So true a fool is love that in your will
Though you do anything, he thinks no ill.

58

That god forbid, that made me first your slave,
I should in thought control your times of
pleasure,

Or at your hand the account of hours to crave,
Being your vassal, bound to stay your leisure!
O, let me suffer, being at your beck,
The imprison'd absence of your liberty;
And patience, tame to sufferance, bide each check,

Without accusing you of injury.
Be where you list, your charter is so strong
That you yourself may privilege your time
To what you will; to you it doth belong
Yourself to pardon of self-doing crime.

I am to wait, though waiting so be hell;
Not blame your pleasure, be it ill or well.

59

If there be nothing new, but that which is Hath been before, how are our brains beguil'd,
Which, labouring for invention, bear amiss
The second burden of a former child!
O, that record could with a backward look,
Even of five hundred courses of the sun,
Show me your image in some antique book,
Since mind at first in character was done!
That I might see what the old world could say
To this composed wonder of your frame;
Whether we are mended, or wher better they,
Or whether revolution be the same.

O, sure I am, the wits of former days
To subjects worse have given admiring praise.

60

Like as the waves make towards the pebbled
shore,

So do our minutes hasten to their end;
Each changing place with that which goes be-
fore,

In sequent toil all forwards do contend.
Nativity, once in the main of light,
Crawls to maturity, wherewith being crown'd,
Crook'd eclipses 'gainst his glory fight,
And Time that gave doth now his gift con-
found.

Time doth transfix the flourish set on youth
And delves the parallels in beauty's brow,
Feeds on the rarities of nature's truth,
And nothing stands but for his scythe to mow;
And yet to times in hope my verse shall stand,
Praising thy worth, despite his cruel hand.

61

Is it thy will thy image should keep open
My heavy eyelids to the weary night?
Dost thou desire my slumbers should be broken,
While shadows like to thee do mock my sight?
Is it thy spirit that thou send'st from thee
So far from home into my deeds to pry,
To find out shames and idle hours in me,
The scope and tenour of thy jealousy?
O, no! thy love, though much, is not so great;
It is my love that keeps mine eye awake;
Mine own true love that doth my rest defeat,
To play the watchman ever for thy sake.

For thee watch I whilst thou dost wake elsewhere,

From me far off, with others all too near.

62

Sin of self-love possesseth all mine eye
And all my soul and all my every part;
And for this sin there is no remedy,
It is so grounded inward in my heart.
Methinks no face so gracious is as mine,
No shape so true, no truth of such account;
And for myself mine own worth do define,
As I all other in all words surmount.
But when my glass shows me myself indeed,
Beated and chopp'd with tann'd antiquity,
Mine own self-love quite contrary I read;
Self so self-loving were iniquity.

'T is thee, myself, that for myself I praise,
Painting my age with beauty of thy days.

63

Against my love shall be, as I am now,
With Time's injurious hand crush'd and o'er-
worn;

When hours have drain'd his blood and fill'd
his brow

With lines and wrinkles; when his youthful morn

Hath travell'd on to age's steepy night,
And all those beauties whereof now he's king
Are vanishing or vanish'd out of sight,
Stealing away the treasure of his spring;

For such a time do I now fortify
Against confounding age's cruel knife, 10
That he shall never cut from memory
My sweet love's beauty, though my lover's life:
His beauty shall in these black lines be seen,
And they shall live, and he in them still green.

64

When I have seen by Time's fell hand defaced

The rich proud cost of outworn buried age;
When sometime lofty towers I see down-razed
And brass eternal slave to mortal rage;
When I have seen the hungry ocean gain 5
Advantage on the kingdom of the shore,
And the firm soil win of the watery main,
Increasing store with loss and loss with store;
When I have seen such interchange of state,
Or state itself confounded to decay; 10
Ruin hath taught me thus to ruminate,
That Time will come and take my love away.

This thought is as a death, which cannot choose

But weep to have that which it fears to lose.

65

Since brass, nor stone, nor earth, nor boundless sea,

But sad mortality o'er-sways their power,
How with this rage shall beauty hold a plea,
Whose action is no stronger than a flower?
O, how shall summer's honey breath hold out 5
Against the wreckful siege of batt'ring days,
When rocks impregnable are not so stout,
Nor gates of steel so strong, but Time decays?
O fearful meditation! where, alack,
Shall Time's best jewel from Time's chest lie 10 hid?

Or what strong hand can hold his swift foot
back?

Or who his spoil of beauty can forbid?

O, none, unless this miracle have might,
That in black ink my love may still shine
bright.

66

Tir'd with all these, for restful death I cry,
As, to behold desert a beggar born,
And needy nothing trimm'd in jollity,
And purest faith unhappily forsworn,
And gilded honour shamefully misplac'd, 5
And maiden virtue rudely strumpeted,
And right perfection wrongfully disgrac'd,
And strength by limping sway disabled,
And art made tongue-tied by authority, 10
And folly, doctor-like, controlling skill,
And simple truth miscall'd simplicity,
And captive good attending captain ill:

Tir'd with all these, from these would I be
gone,

Save that, to die, I leave my love alone.

67

Ah! wherefore with infection should he live,
And with his presence grace impiety,
That sin by him advantage should achieve
And lace itself with his society?

Why should false painting imitate his cheek 5
And steal dead seeming of his living hue?
Why should poor beauty indirectly seek Roses of shadow, since his rose is true?
Why should he live, now Nature bankrupt is,
Beggard of blood to blush through lively veins?
For she hath no exchequer now but his, 11
And, proud of many, lives upon his gains.

O, him she stores, to show what wealth she had

In days long since, before these last so bad.

68

Thus is his cheek the map of days outworn,
When beauty liv'd and died as flowers do now,
Before these bastard signs of fair were born,
Or durst inhabit on a living brow;
Before the golden tresses of the dead, 5
The right of sepulchres, were shorn away,
To live a second life on second head;
Ere beauty's dead fleece made another gay.
In him those holy antique hours are seen, 10
Without all ornament, itself and true,
Making no summer of another's green,
Robbing no old to dress his beauty new;
And him as for a map doth Nature store,
To show false Art what beauty was of yore.

69

Those parts of thee that the world's eye doth
view

Want nothing that the thought of hearts can mend;

All tongues, the voice of souls, give thee that
due,

Utt'ring bare truth, even so as foes commend.
Thy outward thus with outward praise is 5
crown'd;

But those same tongues that give thee so thine
own

In other accents do this praise confound
By seeing farther than the eye hath shown.
They look into the beauty of thy mind,
And that, in guess, they measure by thy deeds;
Then, churls, their thoughts, although their 11
eyes were kind,

To thy fair flower add the rank smell of weeds:
But why thy odour matcheth not thy show,
The soil is this, that thou dost common grow.

70

That thou art blam'd shall not be thy defect,
For slander's mark was ever yet the fair;
The ornament of beauty is suspect,
A crow that flies in heaven's sweetest air.
So thou be good, slander doth but approve 5
Thy worth the greater, being woo'd of Time;
For canker vice the sweetest buds doth love,
And thou present'st a pure unstained prime.
Thou hast pass'd by the ambush of young 10
days,

Either not assail'd, or victor being charg'd; 10
Yet this thy praise cannot be so thy praise,
To tie up envy evermore enlarg'd:

If some suspect of ill mask'd not thy show,
Then thou alone kingdoms of hearts shouldst owe.

No longer mourn for me when I am dead
 Than you shall hear the surly sullen bell
 Give warning to the world that I am fled
 From this vile world, with vilest worms to dwell.

Nay, if you read this line, remember not
 The hand that writ it; for I love you so
 That I in your sweet thoughts would be forgot
 If thinking on me then should make you woe.
 O, if, I say, you look upon this verse
 When I perhaps compounded am with clay,¹⁰
 Do not so much as my poor name rehearse,
 But let your love even with my life decay,
 Lest the wise world should look into your moan
 And mock you with me after I am gone.

72

O, lest the world should task you to recite
 What merit liv'd in me, that you should love,
 After my death, dear love, forget me quite,
 For you in me can nothing worthy prove;
 Unless you would devise some virtuous lie,⁵
 To do more for me than mine own desert,
 And hang more praise upon deceased I
 Than niggard truth would willingly impart:
 O, lest your true love may seem false in this,
 That you for love speak well of me untrue,¹⁰
 My name be buried where my body is,
 And live no more to shame nor me nor you.
 For I am sham'd by that which I bring forth,
 And so should you, to love things nothing
 worth.

73

That time of year thou mayst in me behold
 When yellow leaves, or none, or few, do hang Upon those boughs which shake against the
 cold,
 Bare ruin'd choirs where late the sweet birds sang.
 In me thou see'st the twilight of such day⁵
 As after sunset fadeth in the west,
 Which by and by black night doth take away,
 Death's second self, that seals up all in rest.
 In me thou see'st the glowing of such fire
 That on the ashes of his youth doth lie,¹⁰
 As the death-bed whereon it must expire,
 Consum'd with that which it was nourish'd by.
 This thou perceiv'st, which makes thy love
 more strong,
 To love that well which thou must leave ere long.

74

But be contented: when that fell arrest
 Without all bail shall carry me away,
 My life hath in this line some interest,
 Which for memorial still with thee shall stay.
 When thou reviewest this, thou dost review⁵
 The very part was consecrate to thee:
 The earth can have but earth, which is his
 due;
 My spirit is thine, the better part of me:
 So then thou hast but lost the dregs of life,
 The prey of worms, my body being dead,¹⁰

The coward conquest of a wretch's knife,
 Too base of thee to be remembered.
 The worth of that is that which it contains,
 And that is this, and this with thee remains.

75

So are you to my thoughts as food to life,
 Or as sweet-season'd showers are to the ground;
 And for the peace of you I hold such strife
 As 'twixt a miser and his wealth is found;
 Now proud as an enjoyer, and anon⁵
 Doubting the filching age will steal his treasure,
 Now counting best to be with you alone,
 Then better'd that the world may see my pleasure;
 Sometime all full with feasting on your sight,
 And by and by clean starved for a look;¹⁰
 Possessing or pursuing no delight,
 Save what is had or must from you be took.
 Thus do I pine and surfeit day by day,
 Or gluttoning on all, or all away.

76

Why is my verse so barren of new pride,
 So far from variation or quick change?
 Why with the time do I not glance aside
 To new-found methods and to compounds
 strange?
 Why write I still all one, ever the same,⁵
 And keep invention in a noted weed,
 That every word doth almost tell my name,
 Showing their birth and where they did proceed?
 O, know, sweet love, I always write of you,
 And you and love are still my argument;¹⁰
 So all my best is dressing old words new,
 Spending again what is already spent:
 For as the sun is daily new and old,
 So is my love still telling what is told.

77

Thy glass will show thee how thy beauties wear,
 Thy dial how thy precious minutes waste;
 The vacant leaves thy mind's imprint will bear,
 And of this book this learning mayst thou taste.
 The wrinkles which thy glass will truly show⁵
 Of mouthed graves will give thee memory;
 Thou by thy dial's shady stealth mayst know
 Time's thievish progress to eternity.
 Look, what thy memory cannot contain Commit to these waste blanks, and thou shalt find¹⁰
 Those children nurs'd, deliver'd from thy brain,
 To take a new acquaintance of thy mind.
 These offices, so oft as thou wilt look,
 Shall profit thee and much enrich thy book.

78

So oft have I invok'd thee for my Muse
 And found such fair assistance in my verse
 As every alien pen hath got my use
 And under thee their poesy disperse.
 Thine eyes, that taught the dumb on high to sing,
 And heavy ignorance aloft to fly,
 Have added feathers to the learned's wing
 And given grace a double majesty.

Yet be most proud of that which I compile,
Whose influence is thine and born of thee: 10
In others' works thou dost but mend the style,
And arts with thy sweet graces graced be;
But thou art all my art and dost advance
As high as learning my rude ignorance.

79

Whilst I alone did call upon thy aid,
My verse alone had all thy gentle grace,
But now my gracious numbers are decay'd
And my sick Muse doth give another place. 5
I grant, sweet love, thy lovely argument
Deserves the travail of a worthier pen,
Yet what of thee thy poet doth invent
He robs thee of and pays it thee again.
He lends thee virtue and he stole that word 10
From thy behaviour; beauty doth he give
And found it in thy cheek; he can afford
No praise to thee but what in thee doth live.

Then thank him not for that which he doth
say,
Since what he owes thee thou thyself dost pay.

80

O, how I faint when I of you do write,
Knowing a better spirit doth use your name,
And in the praise thereof spends all his might,
To make me tongue-tied, speaking of your fame!

But since your worth, wide as the ocean is, 5
The humble as the proudest sail doth bear,
My saucy bark, inferior far to his,
On your broad main doth wilfully appear.
Your shallowest help will hold me up afloat,
Whilst he upon your soundless deep doth ride:
Or, being wreck'd, I am a worthless boat, 11
He of tall building and of goodly pride.

Then if he thrive and I be cast away,
The worst was this: my love was my decay.

81

Or I shall live your epitaph to make,
Or you survive when I in earth am rotten:
From hence your memory death cannot take,
Although in me each part will be forgotten. 4
Your name from hence immortal life shall have,
Though I, once gone, to all the world must die:
The earth can yield me but a common grave,
When you entombed in men's eyes shall lie.
Your monument shall be my gentle verse, 10
Which eyes not yet created shall o'er-read,
And tongues to be your being shall rehearse
When all the breathers of this world are dead;
You still shall live — such virtue hath my pen —

Where breath most breathes, even in the mouths of men.

82

I grant thou wert not married to my Muse,
And therefore mayst without attainit o'erlook
The dedicated words which writers use
Of their fair subject, blessing every book. 5
Thou art as fair in knowledge as in hue,
Finding thy worth a limit past my praise,

And therefore art enforc'd to seek anew
Some fresher stamp of the time-bettering days.
And do so, love; yet when they have devis'd
What strained touches rhetoric can lend, 10
Thou truly fair wert truly sympathiz'd
In true plain words by thy true-telling friend;
And their gross painting might be better us'd Where cheeks need blood; in thee it is abus'd.

83

I never saw that you did painting need,
And therefore to your fair no painting set;
I found, or thought I found, you did exceed
The barren tender of a poet's debt,
And therefore have I slept in your report, 5
That you yourself being extant well might show
How far a modern quill doth come too short,
Speaking of worth, what worth in you doth grow.

This silence for my sin you did impute,
Which shall be most my glory, being dumb; 10
For I impair not beauty being mute,
When others would give life and bring a tomb.
There lives more life in one of your fair eyes
Than both your poets can in praise devise.

84

Who is it that says most? Which can say more
Than this rich praise, that you alone are you?
In whose confine immured is the store
Which should example where your equal grew.
Lean penury within that pen doth dwell 5
That to his subject lends not some small glory;
But he that writes of you, if he can tell
That you are you, so dignifies his story.
Let him but copy what in you is writ,
Not making worse what nature made so clear, 10
And such a counterpart shall fame his wit,
Making his style admired everywhere.

You to your beauteous blessings add a curse,
Being fond on praise, which makes your praises worse.

85

My tongue-tied Muse in manners holds her still,
While comments of your praise, richly com-
pil'd,
Reserve their character with golden quill
And precious phrase by all the Muses fil'd.
I think good thoughts whilst other write good
words, 5
And like unlettered clerk still cry "Amen"
To every hymn that able spirit affords.
In polish'd form of well-refined pen.
Hearing you prais'd, I say, "'T is so, 't is true,"
And to the most of praise add something
more; 10
But that is in my thought, whose love to you,
Though words come hindmost, holds his rank before.

Then others for the breath of words respect,
Me for my dumb thoughts, speaking in effect.

86

Was it the proud full sail of his great verse,
Bound for the prize of all too precious you,

That did my ripe thoughts in my brain inhearse, Making their tomb the womb wherein they grew?

Was it his spirit, by spirits taught to write
Above a mortal pitch, that struck me dead?
No, neither he, nor his compeers by night
Giving him aid, my verse astonished.
He, nor that affable familiar ghost
Which nightly gulls him with intelligence,
As victors of my silence cannot boast;
I was not sick of any fear from thence:
But when your countenance fill'd up his line,
Then lack'd I matter; that enfeebled mine.

87

Farewell! thou art too dear for my possessing,
And like enough thou know'st thy estimate.
The charter of thy worth gives thee releasing;
My bonds in thee are all determinate.
For how do I hold thee but by thy granting?
And for that riches where is my deserving?
The cause of this fair gift in me is wanting,
And so my patent back again is swerving.
Thyself thou gav'st, thy own worth then not knowing,
Or me, to whom thou gav'st it, else mistak-
ing;
So thy great gift, upon misprision growing,
Comes home again, on better judgement making.

Thus have I had thee, as a dream doth flat-
ter,
In sleep a king, but waking no such matter.

88

When thou shalt be dispos'd to set me light,
And place my merit in the eye of scorn,
Upon thy side against myself I'll fight
And prove thee virtuous, though thou art for-sworn.

With mine own weakness being best acquainted,
Upon thy part I can set down a story
Of faults conceal'd, wherein I am attainted,
That thou in losing me shall win much glory:
And I by this will be a gainer too;
For bending all my loving thoughts on thee,
The injuries that to myself I do,
Doing thee vantage, double-vantage me.

Such is my love, to thee I so belong,
That for thy right myself will bear all wrong.

89

Say that thou didst forsake me for some fault,
And I will comment upon that offence;
Speak of my lameness, and I straight will halt,
Against thy reasons making no defence.

Thou canst not love, disgrace me half so ill,
To set a form upon desired change,
As I'll myself disgrace: knowing thy will,
I will acquaintance strangle and look strange,
Be absent from thy walks; and in my tongue
Thy sweet beloved name no more shall dwell,
Lest I, too much profane, should do it wrong,
And haply of our old acquaintance tell.

For thee against myself I'll vow debate,
For I must ne'er love him whom thou dost hate.

90

Then hate me when thou wilt; if ever, now;
Now, while the world is bent my deeds to cross,

Join with the spite of fortune, make me bow,
And do not drop in for an after-loss:
Ah, do not, when my heart hath scap'd this
sorrow,

Come in the rearward of a conquer'd woe;
Give not a windy night a rainy morrow,
To linger out a purpos'd overthrow.
If thou wilt leave me, do not leave me last,
When other petty griefs have done their spite,
But in the onset come; so shall I taste
At first the very worst of fortune's might,

And other strains of woe, which now seem
woe,
Compar'd with loss of thee will not seem so.

91

Some glory in their birth, some in their skill,
Some in their wealth, some in their bodies'
force,

Some in their garments, though new-fangled
ill,

Some in their hawks and hounds, some in their horse;

And every humour hath his adjunct pleasure,
Wherein it finds a joy above the rest:
But these particulars are not my measure;
All these I better in one general best.

Thy love is better than high birth to me,
Richer than wealth, prouder than garments'
cost,

Of more delight than hawks or horses be;
And having thee, of all men's pride I boast;
Wretched in this alone, that thou mayst take
All this away and me most wretched make.

92

But do thy worst to steal thyself away,
For term of life thou art assured mine,
And life no longer than thy love will stay,
For it depends upon that love of thine.
Then need I not to fear the worst of wrongs,
When in the least of them my life hath end.

I see a better state to me belongs
Than that which on thy humour doth depend;
Thou canst not vex me with inconstant mind,
Since that my life on thy revolt doth lie.
O, what a happy title do I find,
Happy to have thy love, happy to die!

But what's so blessed-fair that fears no blot?
Thou mayst be false, and yet I know it not.

93

So shall I live, supposing thou art true,
Like a deceived husband; so love's face
May still seem love to me, though alter'd new;
Thy looks with me, thy heart in other place:

For there can live no hatred in thine eye,
Therefore in that I cannot know thy change.
In many's looks the false heart's history
Is writ in moods and frowns and wrinkles
strange;

But heaven in thy creation did decree
That in thy face sweet love should ever dwell;

Whate'er thy thoughts or thy heart's workings
be, 11
Thy looks should nothing thence but sweetness
tell.

How like Eve's apple doth thy beauty grow,
If thy sweet virtue answer not thy show!

94

They that have power to hurt and will do none,
That do not do the thing they most do show,
Who, moving others, are themselves as stone,
Unmoved, cold, and to temptation slow,
They rightly do inherit heaven's graces 5
And husband nature's riches from expense;
They are the lords and owners of their faces,
Others but stewards of their excellence.
The summer's flower is to the summer sweet, 10
Though to itself it only live and die,
But if that flower with base infection meet,
The basest weed outbraves his dignity:

For sweetest things turn sourest by their deeds;

Lilies that fester smell far worse than weeds.

95

How sweet and lovely dost thou make the
shame

Which, like a canker in the fragrant rose,
Doth spot the beauty of thy budding name!
O, in what sweets dost thou thy sins enclose!
That tongue that tells the story of thy days, 5
Making lascivious comments on thy sport,
Cannot dispraise but in a kind of praise;
Naming thy name blesses an ill report.
O, what a mansion have those vices got
Which for their habitation chose out thee, 10
Where beauty's veil doth cover every blot,
And all things turns to fair that eyes can see!

Take heed, take heart, of this large privilege;

The hardest knife ill-us'd doth lose his edge.

96

Some say thy fault is youth, some wantonness;
Some say thy grace is youth and gentle sport;
Both grace and faults are lov'd of more and
less;

Thou mak'st faults graces that to thee resort.
As on the finger of a throned queen 5
The basest jewel will be well esteem'd,
So are those errors that in thee are seen
To truths translated and for true things deem'd.

How many lambs might the stern wolf betray
If like a lamb he could his looks translate! 10
How many gazers mightst thou lead away
If thou wouldst use the strength of all thy
state!

But do not so; I love thee in such sort
As, thou being mine, mine is thy good report.

97

How like a winter hath my absence been
From thee, the pleasure of the fleeting year!
What freezings have I felt, what dark days
seen!

What old December's bareness everywhere!

And yet this time remov'd was summer's time,
The teeming autumn, big with rich increase, 5
Bearing the wanton burden of the prime,
Like widowed wombs after their lords' decease.
Yet this abundant issue seem'd to me
But hope of orphans and unfathered fruit; 10
For summer and his pleasures wait on thee,
And, thou away, the very birds are mute;
Or, if they sing, 't is with so dull a cheer
That leaves look pale, dreading the winter's near.

98

From you have I been absent in the spring,
When proud-pied April, dress'd in all his trim,
Hath put a spirit of youth in everything,
That heavy Saturn laugh'd and leap'd with him. 5
Yet nor the lays of birds nor the sweet smell
Of different flowers in odour and in hue
Could make me any summer's story tell,
Or from their proud lap pluck them where they
grew;

Nor did I wonder at the lily's white,
Nor praise the deep vermillion in the rose; 10
They were but sweet, but figures of delight
Drawn after you, you pattern of all those.

Yet seem'd it winter still, and, you away,
As with your shadow I with these did play.

99

The forward violet thus did I chide:
Sweet thief, whence didst thou steal thy sweet that smells,

If not from my love's breath? The purple pride
Which on thy soft cheek for complexion dwells
In my love's veins thou hast too grossly dy'd. 5
The lily I condemned for thy hand,
And buds of marjoram had stolen thy hair;
The roses fearfully on thorns did stand,
One blushing shame, another white despair;
A third, nor red nor white, had stolen of both 10
And to his robbery had annex'd thy breath;
But, for his theft, in pride of all his growth
A vengeful canker eat him up to death.

More flowers I noted, yet I none could see
But sweet or colour it had stolen from thee.

100

Where art thou, Muse, that thou forget'st so
long
To speak of that which gives thee all thy might?

Spend'st thou thy fury on some worthless song,
Dark'ning thy power to lend base subjects
light?

Return, forgetful Muse, and straight redeem 5
In gentle numbers time so idly spent;
Sing to the ear that doth thy lays esteem
And gives thy pen both skill and argument.
Rise, resty Muse, my love's sweet face survey,
If time have any wrinkle graven there; 10
If any, be a satire to decay,
And make Time's spoils despised everywhere.

Give my love fame faster than Time wastes
life;

So thou prevent'st his scythe and crooked knife.

101

O truant Muse, what shall be thy amends
For thy neglect of truth in beauty dy'd?
Both truth and beauty on my love depends;
So dost thou too, and therein dignify'd.
Make answer, Muse: wilt thou not haply say,
"Truth needs no colour, with his colour fix'd;
Beauty no pencil, beauty's truth to lay;
But best is best, if never intermix'd"?
Because he needs no praise, wilt thou be dumb?
Excuse not silence so; for 't lies in thee
To make him much outlive a gilded tomb,
And to be prais'd of ages yet to be.

Then do thy office, Muse; I teach thee how To make him seem long hence as he shows
now.

102

My love is strength'n'd, though more weak in seeming;

I love not less, though less the show appear;
That love is merchandiz'd whose rich esteeming
The owner's tongue doth publish everywhere.
Our love was new and then but in the spring
When I was wont to greet it with my lays,
As Philomel in summer's front doth sing
And stops her pipe in growth of riper days:
Not that the summer is less pleasant now Than when her mournful hymns did hush the
night,

But that wild music burdens every bough
And sweets grown common lose their dear delight.

Therefore like her I sometime hold my
tongue,
Because I would not dull you with my song.

103

Alack, what poverty my Muse brings forth,
That having such a scope to show her pride,
The argument all bare is of more worth
Than when it hath my added praise beside!
O, blame me not, if I no more can write!
Look in your glass, and there appears a face
That over-goes my blunt invention quite,
Dulling my lines and doing me disgrace.
Were it not sinful then, striving to mend,
To mar the subject that before was well?
For to no other pass my verses tend
Than of your graces and your gifts to tell;
And more, much more, than in my verse can sit

Your own glass shows you when you look in it.

104

To me, fair friend, you never can be old,
For as you were when first your eye I ey'd,
Such seems your beauty still. Three winters
cold

Have from the forests shook three summers'
pride,

Three beauteous springs to yellow autumn
turn'd

In process of the seasons have I seen,
Three April perfumes in three hot Junes burn'd,
Since first I saw you fresh, which yet are green.
Ah! yet doth beauty, like a dial-hand,

Steal from his figure and no pace perceiv'd;
So your sweet hue, which methinks still doth
stand,

Hath motion, and mine eye may be deceiv'd:
For fear of which, hear this, thou age un-
bred;

Ere you were born was beauty's summer
dead.

105

Let not my love be call'd idolatry,
Nor my beloved as an idol show,
Since all alike my songs and praises be
To one, of one, still such, and ever so.
Kind is my love to-day, to-morrow kind,
Still constant in a wondrous excellence;
Therefore my verse to constancy confin'd,
One thing expressing, leaves out difference:
"Fair, kind, and true" is all my argument,
"Fair, kind, and true" varying to other words;
And in this change is my invention spent,
Three themes in one, which wondrous scope affords,

"Fair, kind, and true," have often liv'd
alone,

Which three till now never kept seat in one.

106

When in the chronicle of wasted time
I see descriptions of the fairest wights,
And beauty making beautiful old rhyme
In praise of ladies dead and lovely knights;
Then, in the blazon of sweet beauty's best,
Of hand, of foot, of lip, of eye, of brow,
I see their antique pen would have express'd
Even such a beauty as you master now.
So all their praises are but prophecies
Of this our time, all you prefiguring;
And, for they look'd but with divining eyes,
They had not skill enough your worth to sing:
For we, which now behold these present days,
Have eyes to wonder, but lack tongues to praise.

107

Not mine own fears, nor the prophetic soul
Of the wide world, dreaming on things to come,
Can yet the lease of my true love control,
Suppos'd as forfeit to a confin'd doom.
The mortal moon hath her eclipse endur'd,
And the sad augurs mock their own presage;
Incertainties now crown themselves assur'd,
And peace proclaims olives of endless age.
Now with the drops of this most balmy time
My love looks fresh, and Death to me subscribes,

Since, spite of him, I'll live in this poor rhyme,
While he insults o'er dull and speechless tribes:
And thou in this shalt find thy monument,
When tyrants' crests and tombs of brass are spent.

108

What's in the brain that ink may character
Which hath not figur'd to thee my true spirit?
What's new to speak, what new to register,
That may express my love or thy dear merit?

Nothing, sweet boy; but yet, like prayers
divine,
I must each day say o'er the very same,
Counting no old thing old, thou mine, I thine,
Even as when first I hallowed thy fair name.
So that eternal love in love's fresh case
Weighs not the dust and injury of age,
Nor gives to necessary wrinkles place,
But makes antiquity for aye his page,
Finding the first conceit of love there bred
Where time and outward form would show it dead.

109

O, never say that I was false of heart,
Though absence seem'd my flame to qualify.
As easy might I from myself depart
As from my soul, which in thy breast doth lie.
That is my home of love; if I have rang'd,
Like him that travels I return again,
Just to the time, not with the time exchang'd,
So that myself bring water for my stain.
Never believe, though in my nature reign'd
All frailties that besiege all kinds of blood,
That it could so preposterously be stain'd,
To leave for nothing all thy sum of good;
For nothing this wide universe I call,
Save thou, my rose; in it thou art my all.

110

Alas, 't is true I have gone here and there
And made myself a motley to the view, Gor'd mine own thoughts, sold cheap what is most dear,
Made old offences of affections new;
Most true it is that I have look'd on truth
Askance and strangely: but, by all above,
These blenches gave my heart another youth,
And worse essays prov'd thee my best of love.
Now all is done, have what shall have no end:
Mine appetite I never more will grind
On newer proof, to try an older friend,
A god in love, to whom I am confin'd.
Then give me welcome, next my heaven the
best,
Even to thy pure and most most loving breast.

111

O, for my sake do you with Fortune chide,
The guilty goddess of my harmful deeds,
That did not better for my life provide
Than public means which public manners breeds.

Thence comes it that my name receives a brand,
And almost thence my nature is subdu'd
To what it works in, like the dyer's hand.
Pity me then and wish I were renew'd;
Whilst, like a willing patient, I will drink
Potions of eisel 'gainst my strong infection;
No bitterness that I will bitter think,
Nor double penance, to correct correction.
Pity me then, dear friend, and I assure ye
Even that your pity is enough to cure me.

112

Your love and pity doth the impression fill
Which vulgar scandal stamp'd upon my brow;

For what care I who calls me well or ill,
So you o'er-green my bad, my good allow?
You are my all the world, and I must strive
To know my shames and praises from your
tongue;
None else to me, nor I to none alive,
That my steel'd sense or changes right or wrong.
In so profound abysm I throw all care
Of others' voices, that my adder's sense
To critic and to flatterer stopped are.
Mark how with my neglect I do dispense:
You are so strongly in my purpose bred
That all the world besides me thinks you're dead.

113

Since I left you, mine eye is in my mind;
And that which governs me to go about
Doth part his function and is partly blind,
Seems seeing, but effectually is out;
For it no form delivers to the heart
Of bird, of flower, or shape, which it doth latch:
Of his quick objects hath the mind no part,
Nor his own vision holds what it doth catch;
For if it see the rud'st or gentlest sight,
The most sweet favour or deformed'st creature,
The mountain or the sea, the day or night,
The crow or dove, it shapes them to your feature.

Incapable of more, replete with you,
My most true mind thus maketh mine [eye] untrue.

114

Or whether doth my mind, being crown'd with
you,
Drink up the monarch's plague, this flattery?
Or whether shall I say, mine eye saith true,
And that your love taught it this alchemy,
To make of monsters and things indigest
Such cherubins as your sweet self resemble,
Creating every bad a perfect best,
As fast as objects to his beams assemble?
O, 't is the first; 't is flattery in my seeing,
And my great mind most kingly drinks it up:
Mine eye well knows what with his gust is
'greeing,
And to his palate doth prepare the cup.
If it be poison'd, 't is the lesser sin
That mine eye loves it and doth first begin.

115

Those lines that I before have writ do lie,
Even those that said I could not love you dearer;
Yet then my judgement knew no reason why
My most full flame should afterwards burn clear,
But reckoning time, whose million'd accidents
Creep in 'twixt vows and change decrees of
kings,
Tan sacred beauty, blunt the sharpest intents,
Divert strong minds to the course of alt'ring
things;
Alas, why, fearing of time's tyranny,
Might I not then say, "Now I love you best,"

When I was certain o'er incertainty, 11
Crowning the present, doubting of the rest ?
Love is a babe ; then might I not say so,
To give full growth to that which still doth grow ?

116

Let me not to the marriage of true minds
Admit impediments. Love is not love
Which alters when it alteration finds,
Or bends with the remover to remove.
O, no ! it is an ever-fixed mark 5
That looks on tempests and is never shaken ;
It is the star to every wand'ring bark,
Whose worth's unknown, although his height be taken.
Love's not Time's fool, though rosy lips and cheeks
Within his bending sickle's compass come ; 10
Love alters not with his brief hours and weeks,
But bears it out even to the edge of doom.
If this be error and upon me proved,
I never writ, nor no man ever loved.

117

Accuse me thus : that I have scanted all
Wherein I should your great deserts repay,
Forgot upon your dearest love to call,
Whereto all bonds do tie me day by day ;
That I have frequent been with unknown 5
minds,
And given to time your own dear-purchas'd
right ;
That I have hoisted sail to all the winds
Which should transport me farthest from your sight.
Book both my wilfulness and errors down,
And on just proof surmise accumulate ; 10
Bring me within the level of your frown,
But shoot not at me in your wakened hate,
Since my appeal says I did strive to prove
The constancy and virtue of your love.

118

Like as, to make our appetites more keen,
With eager compounds we our palate urge,
As, to prevent our maladies unseen,
We sicken to shun sickness when we purge ;
Even so, being full of your ne'er-cloying sweet- 5
ness,
To bitter sauces did I frame my feeding,
And, sick of welfare, found a kind of meet-
ness
To be diseas'd ere that there was true need-
ing.
Thus policy in love, to anticipate
The ills that were not, grew to faults assured, 10
And brought to medicine a healthful state
Which, rank of goodness, would by ill be cured :
But thence I learn, and find the lesson true,
Drugs poison him that so fell sick of you.

119

What potions have I drunk of Siren tears,
Distill'd from limbeck's fowl as hell within,
Applying fears to hopes and hopes to fears,
Still losing when I saw myself to win !

What wretched errors hath my heart committed, 5
Whilst it hath thought itself so blessed never !
How have mine eyes out of their spheres been fitted
In the distraction of this madding fever !
O benefit of ill ! now I find true
That better is by evil still made better ; 10
And ruin'd love, when it is built anew, Grows fairer than at first, more strong, far greater.
So I return rebuk'd to my content,
And gain by ills thrice more than I have spent.

120

That you were once unkind befriends me now,
And for that sorrow which I then did feel
Needs must I under my transgression bow,
Unless my nerves were brass or hammered steel.
For if you were by my unkindness shaken 5
As I by yours, you 've pass'd a hell of time,
And I, a tyrant, have no leisure taken
To weigh how once I suffered in your crime.
O, that our night of woe might have remem-
b' red
My deepest sense, how hard true sorrow hits, 10
And soon to you, as you to me, then tend' red
The humble salve which wounded bosoms fits !
But that your trespass now becomes a fee ;
Mine ransoms yours, and yours must ransom
me.

121

'T is better to be vile than vile esteemed
When not to be receives reproach of being,
And the just pleasure lost which is so deemed
Not by our feeling but by others' seeing.
For why should others' false adulterate eyes 5
Give salutation to my sportive blood ?
Or on my frailties why are frailer spies,
Which in their wills count bad what I think
good ?
No, I am that I am, and they that level
At my abuses reckon up their own ; 10
I may be straight, though they themselves be bevel ;
By their rank thoughts my deeds must not be shown ;
Unless this general evil they maintain,
All men are bad, and in their badness reign.

122

Thy gift, thy tables, are within my brain
Full character'd with lasting memory,
Which shall above that idle rank remain
Beyond all date, even to eternity ;
Or at the least, so long as brain and heart 5
Have faculty by nature to subsist ;
Till each to raz'd oblivion yield his part
Of thee, thy record never can be miss'd.
That poor retention could not so much hold,
Nor need I tallies thy dear love to score ; 10
Therefore to give them from me was I bold,
To trust those tables that receive thee more.
To keep an adjunct to remember thee
Were to import forgetfulness in me.

123

No, Time, thou shalt not boast that I do change.

Thy pyramids built up with newer might
To me are nothing novel, nothing strange;
They are but dressings of a former sight.
Our dates are brief, and therefore we admire
What thou dost foist upon us that is old,
And rather make them born to our desire
Than think that we before have heard them told.

Thy registers and thee I both defy,
Not wond'ring at the present nor the past,
For thy records and what we see doth lie,
Made more or less by thy continual haste.
This I do vow and this shall ever be;
I will be true, despite thy scythe and thee.

124

If my dear love were but the child of state,
It might for Fortune's bastard be unfather'd,
As subject to Time's love or to Time's hate, Weeds among weeds, or flowers with flowers
gather'd.

No, it was builded far from accident;
It suffers not in smiling pomp, nor falls
Under the blow of thrall'd discontent,
Whereto the inviting time our fashion calls;
It fears not policy, that heretic,
Which works on leases of short-numb'rd
hours,

But all alone stands hugely politic,
That it nor grows with heat nor drowns with showers.

To this I witness call the fools of Time,
Which die for goodness, who have liv'd for crime.

125

Were't aught to me I bore the canopy,
With my extern the outward honouring,
Or laid great bases for eternity,
Which proves more short than waste or ruin-
ing?

Have I not seen dwellers on form and favour Lose all, and more, by paying too much rent
For compound sweet; forgoing simple savour,
Pitiful thrivers, in their gazing spent?
No, let me be obsequious in thy heart,
And take thou my oblation, poor but free,
Which is not mix'd with seconds, knows no
art,

But mutual render, only me for thee.
Hence, thou suborn'd informer! A true soul
When most impeach'd stands least in thy control.

126

O thou, my lovely boy, who in thy power
Dost hold Time's neckle glass, his sickle, hour;
Who hast by waning grown, and therein show'st
Thy lovers withering as thy sweet self grow'st;
If Nature, sovereign mistress over wrack,
As thou goest onwards, still will pluck thee
back,

She keeps thee to this purpose, that her skill
May Time disgrace and wretched minutes kill.

Yet fear her, O thou minion of her pleasure!
She may detain, but not still keep, her trea-
sure;
Her audit, though delay'd, answer'd must be,
And her quietus is to render thee.

127

In the old age black was not counted fair,
Or if it were, it bore not beauty's name;
But now is black beauty's successive heir,
And beauty slander'd with a bastard shame:
For since each hand hath put on nature's
power,

Fairing the foul with art's false borrow'd face,
Sweet beauty hath no name, no holy bower,
But is profan'd, if not lives in disgrace.
Therefore my mistress' brows are raven black,
Her eyes so suited, and they mourners seem
At such who, not born fair, no beauty lack,
Sland'ring creation with a false esteem:

Yet so they mourn, becoming of thy woe,
That every tongue says beauty should look so.

128

How oft, when thou, my music, music play'st,
Upon that blessed wood whose motion sounds
With thy sweet fingers, when thou gently
sway'st

The wiry concord that mine ear confounds,
Do I envy those jacks that nimble leap
To kiss the tender inward of thy hand, Whilst my poor lips, which should that harvest reap,

At the wood's boldness by thee blushing stand!
To be so tickled, they would change their state
And situation with those dancing chips,
O'er whom thy fingers walk with gentle gait,
Making dead wood more blest than living lips.
Since saucy jacks so happy are in this,
Give them thy fingers, me thy lips to kiss.

129

The expense of spirit in a waste of shame
Is lust in action; and till action, lust
Is perjur'd, murd'rous, bloody, full of blame,
Savage, extreme, rude, cruel, not to trust,
Enjoy'd no sooner but despised straight,
Past reason hunted, and no sooner had
Past reason hated, as a swallowed bait
On purpose laid to make the taker mad;
Mad in pursuit and in possession so;
Had, having, and in quest to have, extreme;
A bliss in proof, and prov'd, a very woe;
Before, a joy propos'd; behind, a dream.

All this the world well knows; yet none knows well
To shun the heaven that leads men to this hell.

130

My mistress' eyes are nothing like the sun;
Coral is far more red than her lips' red;
If snow be white, why then her breasts are dun;
If hairs be wires, black wires grow on her head.

I have seen roses damask'd, red and white, 5
 But no such roses see I in her cheeks ;
 And in some perfumes is there more delight
 Than in the breath that from my mistress reeks.
 I love to hear her speak, yet well I know
 That music hath a far more pleasing sound ; 10
 I grant I never saw a goddess go ;
 My mistress, when she walks, treads on the
 ground :

And yet, by heaven, I think my love as rare
 As any she bel'i'd with false compare.

131

Thou art as tyrannous, so as thou art,
 As those whose beauties proudly make them cruel ;
 For well thou know'st to my dear dotting heart
 Thou art the fairest and most precious jewel.
 Yet, in good faith, some say that thee behold 5
 Thy face hath not the power to make love
 groan :

To say they err I dare not be so bold,
 Although I swear it to myself alone.
 And, to be sure that is not false I swear,
 A thousand groans, but thinking on thy face, 10
 One on another's neck, do witness bear
 Thy black is fairest in my judgement's place.

In nothing art thou black save in thy deeds.
 And thence this slander, as I think, proceeds.

132

Thine eyes I love, and they, as pitying me,
 Knowing thy heart torments me with disdain,
 Have put on black and loving mourners be,
 Looking with pretty ruth upon my pain.
 And truly not the morning sun of heaven 5
 Better becomes the grey cheeks of the east,
 Nor that full star that ushers in the even Doth half that glory to the sober west,
 As those two mourning eyes become thy face.
 O, let it then as well besem thy heart 10
 To mourn for me, since mourning doth thee
 grace,

And suit thy pity like in every part.

Then will I swear beauty herself is black
 And all they foul that thy complexion lack.

133

Beshrew that heart that makes my heart to
 groan
 For that deep wound it gives my friend and
 me !

Is 't not enough to torture me alone,
 But slave to slavery my sweet'st friend must
 be ?

Me from myself thy cruel eye hath taken, 5
 And my next self thou harder hast engrossed :
 Of him, myself, and thee, I am forsaken ;
 A torment thrice threefold thus to be crossed.
 Prison my heart in thy steel bosom's ward,
 But then my friend's heart let my poor heart 10
 bail ;

Whoe'er keeps me, let my heart be his guard ;
 Thou canst not then use rigour in my gaol :

And yet thou wilt ; for I, being pent in
 thee,

Perforce am thine, and all that is in me.

134

So, now I have confess'd that he is thine
 And I myself am mortgag'd to thy will,
 Myself I'll forfeit, so that other mine
 Thou wilt restore, to be my comfort still.
 But thou wilt not, nor he will not be free, 5
 For thou art covetous and he is kind ;
 He learn'd but surety-like to write for me
 Under that bond that him as fast doth bind.
 The statute of thy beauty thou wilt take,
 Thou usurer, that put'st forth all to use, 10
 And sue a friend came debtor for my sake ;
 So him I lose through my unkind abuse.

Him have I lost ; thou hast both him and
 me :

He pays the whole, and yet am I not free.

135

Whoever hath her wish, thou hast thy Will,
 And Will to boot, and Will in overplus ;
 More than enough am I that vex thee still,
 To thy sweet will making addition thus.
 Wilt thou, whose will is large and spacious, 5
 Not once vouchsafe to hide my will in thine ?
 Shall will in others seem right gracious,
 And in my will no fair acceptance shine ?
 The sea, all water, yet receives rain still
 And in abundance addeth to his store ; 10
 So thou, being rich in Will, add to thy Will
 One will of mine, to make thy large Will more Let not unkind, no fair beseechers kill ;
 Think all but one, and me in that one Will.

136

If thy soul check thee that I come so near,
 Swear to thy blind soul that I was thy Will,
 And will, thy soul knows, is admitted there ;
 Thus far for love my love-suit, sweet, fulfil.
Will will fulfil the treasure of thy love,
 Ay, fill it full with wills, and my will one.
 In things of great receipt with ease we prove
 Among a number one is reckon'd none ;
 Then in the number let me pass untold,
 Though in thy store's account I one must 10
 be ;

For nothing hold me, so it please thee hold
 That nothing me, a something sweet to thee.

Make but my name thy love and love that
 still,

And then thou lov'st me, for my name is Will.

137

Thou blind fool, Love, what dost thou to mine
 eyes,

That they behold, and see not what they see ?
 They know what beauty is, see where it lies,
 Yet what the best is take the worst to be.
 If eyes corrupt by over-partial looks 5
 Be anchor'd in the bay where all men ride,
 Why of eyes' falsehood hast thou forged hooks,
 Whereto the judgement of my heart is tied ?
 Why should my heart think that a several
 plot

Which my heart knows the wide world's common place ?

Or mine eyes seeing this, say this is not,
 To put fair truth upon so foul a face ?

In things right true my heart and eyes have erred,
And to this false plague are they now transferred.

138

When my love swears that she is made of truth,
I do believe her, though I know she lies,
That she might think me some untutor'd youth,
Unlearned in the world's false subtleties,
Thus vainly thinking that she thinks me young,
Although she knows my days are past the best,
Simply I credit her false-speaking tongue:
On both sides thus is simple truth suppress'd.
But wherefore says she not she is unjust?
And wherefore says not I that I am old? 10
O, love's best habit is in seeming trust,
And age in love loves not to have years told:
Therefore I lie with her and she with me,
And in our faults by lies we flattered be.

139

O, call not me to justify the wrong
That thy unkindness lays upon my heart;
Wound me not with thine eye but with thy
tongue,
Use power with power and slay me not by art.
Tell me thou lov'st elsewhere, but in my sight, 5
Dear heart, forbear to glance thine eye aside:
What need'st thou wound with cunning when thy might
Is more than my o'er-press'd defence can bide?
Let me excuse thee: ah! my love well knows
Her pretty looks have been mine enemies, 10
And therefore from my face she turns my foes,
That they elsewhere might dart their injuries.
Yet do not so; but since I am near slain,
Kill me outright with looks and rid my pain.

140

Be wise as thou art cruel; do not press
My tongue-tied patience with too much dis-
dain,
Lest sorrow lend me words, and words express
The manner of my pity-wanting pain.
If I might teach thee wit, better it were, 5
Though not to love, yet, love, to tell me so;
As testy sick men, when their deaths be near,
No news but health from their physicians
know;
For if I should despair, I should grow mad,
And in my madness might speak ill of thee; 10
Now this ill-wresting world is grown so bad,
Mad slanderers by mad ears believed be.
That I may not be so, nor thou beli'd, Bear thine eyes straight, though thy proud heart go wide.

141

In faith, I do not love thee with mine eyes,
For they in thee a thousand errors note;
But 't is my heart that loves what they despise,
Who in despite of view is pleas'd to dote;
Nor are mine ears with thy tongue's tune delighted, 5
Nor tender feeling, to base touches prone,
Nor taste, nor smell, desire to be invited

To any sensual feast with thee alone:
But my five wits nor my five senses can
Dissuade one foolish heart from serving thee, 10
Who leaves unsway'd the likeness of a man,
Thy proud heart's slave and vassal wretch to
be:

Only my plague thus far I count my gain,
That she that makes me sin awards me pain.

142

Love is my sin, and thy dear virtue hate,
Hate of my sin, grounded on sinful loving:
O, but with mine compare thou thine own state,
And thou shalt find it merits not reproving;
Or, if it do, not from those lips of thine, 5
That have profan'd their scarlet ornaments
And seal'd false bonds of love as oft as mine,
Robb'd others' beds' revenues of their rents.
Be it lawful I love thee, as thou lov'st those Whom thine eyes woo as mine importune
thee: 10

Root pity in thy heart, that when it grows
Thy pity may deserve to pitied be.

If thou dost seek to have what thou dost
hide,

By self-example mayst thou be deny'd!

143

Lo! as a careful housewife runs to catch
One of her feathered creatures broke away,
Sets down her babe and makes all swift dispatch

In pursuit of the thing she would have stay,
Whilst her neglected child holds her in chase,
Cries to catch her whose busy care is bent
To follow that which flies before her face,
Not prizing her poor infant's discontent;
So runn'st thou after that which flies from
thee,

Whilst I, thy babe, chase thee afar behind; 10
But if thou catch thy hope, turn back to me,
And play the mother's part, kiss me, be kind:
So will I pray that thou mayst have thy
Will,

If thou turn back, and my loud crying still.

144

Two loves I have of comfort and despair,
Which like two spirits do suggest me still:
The better angel is a man right fair,
The worse spirit a woman colour'd ill.
To win me soon to hell, my female evil
Tempteth my better angel from my side,
And would corrupt my saint to be a devil,
Wooing his purity with her foul pride,
And whether that my angel be turn'd fiend 10
Suspect I may, yet not directly tell;
But being both from me, both to each friend,
I guess one angel in another's hell:

Yet this shall I ne'er know, but live in doubt,
Till my bad angel fire my good one out.

145

Those lips that Love's own hand did make Breath'd forth the sound that said, "I hate,"
To me that languish'd for her sake;
But when she saw my woeful state,

Straight in her heart did mercy come,
 Chiding that tongue that ever sweet
 Was us'd in giving gentle doom,
 And taught it thus anew to greet:
 "I hate" she alter'd with an end,
 That follow'd it as gentle day
 Doth follow night, who like a fiend
 From heaven to hell is flown away;
 "I hate" from hate away she threw,
 And saved my life, saying "not you."

146

Poor soul, the centre of my sinful earth,
 [Thrall to] these rebel powers that thee array,
 Why dost thou pine within and suffer dearth,
 Painting thy outward walls so costly gay?
 Why so large cost, having so short a lease,
 Dost thou upon thy fading mansion spend?
 Shall worms, inheritors of this excess,
 Eat up thy charge? Is this thy body's end?
 Then, soul, live thou upon thy servant's loss,
 And let that pine to aggravate thy store;
 Buy terms divine in selling hours of dross;
 Within be fed, without be rich no more:
 So shalt thou feed on Death, that feeds on
 men,
 And Death once dead, there's no more dying
 then.

147

My love is as a fever, longing still
 For that which longer nurseth the disease,
 Feeding on that which doth preserve the ill,
 The uncertain sickly appetite to please.
 My reason, the physician to my love,
 Angry that his prescriptions are not kept,
 Hath left me, and I desperate now approve Desire is death, which physic did except.
 Past cure I am, now reason is past care,
 And frantic-mad with evermore unrest;
 My thoughts and my discourse as madmen's are,
 At random from the truth vainly express'd;
 For I have sworn thee fair and thought thee
 bright,
 Who art as black as hell, as dark as night.

148

O me, what eyes hath Love put in my head,
 Which have no correspondence with true sight!
 Or, if they have, where is my judgement fled,
 That censures falsely what they see aright?
 If that be fair whereon my false eyes dote,
 What means the world to say it is not so?
 If it be not, then love doth well denote
 Love's eye is not so true as all men's: no,
 How can it? O, how can Love's eye be true,
 That is so vex'd with watching and with tears?
 No marvel then, though I mistake my view;
 The sun itself sees not till heaven clears.

O cunning Love! with tears thou keep'st me blind,
 Lest eyes well-seeing thy foul faults should find.

149

Canst thou, O cruel! say I love thee not,
 When I against myself with thee partake?

Do I not think on thee, when I forgot
 Am of myself, all tyrant, for thy sake?
 Who hateth thee that I do call my friend?
 On whom frown'st thou that I do fawn upon?
 Nay, if thou lour'st on me, do I not spend Revenge upon myself with present moan?
 What merit do I in myself respect,
 That is so proud thy service to despise,
 When all my best doth worship thy defect,
 Commanded by the motion of thine eyes?
 But, love, hate on, for now I know thy mind;
 Those that can see thou lov'st, and I am blind.

150

O, from what power hast thou this powerful might
 With insufficiency my heart to sway?
 To make me give the lie to my true sight,
 And swear that brightness doth not grace the
 day?
 Whence hast thou this becoming of things ill,
 That in the very refuse of thy deeds
 There is such strength and warrant of skill
 That, in my mind, thy worst all best exceeds?
 Who taught thee how to make me love thee
 more
 The more I hear and see just cause of hate?
 O, though I love what others do abhor,
 With others thou shouldst not abhor my state:
 If thy unworthiness rais'd love in me,
 More worthy I to be belov'd of thee.

151

Love is too young to know what conscience is;
 Yet who knows not conscience is born of love?
 Then, gentle cheater, urge not my amiss,
 Lest guilty of my faults thy sweet self prove:
 For, thou betraying me, I do betray
 My nobler part to my gross body's treason;
 My soul doth tell my body that he may Triumph in love; flesh stays no farther reason,
 But, rising at thy name, doth point out thee
 As his triumphant prize. Proud of this pride,
 He is contented thy poor drudge to be,
 To stand in thy affairs, fall by thy side.
 No want of conscience holds it that I call Her "love" for whose dear love I rise and fall.

152

In loving thee thou know'st I am forsworn,
 But thou art twice forsworn, to me love swear-
 ing:
 In yet thy bad-vow broke and new faith torn
 In vowing new hate after new love bearing.
 But why of two oaths' breach do I accuse thee,
 When I break twenty? I am perjur'd most;
 For all my vows are oaths but to misuse thee,
 And all my honest faith in thee is lost,
 For I have sworn deep oaths of thy deep kind-
 ness,
 Oaths of thy love, thy truth, thy constancy,
 And, to enlighten thee, gave eyes to blindness,
 Or made them swear against the thing they see;
 For I have sworn thee fair; more perjur'd I,
 To swear against the truth so foul a lie!

153

Cupid laid by his brand, and fell asleep.
 A maid of Dian's this advantage found,
 And his love-kindling fire did quickly steep
 In a cold valley-fountain of that ground;
 Which borrow'd from this holy fire of Love 5
 A dateless lively heat, still to endure,
 And grew a seething bath, which yet men prove Against strange maladies a sovereign cure.
 But at my mistress' eye Love's brand new-fired,
 The boy for trial needs would touch my breast;
 I, sick withal, the help of bath desired, 11
 And thither hied, a sad distemper'd guest,
 But found no cure: the bath for my help lies
 Where Cupid got new fire—my mistress' 15
 eyes.

154

The little Love-god lying once asleep
 Laid by his side his heart-inflaming brand, Whilst many nymphs that vow'd chaste life to keep
 Came tripping by; but in her maiden hand
 The fairest votary took up that fire 5
 Which many legions of true hearts had warm'd;
 And so the general of hot desire
 Was, sleeping, by a virgin hand disarm'd.
 This brand she quenched in a cool well by,
 Which from Love's fire took heat perpetual, 10
 Growing a bath and healthful remedy
 For men diseas'd; but I, my mistress' thrall, Came there for cure, and this by that I prove,
 Love's fire heats water, water cools not love.

A LOVER'S COMPLAINT

THIS poem is appended to the Sonnets in the edition of 1609, and is there ascribed to Shakespeare. No external evidence of date of composition exists, and no contemporary allusion confirms the ascription of authorship. But there is nothing in the style of this literary pastoral to make it difficult to believe it the work of the author of Venus and Adonis, at a period not far removed from the date of that poem.

FROM off a hill whose concave womb re-worded
 A plaintful story from a sist'ring vale,
 My spirits to attend this double voice accorded,
 And down I laid to list the sad-tun'd tale;
 Ere long espied a fickle maid full pale, 5
 Tearing of papers, breaking rings a-twain,
 Storming her world with sorrow's wind and rain.

Upon her head a platted hive of straw,
 Which fortified her visage from the sun,
 Whereon the thought might think sometime it
 saw 10
 The carcass of a beauty spent and done.
 Time had not scythed all that youth begun,
 Nor youth all quit; but, spite of heaven's fell
 rage,
 Some beauty peep'd through lattice of sear'd
 age.

Off did she heave her napkin to her eyne, 15
 Which on it had conceited characters,
 Laund'ring the silken figures in the brine
 That seasoned woe had pelleted in tears,
 And often reading what contents it bears;
 As often shrieking undistinguish'd woe 20
 In clamours of all size, both high and low.

Sometimes her level'd eyes their carriage ride,
 As they did battery to the spheres intend;
 Sometimes diverted their poor balls are tied
 To the orb'd earth; sometimes they do extend 25
 Their view right on; anon their gazes lend
 To every place at once, and, nowhere fix'd,
 The mind and sight distractedly commix'd.

Her hair, nor loose nor tied in formal plat,
 Proclaim'd in her a careless hand of pride; 30
 For some, untuck'd, descended her sheav'd hat,
 Hanging her pale and pined cheek beside;
 Some in her threaden fillet still did bide,
 And true to bondage would not break from
 thence,
 Though slackly braided in loose negligence. 35

A thousand favours from a maund she drew,
 Of amber, crystal, and of beaded jet,
 Which one by one she in a river threw,
 Upon whose weeping margin she was set,
 Like usury, applying wet to wet, 40
 Or monarch's hands that lets not bounty
 fall
 Where want cries some, but where excess begs
 all.

Of folded schedules had she many a one,
 Which she perus'd, sigh'd, tore, and gave the flood;
 Crack'd many a ring of posied gold and bone, 45
 Bidding them find their sepulchres in mud;
 Found yet moe letters sadly penn'd in blood,
 With sleided silk feat and affectedly
 Enswath'd, and seal'd to curious secrecy.

These often bath'd she in her fluxive eyes, 50
 And often kiss'd, and often gan to tear:
 Cried, "O false blood, thou register of lies,
 What unapproved witness dost thou bear!
 Ink would have seem'd more black and damned here!"

This said, in top of rage the lines she rents, 55
Big discontent so breaking their contents.

A reverend man that graz'd his cattle nigh —
Sometime a blusterer, that the ruffle knew
Of court, of city, and had let go by
The swiftest hours, observed as they flew — 60
Towards this afflicted fancy fastly drew,
And, privileg'd by age, desires to know
In brief the grounds and motives of her woe.

So slides he down upon his grained bat,
And comely-distant sits he by her side; 65
When he again desires her, being sat,
Her grievance with his hearing to divide:
If that from him there may be aught appli'd
Which may her suffering ecstacy assuage,
'T is promis'd in the charity of age. 70

"Father," she says, "though in me you be-
hold

The injury of many a blasting hour,
Let it not tell your judgement I am old;
Not age, but sorrow, over me hath power.
I might as yet have been a spreading flower, 75
Fresh to myself, if I had self-appli'd
Love to myself and to no love beside.

"But, woe is me! too early I attended
A youthful suit — it was to gain my grace —
Of one by nature's outwards so commended, 80
That maidens' eyes stuck over all his face.
Love lack'd a dwelling, and made him her
place;

And when in his fair parts she did abide,
She was new lodg'd and newly deifi'd.

"His browny locks did hang in crooked curls;
And every light occasion of the wind 86
Upon his lips their silken parcels hurls.
What's sweet to do, to do will aptly find.
Each eye that saw him did enchant the mind,
For on his visage was in little drawn 90
What largeness thinks in Paradise was sawn.

"Small show of man was yet upon his chin;
His phoenix down began but to appear
Like unshorn velvet on that termless skin,
Whose bare out-bragg'd the web it seem'd to 95
wear;

Yet show'd his visage by that cost more dear;
And nice affections wavering stood in doubt
If best were as it was, or best without.

"His qualities were beauteous as his form, 99
For maiden-tongu'd he was, and thereof free;
Yet, if men mov'd him, was he such a storm
As oft 'twixt May and April is to see,
When winds breathe sweet, unruly though they
be.

His rudeness so with his authoriz'd youth
Did lively falseness in a pride of truth. 106

"Well could he ride, and often men would
say,

'That horse his mettle from his rider takes.
Proof of subjection, noble by the sway,

What rounds, what bounds, what course, what stop he makes!'

And controversy hence a question takes, 110
Whether the horse by him became his deed,
Or he his manage by the well-doing steed:

"But quickly on this side the verdict went:
His real habitude gave life and grace
To appertainings and to ornament, 115
Accomplish'd in himself, not in his case:
All aids, themselves made fairer by their place,
Came for additions; yet their purpos'd trim
Piec'd not his grace, but were all grac'd by him.

"So on the tip of his subduing tongue 120
All kind of arguments and question deep,
All replication prompt and reason strong,
For his advantage still did wake and sleep.
To make the weeper laugh, the laugher weep,
He had the dialect and different skill, 125
Catching all passions in his craft of will;

"That he did in the general bosom reign
Of young, of old; and sexes both enchanted,
To dwell with him in thoughts, or to remain
In personal duty, following where he haunted.
Consents bewitch'd, ere he desire, have granted;
And dialogu'd for him what he would say, 132 Ask'd their own wills, and made their wills obey.

"Many there were that did his picture get,
To serve their eyes, and in it put their mind; 135
Like fools that in the imagination set
The goodly objects which abroad they find
Of lands and mansions, theirs in thought assign'd;

And labouring in moe pleasures to bestow them
Than the true gouty landlord which doth owe 140
them:

"So many have, that never touch'd his hand,
Sweetly suppos'd them mistress of his heart.
My woeful self, that did in freedom stand,
And was my own fee-simple, not in part,
What with his art in youth, and youth in art, 145
Threw my affections in his charmed power,
Reserv'd the stalk and gave him all my flower.

"Yet did I not, as some my equals did,
Demand of him, nor being desired yielded;
Finding myself in honour so forbid, 150
With safest distance I mine honour shielded.
Experience for me many bulwarks build'd
Of proofs new-bleeding, which remain'd the foil
Of this false jewel, and his amorous spoil.

"But, ah, who ever shunn'd by precedent 155
The destin'd ill she must herself assay?
Or fore'd examples, 'gainst her own content,
To put the by-past perils in her way?
Counsel may stop awhile what will not stay;
For when we rage, advice is often seen 160
By blunting us to make our wits more keen.

"Nor gives it satisfaction to our blood,
That we must curb it upon others' proof;

To be forbad the sweets that seem so good,
 For fear of harms that preach in our behoof. 165
 O appetite, from judgement stand aloof!
 The one a palate hath that needs will taste,
 Though Reason weep, and cry, 'It is thy last.'

"For further I could say, 'This man's untrue,'
 And knew the patterns of his foul beguiling;
 Heard where his plants in others' orchards
 grew, 171
 Saw how deceits were gilded in his smiling;
 Knew vows were ever brokers to defiling;
 Thought characters and words merely but art,
 And bastards of his foul adulterate heart. 175

"And long upon these terms I held my city,
 Till thus he gan besiege me: 'Gentle maid,
 Have of my suffering youth some feeling pity,
 And be not of my holy vows afraid.
 That's to ye sworn to none was ever said; 180
 For feasts of love I have been call'd unto,
 Till now did ne'er invite, nor never vow.

"All my offences that abroad you see
 Are errors of the blood, none of the mind;
 Love made them not; with acture they may
 be, 185
 Where neither party is nor true nor kind.
 They sought their shame that so their shame
 did find;
 And so much less of shame in me remains,
 By how much of me their reproach contains.

"Among the many that mine eyes have seen,
 Not one whose flame my heart so much as warmed, 191
 Or my affection put to the smallest teen,
 Or any of my leasures ever charmed.
 Harm have I done to them, but ne'er was harmed;
 Kept hearts in liveries, but mine own was free,
 And reign'd, commanding in his monarchy. 195

"Look here, what tributes wounded fancies sent me,
 Of pallid pearls and rubies red as blood;
 Figuring that they their passions likewise lent
 me
 Of grief and blushes, aptly understood 200
 In bloodless white and the encrimson'd mood;
 Effects of terror and dear modesty,
 Encamp'd in hearts, but fighting outwardly.

"And, lo, behold these talents of their hair,
 With twisted metal amorously impleach'd, 205
 I have receiv'd from many a several fair,
 Their kind acceptance weepingly beseech'd,
 With the annexions of fair gems enrich'd,
 And deep-brain'd sonnets that did amplify
 Each stone's dear nature, worth, and quality.

"The diamond, — why, 't was beautiful and
 hard, 211
 Whereto his invis'd properties did tend;
 The deep-green emerald, in whose fresh regard
 Weak sights their sickly radiance do amend;
 The heaven-hu'd sapphire and the opal blend

With objects manifold: each several stone, 214
 With wit well blazon'd, smil'd or made some moan.

"Lo, all these trophies of affections hot,
 Of pensiv'd and subdu'd desires the tender,
 Nature hath charg'd me that I hoard them
 not,
 But yield them up where I myself mus'
 render, 221
 That is, to you, my origin and end;
 For these, of force, must your oblations be.
 Since I their altar, you enpatron me.

"O, then, advance of yours that phraseless
 hand, 225
 Whose white weighs down the airy scale of
 praise;
 Take all these similes to your own command,
 Hallowed with sighs that burning lungs did raise;
 What me, your minister, for you obeys,
 Works under you; and to your audit comes 230
 Their distract parcels in combined sums.

"Lo, this device was sent me from a nun,
 Or sister sanctified, of holiest note;
 Which late her noble suit in court did shun,
 Whose rarest havings made the blossoms
 dote; 235
 For she was sought by spirits of richest coat,
 But kept cold distance, and did thence remove
 To spend her living in eternal love.

"But, O my sweet, what labour is 't to leave
 The thing we have not, mast'ring what not strives, 240
 Playing the place which did no form receive,
 Playing patient sports in unconstrained gyves?
 She that her fame so to herself contrives,
 The scars of battle scapeth by the flight,
 And makes her absence valiant, not her
 might. 245

"O, pardon me, in that my boast is true.
 The accident which brought me to her eye
 Upon the moment did her force subdue,
 And now she would the caged cloister fly.
 Religious love put out Religion's eye. 250
 Not to be tempted, would she be immur'd,
 And now, to tempt, all liberty procur'd.

"How mighty then you are, O, hear me tell!
 The broken bosoms that to me belong
 Have emptied all their fountains in my well,
 And mine I pour your ocean all among. 255
 I strong o'er them, and you o'er me being strong,
 Must for your victory us all congeat,
 As compound love to physic your cold breast.

"My parts had power to charm a sacred nun,
 Who, disciplin'd, ay, dieted in grace, 261
 Believ'd her eyes when they to assail begun,
 All vows and consecrations giving place.
 O most potential love! vow, bond, nor space,
 In thee hath neither sting, knot, nor confine, 265
 For thou art all, and all things else are thine.

"When thou impresses, what are precepts worth

Of stale example? When thou wilt inflame,
How coldly those impediments stand forth
Of wealth, of filial fear, law, kindred, fame! 270
Love's arms are peace, 'gainst rule, 'gainst sense, 'gainst shame,

And sweetens, in the suff'ring pangs it bears,
The aloes of all forces, shocks, and fears.

"Now all these hearts that do on mine depend,

Feeling it break, with bleeding groans they pine; 275

And suppliant their sighs to you extend,
To leave the battery that you make 'gainst
mine,

Lending soft audience to my sweet design,
And credent soul to that strong-bonded oath
That shall prefer and undertake my troth.' 280

"This said, his watery eyes he did dismount,
Whose sights till then were levell'd on my face;
Each cheek a river running from a fount
With brinish current downward flow'd apace.
O, how the channel to the stream gave grace! 285
Who glaz'd with crystal gate the glowing roses
That flame through water which their hue encloses.

"O father, what a hell of witchcraft lies
In the small orb of one particular tear!
But with the inundation of the eyes 290
What rocky heart to water will not wear?
What breast so cold that is not warmed here?
O cleft effect! cold modesty, hot wrath,
Both fire from hence and chill extinture hath.

"For, lo, his passion, but an art of craft, 295
Even there resolv'd my reason into tears;

There my white stole of chastity I daff'd,
Shook off my sober guards and civil fears;
Appear to him, as he to me appears,
All melting; though our drops this difference bore, 300
His poison'd me, and mine did him restore.

"In him a plentitude of subtle matter,
Applied to cautels, all strange forms receives,
Of burning blushes, or of weeping water,
Or swooning paleness; and he takes and leaves,
In either's aptness, as it best deceives, 305
To blush at speeches rank, to weep at woes,
Or to turn white and swoon at tragic shows;

"That not a heart which in his level came
Could scape the hail of his all-hurting aim, 310
Showing fair nature is both kind and tame;
And, veil'd in them, did win whom he would maim.

Against the thing he sought he would exclaim;
When he most burn'd in heart-wish'd luxury,
He preach'd pure maid; and prais'd cold chas-
tity. 315

"Thus merely with the garment of a Grace
The naked and concealed fiend he cover'd;
That the unexperient gave the tempter place,
Which like a cherubin above them hover'd.
Who, young and simple, would not be so lover'd? 320

Ay me! I fell; and yet do question make
What I should do again for such a sake.

"O, that infected moisture of his eye,
O, that false fire which in his cheek so glow'd,
O, that forc'd thunder from his heart did fly, 325
O, that sad breath his spongy lungs bestow'd,
O, all that borrowed motion seeming ow'd,
Would yet again betray the fore-betray'd,
And new pervert a reconciled maid! 330

THE PASSIONATE PILGRIM

THE volume entitled "The Passionate Pilgrim. By William Shakespeare" is a small piratical publication printed for W. Jaggard in 1599. Of the second edition, no copy is known to survive. A third edition, also ascribed to Shakespeare, appeared in 1612, with unacknowledged additions from Thomas Heywood. Heywood, claiming to speak for Shakespeare as well as himself, protested against the theft, and a new title-page was printed without Shakespeare's name. In 1640 the contents were again re-printed, along with Shakespeare's Sonnets and other miscellaneous poems. The whole of the first edition is here reprinted; but, of its twenty poems, only five are certainly by Shakespeare. Of these, I and II appeared later as Sonnets 138 and 144 in the edition of 1609; III, V, and XVI are from Love's Labour's Lost, IV. ii. 96-109, IV. iii. 58-71, and IV. iii. 99-118. The authorship of four others is definitely known: VIII, XX (and probably XVII) are by Richard Barnefield; XI appears as the third sonnet in Bartholomew Griffin's Fidessa; XIX is by Marlowe, and its last stanza, "Love's Answer," is ascribed by Walton to Raleigh. Of the authorship of the remaining ten nothing is known, the probability of Shakespeare's authorship depending on evidences of style which vary from poem to poem, but which are in no case strong. Some critics accept IV and VI; fewer, VII, IX, XII, XVIII; while X, XIII, XIV, and XV are usually rejected. "Sonnets to Sundry Notes of Music" is merely the title of the second part of The Passionate Pilgrim.

I

WHEN my love swears that she is made of truth,

I do believe her, though I know she lies,
That she might think me some untutor'd youth,
Unskilful in the world's false forgeries.

Thus vainly thinking that she thinks me young,
Although I know my years be past the best,⁶
I, smiling, credit her false-speaking tongue,
Outfacing faults in love with love's ill rest.

But wherefore says my love that she is young?
And wherefore say not I that I am old?¹⁰

O, love's best habit is a soothing tongue,
And age, in love, loves not to have years told.

Therefore I'll lie with love, and love with me,

Since that our faults in love thus smother'd be.

II

Two loves I have, of comfort and despair,¹⁵
That like two spirits do suggest me still;
My better angel is a man right fair,
My worser spirit a woman colour'd ill.

To win me soon to hell, my female evil
Tempteth my better angel from my side,²⁰
And would corrupt my saint to be a devil,
Wooing his purity with her fair pride.

But whether that my angel be turn'd fiend,
Suspect I may, yet not directly tell;

For being both to me, both to each friend,²⁵
I guess one angel in another's hell.

The truth I shall not know, but live in doubt,
Till my bad angel fire my good one out.

III

Did not the heavenly rhetoric of thine eye,
'Gainst whom the world could not hold argument,³⁰

Persuade my heart to this false perjury?
Vows for thee broke deserve not punishment.

A woman I forswore; but I will prove,
Thou being a goddess, I forswore not thee:

My vow was earthly, thou a heavenly love;³⁵
Thy grace being gain'd cures all disgrace in me.

My vow was breath, and breath a vapour is;
Then, thou fair sun, that on this earth doth shine,

Exhale this vapour vow; in thee it is:
If broken, then it is no fault of mine;⁴⁰

If by me broke, what fool is not so wise
To break an oath to win a paradise?

IV

Sweet Cytherea, sitting by a brook
With young Adonis, lovely, fresh, and green,
Did court the lad with many a lovely look,⁴⁵
Such looks as none could look but beauty's queen.

She told him stories to delight his ear;
She show'd him favours to allure his eye;
To win his heart, she touch'd him here and there, —

Touches so soft still conquer chastity.⁵⁰

But whether unripe years did want conceit,
Or he refus'd to take her figured proffer,
The tender nibbler would not touch the bait,
But smile and jest at every gentle offer.

Then fell she on her back, fair queen, and toward:⁵⁵

He rose and ran away; ah, fool too forward!

V

If love make me forsworn, how shall I swear to love?

O never faith could hold, if not to beauty vowed:

Though to myself forsworn, to thee I'll constant prove;
Those thoughts, to me like oaks, to thee like osiers bowed.⁶⁰
Study his bias leaves, and makes his book thine
eyes,
Where all those pleasures live that art can comprehend.
If knowledge be the mark, to know thee shall suffice;
Well learned is that tongue that well can thee commend;
All ignorant that soul that sees thee without wonder;⁶⁵
Which is to me some praise, that I thy parts admire.
Thine eye Jove's lightning seems, thy voice his dreadful thunder,
Which, not to anger bent, is music and sweet
fire.
Celestial as thou art, O do not love that
wrong,
To sing heaven's praise with such an earthly tongue.⁷⁰

VI

Scarce had the sun dried up the dewy morn,
And scarce the herd gone to the hedge for
shade,
When Cytherea, all in love forlorn,
A longing tarrance for Adonis made
Under an osier growing by a brook,⁷⁵
A brook where Adon us'd to cool his spleen.
Hot was the day; she hotter that did look
For his approach, that often there had been.
Anon he comes, and throws his mantle by,
And stood stark naked on the brook's green
brim.⁸⁰
The sun look'd on the world with glorious eye,
Yet not so wistly as this queen on him.
He, spying her, bounce'd in whereas he stood.
"O Jove," quoth she, "why was not I a flood?"

VII

Fair is my love, but not so fair as fickle;⁸⁵
Mild as a dove, but neither true nor trusty;
Brighter than glass, and yet, as glass is, brittle;
Softer than wax, and yet, as iron, rusty:
A lily pale, with damask dye to grace her,
None fairer, nor none falser to deface her.⁹⁰

Her lips to mine how often hath she joined,
Between each kiss her oaths of true love swear-
ing!
How many tales to please me hath she coined,
Dreading my love, the loss thereof still fear-
ing!
Yet in the midst of all her pure protestings,⁹⁵
Her faith, her oaths, her tears, and all were jestings.

She burn'd with love, as straw with fire
flameth;
She burn'd out love, as soon as straw out-
burneth;

She fram'd the love, and yet she foil'd the framing;
She bade love last, and yet she fell a-turning.
Was this a lover, or a lecher whether?¹⁰¹
Bad in the best, though excellent in neither.

[VIII]

If music and sweet poetry agree,
As they must needs, the sister and the brother,
Then must the love be great 'twixt thee and me,¹⁰⁵
Because thou lov'st the one, and I the other.
Dowland to thee is dear, whose heavenly touch
Upon the lute doth ravish human sense;
Spenser to me, whose deep conceit is such
As, passing all conceit, needs no defence.¹¹⁰
Thou lov'st to hear the sweet melodious sound
That Phœbus' lute, the queen of music, makes;
And I in deep delight am chiefly drown'd
Whenas himself to singing he betakes.
One god is god of both, as poets feign;¹¹⁵
One knight loves both, and both in thee remain.

IX

Fair was the morn when the fair queen of love,
Paler for sorrow than her milk-white dove,
For Adon's sake, a youngster proud and wild;¹²⁰
Her stand she takes upon a steep-up hill.
Anon Adonis comes with horn and hounds;
She, silly queen, with more than love's good
will,
Forbade the boy he should not pass those grounds.
"Once," quoth she, "did I see a fair sweet youth¹²⁵
Here in these brakes deep-wounded with a boar,
Deep in the thigh, a spectacle of ruth!
See, in my thigh," quoth she, "here was the sore."
She showed hers: he saw more wounds than
one,
And blushing fled, and left her all alone.¹³⁰

X

Sweet rose, fair flower, untimely pluck'd, soon faded,
Pluck'd in the bud, and faded in the spring!
Bright orient pearl, alack, too timely shaded!
Fair creature, kill'd too soon by death's sharp
sting!
Like a green plum that hangs upon a tree,¹³⁵
And falls, through wind, before the fall
should be.

I weep for thee, and yet no cause I have,
For why thou left'st me nothing in thy will;
And yet thou left'st me more than I did crave,
For why I craved nothing of thee still.¹⁴⁰
O yes, dear friend, I pardon crave of thee,
Thy discontent thou didst bequeath to me.

[XI]

Venus, with young Adonis sitting by her
Under a myrtle shade, began to woo him.

She told the youngling how god Mars did try
 her, 145
 And as he fell to her, so fell she to him.
 "Even thus," quoth she, "the warlike god em-brac'd me."
 And then she clipp'd Adonis in her arms;
 "Even thus," quoth she, "the warlike god unlac'd me."
 As if the boy should use like loving charms; 150
 "Even thus," quoth she, "he seized on my lips,"
 And with her lips on his did act the seizure:
 And as she fetched breath, away he skips,
 And would not take her meaning nor her pleasure.
 Ah, that I had my lady at this bay, 155
 To kiss and clip me till I run away!

XII

Crabbed age and youth cannot live together:
 Youth is full of plesance, age is full of care;
 Youth like summer morn, age like winter
 weather;
 Youth like summer brave, age like winter bare.
 Youth is full of sport, age's breath is short; 161
 Youth is nimble, age is lame;
 Youth is hot and bold, age is weak and cold;
 Youth is wild, and age is tame.
 Age, I do abhor thee; youth, I do adore thee; 165
 O, my love, my love is young!
 Age, I do defy thee: O, sweet shepherd, hie
 thee,
 For methinks thou stay'st too long.

XIII

Beauty is but a vain and doubtful good;
 A shining gloss that fadeth suddenly; 170
 A flower that dies when first it gins to bud;
 A brittle glass that 's broken presently:
 A doubtful good, a gloss, a glass, a flower,
 Lost, faded, broken, dead within an hour.
 And as goods lost are sold or never found, 175
 As faded gloss no rubbing will refresh,
 As flowers dead lie withered on the ground,
 As broken glass no cement can redress,
 So beauty blemish'd once 's for ever lost,
 In spite of physic, painting, pain, and cost. 180

XIV

Good-night, good rest. Ah, neither be my share!
 She bade good-night that kept my rest away;
 And daff'd me to a cabin hang'd with care,
 To descant on the doubts of my decay.
 "Farewell," quoth she, "and come again to-morrow." 185
 Fare well I could not, for I supp'd with sorrow.
 Yet at my parting sweetly did she smile,
 In scorn or friendship, nill I construe whether.
 'T may be, she joy'd to jest at my exile,
 'T may be, again to make me wander thither: 190
 "Wander," a word for shadows like myself,
 As take the pain but cannot pluck the pelf.

Lord, how mine eyes throw gazes to the east!
 My heart doth charge the watch; the morning rise
 Doth cite each moving sense from idle rest. 195
 Not daring trust the office of mine eyes, While Philomela sits and sings, I sit and
 mark,
 And wish her lays were tuned like the lark:
 For she doth welcome daylight with her ditty,
 And drives away dark dreaming night. 200
 The night so pack'd, I post unto my pretty;
 Heart hath his hope, and eyes their wished
 sight;
 Sorrow chang'd to solace, and solace mix'd
 with sorrow;
 For why, she sigh'd and bade me come tomorrow.
 Were I with her, the night would post too
 soon; 205
 But now are minutes added to the hours;
 To spite me now, each minute seems a moon;
 Yet not for me, shine sun to succour flowers!
 Pack night, peep day; good day, of night
 now borrow:
 Short, night, to-night, and length thyself tomorrow. 210

SONNETS TO SUNDRY NOTES OF MUSIC

[xv]

It was a lording's daughter, the fairest one of three,
 That liked of her master as well as might be,
 Till looking on an Englishman, the fair'st that eye could see,
 Her fancy fell a-turning.
 Long was the combat doubtful that love with love did fight, 215
 To leave the master loveless, or kill the gallant knight:
 To put in practice either, alas, it was a spite
 Unto the silly damsel!

But one must be refused; more mickle was the pain
 That nothing could be used to turn them both to gain, 220
 For of the two the trusty knight was wounded with disdain:
 Alas, she could not help it!
 Thus art with arms contending was victor of
 the day,
 Which by a gift of learning did bear the maid
 away.
 Then, lullaby, the learned man hath got the lady gay; 225
 For now my song is ended.

XVI

On a day, alack the day !
 Love, whose month was ever May,
 Spied a blossom passing fair,
 Playing in the wanton air. 230
 Through the velvet leaves the wind,
 All unseen, gan passage find ;
 That the lover, sick to death,
 Wish'd himself the heaven's breath.
 " Air," quoth he, " thy cheeks may blow ; 235
 Air, would I might triumph so !
 But, alas ! my hand hath sworn Ne'er to pluck thee from thy thorn ;
 Vow, alack ! for youth unmeet,
 Youth, so apt to pluck a sweet. 240
 Thou for whom Jove would swear
 Juno but an Ethiop were ;
 And deny himself for Jove,
 Turning mortal for thy love."

[XVII]

My flocks feed not, 245
 My ewes breed not,
 My rams speed not,
 All is amiss ;
 Love is dying.
 Faith 's defying, 250
 Heart 's renying,
 Causar of this.
 All my merry jigs are quite forgot,
 All my lady's love is lost, God wot.
 Where her faith was firmly fix'd in love, 255
 There a nay is plac'd without remove.
 One silly cross
 Wrought all my loss ;
 O frowning Fortune, cursed, fickle dame !
 For now I see 260
 Inconstancy
 More in women than in men remain.

In black mourn I,
 All fears scorn I,
 Love hath forlorn me, 265
 Living in thrall ;
 Heart is bleeding,
 All help needing,
 O cruel speeding,
 Fraughted with gall. 270
 My shepherd's pipe can sound no deal ;
 My wether's bell rings doleful knell ;
 My curtal dog, that wont to have play'd,
 Plays not at all, but seems afraid ;
 With sighs so deep 275
 Procures to weep,
 In howling wise, to see my doleful plight.
 How sighs resound
 Through heartless ground,
 Like a thousand vanquish'd men in bloody
 fight ! 280

Clear wells spring not,
 Sweet birds sing not,
 Green plants bring not
 Forth their dye ;
 Herds stand weeping, 285
 Flocks all sleeping,

Nymphs back peeping

Fearfully.
 All our pleasure known to us poor swains,
 All our merry meetings on the plains, 290
 All our evening sport from us is fled,
 All our love is lost, for Love is dead.
 Farawell, sweet lass,
 Thy like ne'er was
 For a sweet content, the cause of all my
 moan. 295
 Poor Corydon
 Must live alone ;
 Other help for him I see that there is none.

XVIII

Whenas thine eye hath chose the dame,
 And stall'd the deer that thou shouldst strike,
 Let reason rule things worthy blame, 301
 As well as fancy, partial like.
 Take counsel of some wiser head,
 Neither too young nor yet unweid.

And when thou com'st thy tale to tell,
 Smooth not thy tongue with filed talk,
 Lest she some subtle practice smell, —
 A cripple soon can find a halt ; —
 But plainly say thou lov'st her well,
 And set thy person forth to sell. 310

What though her frowning brows be bent,
 Her cloudy looks will calm ere night ;
 And then too late she will repent
 That thus dissembled her delight ;
 And twice desire, ere it be day, 315
 That which with scorn she put away.

What though she strive to try her strength,
 And ban and brawl, and say thee nay,
 Her feeble force will yield at length,
 When craft hath taught her thus to say : 320
 " Had women been so strong as men,
 In faith, you had not had it then."

And to her will frame all thy ways ;
 Spare not to spend, and chiefly there
 Where thy desert may merit praise, 325
 By ringing in thy lady's ear.
 The strongest castle, tower, and town,
 The golden bullet beats it down.

Serve always with assured trust,
 And in thy suit be humble true ;
 Unless thy lady prove unjust, 330
 Press never thou to choose a new.
 When time shall serve, be thou not slack
 To proffer, though she put thee back.

The wiles and guiles that women work,
 Dissembled with an outward show,
 The tricks and toys that in them lurk,
 The cock that treads them shall not know.
 Have you not heard it said full oft,
 A woman's nay doth stand for nought ? 340

Think women seek to strive with men
 To sin, and never for to saint :

Here is no heaven ; they holy then
 Begin, when age doth them attain.
 Were kisses all the joys in bed,
 One woman would another wed.

345

But, soft ! enough ; too much, I fear,
 Lest that my mistress hear my song ;
 She will not stick to wring my ear,
 To teach my tongue to be so long.
 Yet will she blush, here be it said,
 To hear her secrets so bewray'd.

350

XIX

Live with me, and be my love,
 And we will all the pleasures prove
 That hills and valleys, dales and fields,
 And all the craggy mountains yields.

355

There will we sit upon the rocks,
 And see the shepherds feed their flocks
 By shallow rivers, by whose falls
 Melodious birds sing madrigals.

360

There will I make thee a bed of roses,
 With a thousand fragrant posies ;
 A cap of flowers, and a kirtle
 Embroidered all with leaves of myrtle ;

365

A belt of straw and ivy buds,
 With coral clasps and amber studs ;
 And if these pleasures may thee move,
 Then live with me and be my love.

LOVE'S ANSWER

If that the world and love were young,
 And truth in every shepherd's tongue,
 These pretty pleasures might me move
 To live with thee and be thy love.

370

XX

As it fell upon a day
 In the merry month of May,
 Sitting in a pleasant shade
 Which a grove of myrtles made,
 Beasts did leap, and birds did sing,
 Trees did grow, and plants did spring ;
 Every thing did banish moan,
 Save the nightingale alone.

380

She, poor bird, as all forlorn,
 Lean'd her breast up-till a thorn,
 And there sung the doleful'st ditty,
 That to hear it was great pity.

" Fie, fie, fie," now would she cry ;

385

" Tereu, tereu ! " by and by ;

That to hear her so complain,
 Scarce I could from tears refrain ;

For her griefs, so lively shown,

Made me think upon mine own.

390

Ah, thought I, thou mourn'st in vain !

None takes pity on thy pain.

Senseless trees they cannot hear thee ;

Ruthless beasts, they will not cheer thee.

395

King Pandion he is dead ;

All thy friends are lapp'd in lead ;

All thy fellow birds do sing,

Careless of thy sorrowing.

[Even so, poor bird, like thee,

None alive will pity me.]

400

Whilst as fickle Fortune smil'd,

Thou and I were both beguil'd.

Every one that flatters thee

Is no friend in misery.

Words are easy, like the wind ;

405

Faithful friends are hard to find :

Every man will be thy friend

Whilst thou hast wherewith to spend .

But if store of crowns be scant,

No man will supply thy want.

410

If that one be prodigal,

Bountiful they will him call,

And with such-like flattering,

" Pity but he were a king ! "

If he be addict to vice,

415

Quickly him they will entice :

If to women he be bent,

They have at commandment :

But if Fortune once do frown,

Then farewell his great renown ;

420

They that fawn'd on him before

Use his company no more.

He that is thy friend indeed,

He will help thee in thy need :

If thou sorrow, he will weep ;

425

If thou wake, he cannot sleep ;

Thus of every grief in heart

He with thee doth bear a part.

These are certain signs to know

Faithful friend from flatt'ring foe.

THE PHŒNIX AND THE TURTLE

THIS poem, with Shakespeare's name attached, appeared in Robert Chester's Love's Martyr, or Rosalin's Complaint. Besides Chester's own work, the volume contained verses on the Phœnix and the Turtle attributed to Shakespeare, Marston, Chapman, Jonson, and "Ignoto." The ascription to Shakespeare is generally, though not universally, accepted, such scepticism as exists being usually based upon the absence among his acknowledged works of anything with precisely the same characteristics. The poem exhibits the influence of a number of literary conventions, such as the congress of birds, the metaphysical quibbling on unity in duality, Platonic affection, the debate between Love and Reason, and the emblematic signification of the Phœnix and the Turtle-dove as typifying Rarity and Constancy, or Beauty and Truth. There is no difficulty in conceiving Shakespeare as joining with a group of his fellows to exercise his ingenuity on such themes. No valid evidence exists either for or against the poem's having an historical or personal reference.

LET the bird of loudest lay,
On the sole Arabian tree,
Herald sad and trumpet be,
To whose sound chaste wings obey.

But thou shrieking harbinger,
Foul precurrer of the fiend,
Augur of the fever's end,
To this troop come thou not near!

From this session interdict
Every fowl of tyrant wing,
Save the eagle, feath' red king;
Keep the obsequy so strict.

Let the priest in surplice white,
That defunctive music can,
Be the death-divining swan,
Least the requiem lack his right.

And thou treble-dated crow,
That thy sable gender mak'st
With the breath thou giv'st and tak'st,
'Mongst our mourners shalt thou go.

Here the anthem doth commence:
Love and Constancy is dead;
Phœnix and the turtle fled
In a mutual flame from hence.

So they lov'd, as love in twain
Had the essence but in one;
Two distincts, division none:
Number there in love was slain.

Hearts remote, yet not asunder;
Distance, and no space was seen
'Twixt this turtle and his queen:
But in them, it were a wonder.

So between them love did shine,
That the turtle saw his right
Flaming in the phœnix' sight;
Either was the other's mine.

Property was thus appalled,
That the self was not the same;
Single nature's double name
Neither two nor one was called.

Reason, in itself confounded,
Saw division grow together,
To themselves yet either neither,
Simple were so well compounded,

That it cried, "How true a twain
Seemeth this concordant one!
Love hath reason, Reason none,
If what parts can so remain."

Whereupon it made this threne
To the phœnix and the dove,
Co-supremes and stars of love,
As chorus to their tragic scene.

THRENOS

Beauty, Truth, and Rarity,
Grace in all simplicity,
Here enclos'd, in cinders lie.

Death is now the phœnix' nest;
And the turtle's loyal breast
To eternity doth rest;

Leaving no posterity:
'T was not their infirmity,
It was married chastity.

Truth may seem, but cannot be;
Beauty brag, but 't is not she;
Truth and Beauty buried be.

To this urn let those repair
That are either true or fair;
For these dead birds sigh a prayer.
